The larger part of the surface of the country consists of short, irregular ranges, whose summits vary from 1,600 to 11,740 feet in altitude. The most westerly of these ranges is the Sierra de Chiriqui entering Panama from Costa Rica. It contains near the western boundary of Panama the volcances Chiriqui of 11,265 feet elevation; Pico Blanco, 11,740 feet; and Rovalo, 7,020 feet, and then trends eastwardly nearer the Atlantic than the Pacific for some distance. It merges into the Sierra de Veragua, which is nearer the Pacific coast and contains three high peaks ranging from 4,600 to 9,275 feet in altitude. The mountain system of the peninsula containing the province of Veraguas is separated from the Sierra de Veragua by low valleys and grass-covered hills of 500 feet elevation. The system culminates in the southwest in bold headlands of 3,000 feet elevation.

East of Sierra de Veragua is Sierra de Panama, the lowest country of the Isthums, powhere of more than 100 feet elevation.

East of Sierra de Veragua is Sierra de Panama, the lowest country of the Isthmus, nowhere of more than 1,600 feet elevation, and containing the Culebra Pass, in the Canal Zone, of 290 feet elevation. It is a rolling, irregular country, with the watershed very near the Pacific coast. The mountain system east of the Canal Zone consists of higher, irregular ranges, which east of the Chepo River resolve themselves into

The south coast from David to Panama is 292 miles long. It consists of sloping plain and sea flat, with mountain spurs from the Cordillera at Tole and La Mesa, and an approach of the Cordillera itself to the Pacific near Capira. Timber for railroad use is abundant. From David to Rio Chorca it is nearly all prairie, passing through forests only at stream crossings, but the prairies themselves are lakes of grass bordered by irregular shores of forest. Between Chorcas and Boca del Monte the trall held to the crest of a ridge in a close wilderness, with an undergrowth of palms and platanitos, which issued at the latter point onto ridge prairies, which extended thence in widening and declining expanses to a level plain at San Lorenzo. The country is the same to Capira Mountain, where heavy timber reappears, and east of that the same country to Panama. The plains are diversified by islands and capes of low forest on Chame Plains near Panama.

The part of the Isthmus known as "Darien" is an unexplored wilderness and but little known. The whole is covered with a vast primeval growth from its swamps to the top of its highest peaks. This thick forest, which covers the whole surface of the country except a few Indian plantations near the coast, is abundantly tangled with vines, and is of such rapid growth that it easily holds in check the feeble efforts of the Indians at cultivation. The higher parts of the ridge are hard to reach on account of the rugged nature of the ravines and the labor of cutting trails. It is necessary to camp near the summit. The valley of the Carti River is reached in 7 miles from the Mercalaqua River by a broken line, following the most favorable ridges to facilitate progress and to meet the requirements of a simple connecting line. These ridges are composed of rocky spurs reaching a maximum elevation of 420 feet, thinly covered with the residual yellow clay, but affording foothold for the enshrouding tropical forest that is existent from ocean to ocean. For the first mile and a half the low, and Indians, in some localities, at least, are unconquered savages and hostile. With such obstacles to overcome it would seem, on the whole, that the interior of the Isthmus presents difficulties almost, if not quite, insuperable to extensive and continuous exploration or passage along its length.

Isthmus is given by the following description by M. Wagner, in Petermann's Mittheilungen, of the forest cover along the Panama Railroad as one passes from the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean.

At present the primeval forest begins quite a distance back from the railroad on both sides, owing to the clearing effected by the canal work. The area cleared there is now grown up to low, scrubby woods. On the ocean edge of Manzanillo Island and Limon Bay appears the failroad on both sides of Manzanillo Island and Limon Bay appears the famingroves (Rhizophoras and Avicenaes), the calabash or gourd bush (Crescentia cucurbitina L), the manzanillo tree (Hippmane manchella L.), buttonwood (Coccarpus erectus L.), and white mangrove (Chapuncularia racemosa).

These trees grow in the sait water, and by various appliances, such as branches which take root and seeds which sprout before leaving the marshy soil and even to extend the coast line continually. On higher ground, on both the island and mainland, the coccanut palm occurs, but, like the mangroves, is not so plentiful at the Atlantic as at the Pacific end of the railroad. This growth is continued inland until Monkey Hill is reached.

ence of greater light favors on the bluffs a most luxuriant growth of shrubby vegetation. From Obispo Valley to Paraiso, at an aittude of 137 feet, the forest flora assumes more and more the character which distinguishes the southern Isthmian flora from the northern. This consists of a decrease of the number of genera and species, of shade-loving plants, and evergeen shrubs, and in the increase of light-loving plants and of trees and shrubs which are deciduous. The influence of lower rainfall and greater length of the dry season become constantly more apparent. Plants decreasing in numbers are palms, tree ferns, Canacca, bannans, Aroids; increasing are Leguminosea. Malvacea, Dilleniacea, Malpiphiacea, Verbenacea, Bütheriacea. In the forests the following families are still prominent; Euphorbiacea, Sterouliacea, Melastomacea, Rubiacea, Tiliacea.

At Pedro Miguel, 41 miles from Colon, altitude S8 feet, appears first the tropical flora of the southern zone of the Isthmus. The effect of the dry climate on the forest and chaparral flora is very noticeable. Many forest and shade-loving plants of the lower story of the northern (Atlantic) zone disappear entirely, while characteristic species of the shrubby forest of the savanna, light-loving plants, appear in continually greater numbers.

At Rio Grande station, 43 miles from Colon, at an altitude of 17 feet, the flora assumes the definite character of the savanna zone, which is characteristic of the coast plains of the southern zone, between the forest zone of the interior and the sandhills along the coast, grassy plains with island like groups of trees and shrubs which belong to the tropical genera, which love long-enduring heat and strong light. Only near rivers does the tropical virgin forest retain its luxuriance and splendor, and there many species that belong to the northern zone have wandered down. In the prevailing dry type of the savanna islands the following trees are characteristic: Palo quadrado (Cornutia pyramidate L.). Curactia (Curactella americana), Na

LIST OF TIMBER TREES OF PANAMA.

Achras sapota L. (Nispero, Sapodilla).—A large tree 50 feet high; the wood is rather brittle and requires caution in felling; the wood resembles that of the cherry of the north, and is about the same color, weight, and hardness. It is very straight grained, not easy to work, not especially durable in out-of-door works, is not attacked by insects, and is esteemed for its resistance to transverse strain. It is a very fine timber and is extensively used for building and boarding. There are several varieties, of which Nispero real and Nispero de Montana are most esteemed. At San Lorenzo Castle, near Chagres, and among old works at Porto Bello there are great quantities which have endured for fifty years and over. It grows wild in most of the forests of the country, and is plentiful on Almirante Bay. It is also cultivated for fruit.

Alcornoque or cork tree.—A very large tree, which will give large beams and wears well.

Alfahillo.—Very durable and available for inlaid work.

Malpighia glabra L. (?) (Čerezo).—Excellent for polished work and building.

Mal-vicino.—Named from the extreme hardness of the wood and its great size. The wood is yellow in color and is durable. It is abundant and is much used in building, in spite of great expense of cutting.

Mangle caballero or cavalero.—Considered as good as nispero. It generally grows at the water's edge, is very abundant, and will give pieces from 35 to 40 feet long and 1 foot square.

Manicaria saccifera Gaertn. (Sack palm).—A tree from 15 to 20 feet high with a crooked trunk and a spathe used for a bag. It grows in Panama, south shores of Darlen, and as far as the Amazon.

Maria Guttifera.—A good timber used for masts.

Miconia argyrophylla D. C.—Used for building.

Miconia prasina D. C.—Used for building. It is common all over the country.

Miconia prasina D. C.—Used for building. It is considered country.

Musa sapientum L. (Guiner, banana).—Cultivated on a large scale. Narangito.—A fine, strong timber, fit for the wheelwright.

Nazareno.—A beautiful bluish fancy wood, which yields purple dye. Ochroma lagopus Sw. (Balsa, corkwood).—Used for corks and rafts at the time of the discovery of America and at the present day. It is found on the coasts of South America and the West Indies, and is common in most of the forests of Panama. The down from the seeds is used for stuffing. Another similar wood is Bonga, unknown botanically.

Oncoba laurino Presl. (Carbonero).—The wood is hard and is used in building. It is common in Veraguas, in forests, and along the Chagres

Oreodoxa regia Humb. & Kth. (Maquenqui, Palma real, royal palm).—
Common in Panama about Cruces, Gargona, and San Juan.

Ormosia Panamensis, Benth. (Peronil).—A tree 50 feet high with durable wood, which is used for building. The leaves are 1 foot long. It is reported from the village of Remedios, Veraguas.

Pachira Barrigon Seem. (Barrigon).—A tree 40 feet high, used for carpentry. It is common in Panama and Veraguas.

Parmentiera cereifeia Seem. (Palo de velas or Candletree).—Fruits cylindrical, yellow. They are used for cattle fodder. The tree is 20 feet high. It is confined to the valley of the Chagres, where it forms entire forests.

Phytelephas macrocarpa Ruiz. & Pav. (Marfil vegetal, Anta, vegetable ivory).—Found on the banks of rivers of southern Darien, where it forms extensive groves by itself. It is confined to South America, between 80° and 90° north latitude, and 70° and 79° west longitude.

Pithecolobium glomeratum, Benth. or var. spicatum Seem. (Guarito cansaboea).—A tree with valuable wood, found on the banks of all the rivers of the Isthmus.

Platumiscium solvetechnum Benth. (Outra, or a kind of Cocoballo).—

Platymiscium polystachyum Benth. (Quira, or a kind of Cocobollo).—
A fine tree with beautiful hard wood, streaked black and red. The wood is hard, heavy, difficult to work, resists friction, and is much used. It grows at David, Province of Veraguas, and in Trinidad and Santa-Quercus seemanni Liebm.—Grows on the volcano of Chiriqui, in Veraguas.

"In the mountains of western Veraguas, the oaks, like most tropical ones, are scarcely higher than 30 feet, with smooth branches." Quercus vearseeviczii, Liebm.—Found in Guatemala, Costa Rica, and the volcano of Chiriqui, Veraguas.

Rhizophora Mangle L. (Mangle salado, mangle colorado).—Used for railroad ties, boat building, hogsheads, etc. The wood is very durable in water, and yields a tanning substance. It is very common on seashores, with Avicennias and Lacuncularias.

Simaba cedron Planch. (Cedron).—A tree 15 feet high, with a pollarded appearance. All parts, and especially the seed, produce cedron, an antidote for snake bite, which is of commercial importance. It grows on outskirts of forests, banks of rivers, and the seashore in Darlen, Panama, and Veraguas.

Sloanea quadrivalis Seem. (Terciopelo).—A forest tree, 60 feet high. It is useful as timber and in carpentry. It grows in the southern parts of Veraguas.

Socrates exorrhiza H. Wendl. (Zanora palm).—The spiney aerial roots are used as graters. It is found in the woods of Panama Province and Darien territory.

Spondias lutea L. (Jobo or Hobo).—A colossal tree, with durable wood. It is cultivated for fruit and naturalized in some parts of the country.

Spondias, sp. (Hobo de cerco).—Used in carpentry.

Spondias, sp. (Hobo de cerco).—Is spanish elm (Caparo).—A tree from 3 to 4 feet in diameter and from 50 to 60 fe excellent timber. It is found on the island of Taboga and in woods near Panama.

Svictenia mahagoni Linn. (Caoba, or mahogany).—The wood is black, red, or veined. It is common in high woods and is one of the two woods at present exported in large quantities from Panama. It is shipped from the Gulf of San Miquel.

Tabebuia guayacan Hemsl. (Guayacan, lignum-vitæ).—One of the two most durable woods of Panama, the other being T. pentaphylla. It is highly esteemed for hard, durable timbers exposed to weather. In the ruins of the cathedral of old Panama beams exposed to the weather since 1677 are still sound. The figures of the Apostles on the front of Panama Cathedral are of lignum-vitæ and are from 90 to 95 years old. It grows in Panama Province and is common about Cruces and Gorgona.

Tabebuia Pentaphylla Hemsl. (Roble).—A most durable timber, used for ship timbers. Nata, Province of Panama.

Thrinax argentea Lodd. (Palma de escoba, Fan palm).—The leaves are used for brooms. It forms an underwood in forests.

Torno.—A beautiful wood, used in cabinetmaking.

Totuna.—A fine, strong wood, fit for use by the wheelwright. It is white and resembles hickory. Mortices made in it never split. The tree is small and of irregular growth.

Xanthoxylum spinosum Sw. (?) (Acabu).—The wood is durable and is used for building.

Xanthoxylum, sp. (Amarillo or Espino amarillo).—A tree from 45 to 50 feet high, with a diameter of from 15 to 20 inches. It is not very abundant. The wood is yellowish, straight grained, easy to work, of light weight, and not liable to decay nor insect attack. It is good for constructions in water and for lumber. There are seven kinds or amarillo, all good timber. Sp. gr., 0.556.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS].

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, it is extremely regrettable that any Member of this House should feel called upon to rise in his place and slander the ruler of a friendly republic and defame the administration of his own country, and the administration that will follow the present one.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I object to the word "slander," as used by the gentle-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has passed on that motion. The gentleman from Minnesota will proceed in order.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, in the short time allotted to me, I only desire to call the attention of this committee to the facts set forth in the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois, so far as this Government and its affairs are concerned. It is no business of ours what any other government shall do with the persons or with the property under its dominion, providing it does not affect our rights or our interests It is our business to look after our own affairs, our own citizens, and our own administration, and it is no concern of this Congress to discuss the forestry policy of the Republic of Panama, even though we may regret and disapprove it. First of all, I wish to state that there is no foundation in fact that there was any interference by Secretary Taft or any other of our officials with the national elections at Panama last year, any more than the keeping of order there, as was provided by the treaty between the United States and Panama. Section 7 of that treaty provides:

The same right and authority are granted to the United States for the maintenance of public order in the cities of Panama and Colon and the territories and harbors adjacent thereto, in case the Republic of Panama should not, in the judgment of the United States, be able to maintain such order.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] was mistaken in the statement that there was no political party behind the candidacy of Obaldia. I know not the facts only as I remember to have read them from the newspapers last spring, and I am sure that the files of the newspapers of New York and of Washington can be found in the Library to substantiate my statement, and as I heard them upon the recent trip to Panama of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of this House.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman—
Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I can not allow any interruption; I have only ten minutes. The facts are stated as I recall them now, without any opportunity to refresh my memory, as follows: There were two parties in Panama, the Liberals and the Conservatives. The Conservatives, rich and powerful, were intrenched in power and anxious to remain in charge of the Government. The Liberals were anxious to secure power there, as in all other governments. The Liberals were in the majority among the people of the Republic of Panama and they belonged to the uncultured and poorer classes.

The Conservatives, in order to intrench themselves under Doctor Amador and Arias, were preparing to exclude the Liberals from registering, as provided by the Panamanian law, and from par-ticipating in the elections. It is evident this would insure the triumph of the minority party in the election of Mr. Arias. For that reason the Liberal party and other citizens who desired peace and order in the Republic formally asked that the United States interfere in order to prevent bloodshed, that riot and revolution should not be allowed, and that all parties should have fair elections. The matter was considered by the administration, which evidently foresaw and knew that there would be bloodshed if a considerable party be excluded from the elections and that a minority be allowed to triumph by means of force, fraud, and corruption; and any condition by which there would be unfair elections, fraud at the registration and elections, bloodshed at the polls and elsewhere would almost mean possible intervention and possible subversion of the Government of Panama, and that would mean inevitably another distant tropical province for us to govern with all of its attendant evils. In order to insure fair elections, just exactly as was done so recently in Cuba by Governor Magoon and Secretary Taft, there were some marines sent into Panama to comply with the provisions of the treaty. They took no part in the elec-They interfered in behalf of nobody and interfered only with fraud and corruption. Nobody pretended they did anything else.

Nobody charged or dared to charge in Panama when we were there, less than three weeks ago, that our Government in any way violated either our treaty rights or rules of decency and fair play in its handling of our troops on Panama's soil. Arias knew that his party was in the minority, and because he knew it and that he and his party had no chance to prevail where fair elections were guaranteed, where the people were allowed to register and vote as they pleased, he withdrew; and there was no fraud, no interference by our marines, and no influence from them at the polls, so graphically described by the gentleman from Illinois. Now, that is the sole reason of the intervention of Mr. Taft and the administration in Panama—in order to have fair elections and assure the continuance of the Republic of Panama-and that was exactly what was accomplished, to the satisfaction of the majority of the people of that Republic; and we then withdrew at once, to the credit of our own Government.

Another statement that the gentleman makes was that the spoil of the excavation from the locks at Sosa would be used to fill the water front at Panama. Mr. Chairman, there will be no locks at Sosa at all. The gentleman does not know what he is talking about. That plan of locks at Sosa was abandoned nearly a year ago, and the gentleman does not know it.

I want to tell him some of the facts that he evidently cares not to know or has overlooked. As a matter of fact, the material which will be taken out of the locks back of Sosa at Miraflores will be used to fill a huge breakwater extending from a point on the mainland out to the island of Naos belonging to the Canal Zone. Nearly 2 miles of breakwater must be constructed that will protect the harbor of La Boca and the Pacific entrance to the canal. Neither report nor engineers even hinted that any of the surplus dirt or rock would be used in Panama at all, and if anybody hinted it to the engineers in charge down there there would be trouble. That breakwater will take a vast amount of material, because some of the water is deep, so that nearly all that can be used reasonably, from the locks at Miraflores and back to Pedro Miguel, can be used on our own property upon the Pacific, and that is where the material will The long dock that is now used is the old Panama steamship dock acquired with the steamship company, and is not newly constructed, as the gentleman alleges. Now, just a word more about the Culebra Cut.

Anybody who has been there can see that that cut is being lowered at the rate of nearly 2,000,000 yards a month—about 1,600,000 yards in December, I think. It is the busiest place of its kind in the world. They are excavating there, just exactly as the President of the United States says they were, and are doing this truly wonderful work he described, and my own recollection is about 1,600,000 yards a month is being eaten out of the heart of that great mountain. The work has so progressed that in four years that great bugbear of the canal will be ready for the water. It will not be the Culebra Cut which will delay the completion of the work. The skill and energy and effectiveness of the work there is marvelous to those who witness it.

Mr. RAINEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota.. I decline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota declines to yield.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Just a word about the ships of which the gentleman spoke. I do not know whether it was a good bargain or not; I am not pretending to argue as to that; but what I do know is this: That the main delay in constructing that canal will be the construction of the great locks at Gatun and Pedro Miguel and Miraflores, which will require about four and a half million barrels of cement and about 300,000 barrels more for other construction; nearly 5,000,000 barrels of cement in all must be taken to the Canal Zone in about four years-upward of a hundred thousand a month-in order to complete the canal on time by 1915. The only way to get it there regularly must be by steamers; sail vessels can not be depended upon. In order to construct these locks, they must lay nearly 2,000 yards a day. It will require 100,000 barrels a month to do that work. It was deemed best that steamers should be purchased which could get that cement there surely and safely and not trust anyone else, so it could be laid as it should be needed. It is economy of time to do it. Before we get through it may be economy of money also. The two steamers that were purchased will do the main part of that work, and that is the main reason for which they were purchased. There is another reason. The bill provides that in case the Panama Canal Company does not use them, or when it shall cease to use them, they shall be turned over to the navy, and Heaven knows the navy needs just about that kind of steamers.

Now, there is another thing that may occur and make these steamers valuable. It is possible always since the traffic connection was terminated several years ago between the Panama Railroad Company and the Pacific Mail Company that this Government may at any time be obliged to use its steamers upon the Pacific to protect its commercial interests and in order to get supplies cheaper and better from the Pacific coast. It may sometimes be that the connection between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts may need to be improved, that it may be necessary for the Government to protect its own interests on the Pacific and the interests of the people of this country by using these steamers for freight and passenger business on the Pacific. always a club to keep the transcontinental railroad lines from exacting unjust charges from our people, because we always have a chance for protecting the interests of our own property and our own people. It is always possible that these steamers may be used for those very purposes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have not had an opportunity to examine the various facts alleged by the gentleman from Illinois to be facts as the basis for his speech. It is only from my recollection that I have briefly covered the few salient points affecting the greatest enterprise of this Government and, indeed, of any in the world. Some of us have had recently a good opportunity to see and know, and we do know that no work in the world is being prosecuted as efficiently, as honestly, and as economically as the great work of excavating the Panama Canal. [Applause.] It is the best adminstrative body of most loyal, enthusiastic, and efficient workers in the world. It is being prosecuted without graft, without thought of self-interest by the men who are doing that great work. They are dedicating themselves to the honor, to the glory of their country, and they are doing it in spite of the detraction at home in the newspapers, by public men, and by those who have other ends to serve. [Loud applause.] I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. Mr. Chairman, before entering on the subject upon which I wish to talk I desire to say a few words about the remarks made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY]. I do not in the least approve of the slighting remarks that have been made about the President of the United States. It seems to me to be rather fashionable nowadays to talk disparagingly of the head of our great country. I know that he is not infallible, no one is, but I believe and I am convinced that in all he did and all he uttered he meant to do what was right or what he though was right. He has his faults the same as anyone else, but I say to you those faults are far overshadowed by his good qualities. [Applause.] I believe to-day that the gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House would be most happy to claim Theodore Roosevelt as a Democratic President. When he leaves the White House I know that he will be accompanied by the good wishes of the people, and I know that he will be always recorded in history as one of the best Presidents that this country has ever had.

He will be written in history as an American citizen of great courage, exceptional independence, and unquestioned fearlessness—a man who saw his duty clearly and was unwavering in his performance of it. [Great applause.]

Mr. Chairman, while considering the post-office appropriation bill, I think it is most opportune to speak of something that is directly connected with it, namely, the merchant marine. [Applause.] I have, after careful study, thought up a plan that will build up our merchant marine and eventually give us American ships in which to carry our mails to foreign countries.

In 1853 the New York Herald, in an editorial, said:

It must be a matter of sincere satisfaction to know that in sailing and steam vessels we have surpassed the whole world.

James Buchanan, when President of the United States, said, in a speech delivered by him:

Our commerce now covers every ocean; our mercantile marine is the largest in the world.

Alexander H. Stephens referred to our merchant-marine service as follows:

We have now an amount of shipping, not only coastwise but to foreign countries, which puts us in the front rank of the nations of the world. Mr. GRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KÜSTERMANN] yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. If it does not take too much of my

Mr. GRIGGS. Is the gentleman defending the President or the merchant marine?

Mr. KÜSTERMANN. Both.

In 1859, 66.9 per cent of all foreign commerce of the United States was carried in American vessels. In 1865 this was reduced to 27.5 per cent; in 1901, to 10.3 per cent, and at the present time less than 8 per cent of the goods exported from this country are carried in ships sailing under the American flag.

Our merchant marine has almost disappeared from the oceans. A number of our people, many of whom no doubt are well-meaning and honest, think that the best way to restore our merchant marine to its former rank among the nations is by subsidies, either by direct gift or by paying large sums for carrying the United States mail to foreign countries, which sums are entirely out of proportion to the service rendered.

It is true that some foreign countries are paying subsidies. Germany, for instance, subsidizes some steamship lines that run to the Far East, giving $1,400,000 to the mail steamers running to East Asia and Australia and $435,000 for steamships running to East and South Africa. Not one cent of subsidy is paid to the Hamburg and Bremen lines plying between Germany and the United States, and only a fair amount is given for carrying the mail.

As evidence that the subsidies paid by the German Government are not excessive and do not particularly add to the success of the steamship lines is seen from the fact that the North German Lloyd, which, on account of its line to the Far East, enjoys the greatest subsidy, declared in 1907 to their stockholders a dividend of only 4 per cent, while the Hamburg-America Line, which practically receives no subsidies, paid 7 per cent during the same period.

Great Britain pays about $5,000,000 per year for carrying its mail to foreign countries. Some of these lines receive sums somewhat above the regular price paid for carrying the mail, on account of their being classed as auxiliaries to the navy.

Not one dollar extra, however, is paid to the British ships to and from South America. Therefore American ships wishing to engage in commerce with the South American countries are at no disadvantage, for there are no British ships enjoying subsidies to compete with.

The great ocean carrier of freight to-day is the British tramp steamship, on the lookout for cargoes wherever obtainable, and no subsidies are paid to it.

The bulk of the carrying or freight trade goes to these unsubsidized ships that pay no more attention to international trade competition and show no more preference in taking and delivering goods than our express companies do between competing business houses.

A committee appointed by the British Parliament in 1902 for the purpose of looking into the value of subsidies, came to the conclusion that a general system of subsidies other than an expenditure of a specified sum for the cost of the actual services rendered is inexpedient and costly; further, that subsidies were a minor factor in the development of the British shipping trade, and that it was due mainly to commercial industry and skill.

The only two European countries that pay a subvention to their mail ships far in excess of a fair remuneration for services rendered are France and Italy.

The French merchant marine, in spite of its subsidies, is losing ground every year, and the subsidized Italian lines find great difficulty in even holding their own on the Mediterranean, their own ground, in competition with the nonsubsidized German ships.

While the United States does not admit paying any subsidies outright, the extraordinary high prices paid to American companies for carrying the mail show that we to-day subsidize in effect, if not in name, thereby keeping nearly even with foreign countries in this respect, but simply refraining from calling this kind of subvention by its right name.

To illustrate: The United States pays to the American Atlantic Line $1.60 per pound for carrying mail matter, while the German lines receive but 44 cents per pound from the United States Government for carrying mail practically the same distance and on equally fast steamers.

same distance and on equally fast steamers.

This means a subsidy of $1.16 per pound, now paid the American lines.

In a report submitted by the Commissioner of Navigation a few years ago it is shown that with the price paid by the United States Government for carrying mails, the Cunard and White Star lines, if their ships were built and registered in the United States would receive $1,359,108 per year for the same service for which they are now receiving $1,041,000 from the British Government, a difference of $318,108, which sum would aid materially in equalizing the wages paid to British and American crews.

In speaking of crews, it may be of interest to know just what proportion of the crew of an American mail steamer must be citizens of the United States. I cite the law for the benefit of those who are under the erroneous impression that the majority of the crew of an American mail ship must be Americans. The law reads:

The vessels employed in the mail service under the provisions of this act shall be American-built steamships, owned and officered by American citizens, in conformity with the existing laws, or so owned and officered and registered according to law, and upon each departure from the United States the following proportion of the crew shall be citizens of the United States, to wit: During the first two years of such contract for carrying the mails, one-fourth thereof; during the next three succeeding years, one-third thereof; and during the remaining time of the continuance of such contract, at least one-half thereof.

In spite of the liberal sums paid to the few American mail steamers still remaining, it has not helped to build up our merchant marine, and even if more subsidies were paid, as is so frequently suggested, it would not materially increase the number of our ships. It would not lessen our freight rates, because competition regulates this matter; nor would it bring any direct advantage to the people of the United States.

The advocates of subsidies are daily appealing to the pride and patriotism of the American people and insisting that the greatness and glory of our country will be furthered thereby; but I maintain that the only satisfaction we, the American people, will get will be the glory of paying a few million dollars a year to some special interests, sums that these interests can not legitimately and honestly earn.

Of course every citizen of the United States desires the American merchant marine to again play an important part in the world's commerce.

Everyone would rejoice to see the number of ships sailing the oceans under the American flag greatly increased, but only in case this can be brought about in a legitimate way.

It is universally conceded to be a great detriment, sentimentally and practically, to have our merchant marine in foreign trade decreased almost to a vanishing point; to see our battle ships coaled by foreign steamers; to have our coaling stations filled with American coal by British, Norwegian, German, and other foreign ships.

Our merchant marine should be an adjunct to our navy in case of need, but under the present conditions it can not be. Now, the question arises, how can the merchant marine be

Now, the question arises, how can the merchant marine be built up without resorting to artificial means; how can the American flag be restored to the seas without paying the shipowners large sums for thus displaying their patriotism?

It can be said right here that we are all willing that fair and reasonable compensation shall be paid to all ships performing a service for the Government, whether it be for carrying mail or coal.

The remedy I suggest to offset this subsidy evil is not expensive, nor will it do harm to any American industry. It is simply, in effect, to try similar means that resulted so successfully in building up the merchant marine of Great Britain and Germany.

Let us change our navigation laws so that ships sailing between this and foreign countries are entitled to American registry, even though not built in this country nor entirely owned by American citizens.

Fifty years ago the British navigation laws were as restricted as those of the United States to-day. A few years later the laws were repealed and freedom was given her citizens to buy ships anywhere and have them registered under the British flag. From that time dates the restoration of the British flag to the command of the seas.

Some thirty years ago Germany followed the example of Great Britain and gave her citizens the right to buy ships anywhere in the world and place them under the German flag, and this continues to be Germany's policy to-day.

this continues to be Germany's policy to-day.

It has resulted in Germany having the second largest merchant marine in the world.

As Germany became a ship-owning nation, her shipyards commenced to grow and to-day Germany is the greatest competitor of Great Britain in the shipbuilding industry.

Seagoing vessels have not been built so cheaply in the United States as in European countries, for labor and capital in this country have found more profitable employment in other lines.

It is said that large vessels are being built at 30 to 50 per cent less in Europe than in the United States.

Our strict navigation laws affecting foreign-built vessels have not brought satisfactory results, and the building of oceangoing vessels in the United States has almost ceased in spite of these restrictions.

Would it, then, not be advisable to remove the barriers and let Americans buy their ships, to be employed in foreign trade, wherever they please?

In case a corporation wishes to establish a number of steamers under the American flag, allow such company to do so, even if part of the stock in such corporations is owned by foreign capitalists.

In the bill introduced by me for the purpose of removing the present shipping restrictions as relating to ships sailing between our country and foreign ports, I suggest that not to exceed 40 per cent of the stock be owned by others than citizens of the United States.

The British and German governments, in case of corporations entirely capitalized by foreigners, do not object to have these lines fly their flags. However, they do insist that the responsible officers of these companies shall reside in Great Britain or Germany, and that the office of the company be located there.

As long as we allow foreigners to hold large amounts of stock in our railroad companies, in some cases the majority of stock, there should be no objection on our part to have foreign capital help us build up our merchant marine.

With an American captain in command of the ship, with a good proportion of the crew Americans, and with the ownership wholly or nearly so in the hands of Americans, we should be satisfied to have an American flag hoisted over it.

Our patriotism will not suffer even though the ship was built in a foreign country or foreign capital is invested in it, as long as the American flag flies over it.

But our patriotism suffers, at least mine does, when I see by a report published by the Commissioner of Navigation a few years ago that Americans own 136 ocean-going ships, and on account of our restricted navigation laws they are forced to sail under British, German, Belgian, or other foreign flags.

Following is a list of the ships sailing under some foreign flag, but owned by citizens of the United States:

Pecuniary control of American-owned steam vessels with a tonnage of 672,000 tons, now under foreign flags, should cause us all to think hard.

It may not be generally known, but it is nevertheless a fact that the United States Government to-day owns 38 steamships of 102,100 tons, used as transports and colliers, which were built in foreign countries, and as such are not eligible to American registry without a special act of Congress.

Not only does the American-owned steam tonnage under foreign flags, which should be under the American flag but for our present navigation laws, greatly exceed in carrying capacity all the tonnage now under the American flag engaged in foreign trade, but it nearly equals the entire iron and steel tonnage of Norway, equals that of Spain, and exceeds that of Italy and Japan.

It is true American capital reaps the profit from these ships now under foreign flags, the same as though they were sailing under the American flag.

Another thing that should be borne in mind is the fact that the tax in Germany and Great Britain on ocean-going vessels is somewhat lower than is charged by most of our coast States, though New York, Alabama, and Washington raise no tax on American shipping engaged exclusively in foreign trade.

To help matters, every State in the Union would probably be willing to follow the example set by New York and the other States mentioned.

To have such a large number of American-owned vessels on the seas under the flag and protection of foreign nations certainly means a distinct loss in national prestige.

Just as our flag on war vessels is displayed abroad, presumably to impress other nations with our power, so the display of our flag on merchant vessels in foreign ports is desirable to strengthen our position as a commercial nation. [Applause.]
Whether or not "trade follows the flag," it is certain that the flag increases the business importance and respect for the trader as well as his nation.

There is little doubt that all matters being equal or nearly so, these American shipowners of foreign-built vessels would readily seek American registry and have their ships under the Stars and Stripes.

Now, the bill introduced by me (No. 24633) has this very purpose of bringing back these American-owned ships into our fold, thereby making a good showing on the seas.

If this bill is enacted into law American capitalists would not be obliged to beg of Congress to pass a special act permit-ting them to fly the American flag over some of the most beautiful ships that ever sailed the ocean, as was done in the case of the steamers New York and Philadelphia, both being built in England.

The company owning these ships had to pay dearly for their patriotism and for the privilege of hoisting the American flag.

The special act passed by Congress allowing American registry of these two ships also made it mandatory upon the company to have built in this country two other ships of equal size and capacity, the St. Paul and the St. Louis, at an expense of $5,100,000.

According to a statement made by the president of the company before the Senate committee, the cost of these two ships built in the United States was $1,100,000 more than the identical ships could have been procured for in England.

No wonder, then, that our American merchant marine is falling behind when such obstacles are placed in the path of our enterprising people and they are made to pay so dearly for the privilege of sailing under the American flag.

The plea that the American shipbuilding industry would suffer by allowing American registry of ships in the foreign trade and built or purchased in foreign countries is not justified, because there are no foreign-going vessels now built in American shipyards. On the other hand, our shipbuilders would be benefited by the repairs and alterations that would from time to time become necessary on these foreign-built ships.

The same enterprise that enabled us to compete in almost every other line would enable American workmen to so improve on present shipbuilding methods in this country, and so reduce the cost, that not many years would pass before American shipyards would build the greater number of our foreign-going ships.

There is certainly nothing to lose in granting Americans the privilege of buying foreign-built vessels to be used in foreign trade only, and give them American registry.

There is little doubt that a change in our present navigation laws would prove stimulating to the American merchant marine, and that in course of time it would completely restore the prestige of America on the seas.

The experiment is certainly worth trying, and if it has the same effect upon our merchant marine as a similar change in the navigation laws of Great Britain and Germany had upon the maritime conditions of those countries, the time will certainly come when we no longer have to rely upon foreign ships to coal our war vessels, or to carry our mail.

Foreign countries will again see what our flag looks like, and every American heart will rejoice over the greater number of ships on the seas displaying the Stars and Stripes. [Loud applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Hubbard of West Virginia having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 25405. An act to change and fix the time for holding the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern and middle districts of Tennessee;

H. R. 21129. An act to provide for refunding stamp taxes paid under the act of June 13, 1898, upon foreign bills of exchange drawn between July 1, 1898, and June 30, 1901, against the value of products or merchandise actually exported to foreign countries:

H. R. 4166. An act to relieve George W. Black and J. R. Wilson from a certain judgment in favor of the United States, and to relieve George W. Black, J. R. Wilson, and W. M. Newell of a certain judgment in favor of the United States; and

H. R. 19859. An act to provide for the payment of certain volunteers who rendered service to the Territory of Oregon in the Cayuse Indian war of 1847 and 1848.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21957) relating to affairs in the Territories.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 23464) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WAR-REN, Mr. HEMENWAY, and Mr. TELLER as the said conferees on the part of the Senate.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] to occupy some time.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD].

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, the bill now before the committee for its consideration carries the largest budget of expense that has ever been carried in a bill of this character. The increase in the appropriation as carried in this bill over the appropriation for the current year is a little over $11,000,000. Now, the question, to one who has not carefully investigated it, might naturally be raised as to why so large an increase in the postal expenditure. If you will carefully examine this bill, you will ascertain that nearly every expenditure in it has been provided by law or by previous bill in fixing compensation and salaries. This bill provides for more individuals as to salary than any other bill which may be presented providing for the expense of any part of the civil branch of the Government.

The salaries provided for postmasters are fixed by law. The maximum salaries provided for assistant postmasters are likewise fixed by law. The salaries for the clerks in the post-offices are determined by current law and also by the system of automatic promotions heretofore adopted. The same thing is true with reference to letter carriers in the cities. are fixed by current law, and the method of promotion has been fixed by statute previous to this Congress. The salaries of the rural letter carriers are fixed, as well as the salaries of the railway mail clerks. The latters' salaries are determined by current law. The most astounding thing that presents itself to our committee is, however, that notwithstanding the Post-Office Committee and the House, in connection with post-office matters, have been more liberal in increasing salaries than in connection with any other department of the Government, there is constantly a demand on the Post-Office Committee and the Members of the House for increase of sal-ary in the various branches of this great service. It is the policy of the Post-Office Committee at this time not to increase salaries.

There are but few increases in the current bill, because of existing conditions in the country. You are aware, of course, of the extraordinary deficit that is found at the present time in current revenue. If you will read the Treasury statement of to-day you will ascertain that there is a deficit already in the general expenses of the current year of over $77,000,000, and this will reach, perhaps, the sum of $135,000,000 before the 30th day of June next. There is also, according to the estimates, a necessary deficit in the fiscal year which will begin on the 1st day of July next, the period for which this appropriation provides. How much may be the deficit for next year no one at this time can tell, but it is reasonable to say that the deficit for the year 1910 will be more than $100,000,000possibly $150,000,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. In the Post-Office Department?
Mr. LLOYD. No; the general deficiency.
The deficit in 1907 on account of the post-office expenditures, that which was required to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, was a little over $6,000,000. The deficit for the year which ended on the 30th day of June last was $16,000,-000. It is estimated that the deficit for the current year, which will end on the 30th day of June, will be a little over $16,000,000, but the latest statement made by the post-office officials is to the effect that it will go far beyond $20,000,000.

So that there is not only an increased deficit in the General Treasury, but also one in the postal branch of the service; and because of that deficit we think it is wise-and I think the committee stands together on that proposition-that at this time there shall be no marked increase in the salaries of the various departments connected with the postal service.

Mr. GOEBEL. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him to ask him a question?

Mr. LLOYD. Certainly. Mr. GOEBEL. Does not he know that the largest patron of the post-office service is the Government itself, and that if a reasonable charge was made for that service there would not be a deficiency?

Mr. LLOYD. I think that is true.

Mr. GOEBEL. Therefore, is not this question of a deficiency entirely a myth and does not exist in fact?

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, in answer to that question, I will say that there is a sense in which it may be a myth; but as a business proposition, the fact is that the money comes out of the Treasury of the United States. If the Government was required to pay full postage on all the penalty envelopes which are sent out, and if Members of Congress were required to pay the full postage on matter now sent under their frank, then there would be no deficit.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LLOYD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. And for the same reason an express company would very greatly increase its revenue by charging itself on all its own packages and remittances.
Mr. LLOYD. Precisely so.

Mr. MANN. It seems perfectly ridiculous to talk about that.

Mr. LLOYD. But I am explaining the situation.
Mr. MANN. I understand; I agree with the gentleman.
Mr. LLOYD. The Third Assistant Postmaster-General in his report for the last fiscal year calls attention to this situation and gives an estimate of the postage required on second-class matter free in the county of publication if required to pay the usual second-class rate, the franked matter as if it were sealed and chargeable at the first-class rate, and the penalty, or departmental, mail at what would be the legal rate if full rates were paid. This table follows:

Class of matter.	Estimated weight.	Estimated postage.
Second-class matter	Pounds. 53,156,094 4,555,634 18,644,010	$531,560.94 3,987,546.44 16,362,131.95
Total	76,355,738	20,881,239.33

This table is not fair to the Congressman, in my opinion, because it charges all franked matter as first class and at a rate of 871 cents per pound, when the greater part of it, if postage were required, would belong to the other classes of mail; but the table explains the contention here and shows that if the various departments were required to pay for their own postal service there would be no deficit.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it fair to charge it when, as a matter of fact, the Government does its own work?

Mr. LLOYD. That is a question my good friend from Cincinnati would say "I am not quite sure about" and to which my friend from Illinois would say "yes." We all understand if the Government paid the same as anybody else for carrying the mail there would be no deficit.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will please not interrupt gentlemen without first addressing the Chair.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gen-

Mr. LLOYD. Yes, sir. Mr. MADDEN. The Government is charged with the amount for its own work to-day, and I will ask whether it should not be charged the amount that it would cost?

Mr. LLOYD. That is a very reasonable suggestion.
Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. LLOYD. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I take it the point the gentleman from Missouri is trying to make is that if the different departments had charged up to them the expense of carrying their mail which is now charged up to the Post-Office Department, then this deficit in the Post-Office Department itself would be wiped out.

Mr. LLOYD. Yes, sir; that is correct, but this point is injected into my remarks by queries.

Mr. PADGETT. But the expenditures of the other departments would be increased.

Mr. LLOYD. Yes, sir. Mr. GOEBEL. Now, then, is it fair to charge that up to a deficiency in the Post-Office Department?

Mr. LLOYD. Well, I would not want to say whether it is or not. It just depends upon how you view it. My purpose was simply to call attention to the facts as they exist. In this connection, as we have gone somewhat over the question of the franking privilege and the penalty envelope, I want to call attention to something that was a very great surprise to me and it may be equally so to you, when your attention has been called to it. Out in the country districts there is a great disposition to believe that the greater part of the mail that is transported from place to place bears the frank of Members of Congress. was a weighing taken on the 1st day of July, 1907, and ending on the 31st day of December of that year, which shows that the amount of franked matter is only thirty-seven one-hundredths of 1 per cent of the whole mail.

Mr. MANN. Under the congressional frank? Mr. LLOYD. Congressional franked matter. Thirty-seven one-hundredths of 1 per cent of the mail.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes, sir. Mr. HARDY. Does that include all the stuff that they send out—for instance, seed?

Mr. LLOYD. It includes everything a Congressman sends through the mail.

Mr. HARDY. Does it include what the departments send out at the request of a Member?

Mr. LLOYD. No; everything that bears the frank of a Congressman, and nearly everything you send out bears the frank of a Congressman. What the departments send out will be sent in a penalty envelope of the department.

Now, I also want to call attention to the fact that at that weighing it was shown that 3.88 of 1 per cent of the mail was carried in penalty envelopes.

That is a surprising fact also, that the proportion between that which is franked by Congressmen and that which is sent in the penalty envelopes of the departments should have so wide a divergence in amount-thirty-seven one hundredths of 1 per cent for the one and 3.88 per cent for the other.

Now, there is another fact to which I want to call your attention at this time. The mail was weighed in 1899 for a portion of the year, and, according to the estimate made, the amount of the year, and, according to the estimate made, the amount of mail carried in the United States for the full year was 1,566,000,000 pounds. At the weighing made eight years later, in 1907, the amount of mail carried was 2,172,000,000 pounds; and if this increase continues in the same ratio for the next two years as it continued for the eight years intervening between the weighings, the amount of mail carried in the year for which this bill provides will be 2,324,000,000 pounds.

And you will observe on careful examination of the two that in the ten-year period which clapsed between the weighing in 1899 and what would be the weight of the mail ten years later is an increase of 50 per cent in the weight of the mail. The increase in the weight of the mail actually between 1899 and 1907 was a fraction over 39 per cent.

It would be supposed that the cost of carrying the mail would decrease in proportion as the mail became larger in bulk, but if you will compare the weighings of the two periods and the developments of the service in the last ten years you will be astounded to know how much we are now paying for the additional mail. As a matter of fact, in 1899, at the time of the weighing before, it cost us 62 cents per pound for every pound of mail that was transported.

Mr. MANN. Do you mean the railway cost?

Mr. LLOYD. No, sir; I mean the total cost was 63 cents per pound. To-day it is costing this Government a fraction less than 10 cents per pound for carrying the mail, including every item of expense. The Postmaster-General in his report fixed the cost in 1907 at 83 cents, and there has been an increase since.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not think the gentleman means it costs that to carry it. It costs that to handle and carry it.

Mr. LLOYD. I think I answered the question in accordance with the answer of the chairman of the committee. I mean all the expenses of the Post-Office Department combined.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. On what articles? Mr. LLOYD. On everything that goes in the mails.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Including letters?

Mr. LLOYD. Including everything. In 1899 the amount of mail was 1,566,000,000 pounds. This year it will be 2,324,000,000 pounds. Now, the total expense in 1900 was $107,000,000. total expense to the Government on account of postal matters this year will be $234,000,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. To what is that astounding increase due? Mr. LLOYD. I am going to get at that. Notice the fact, and it needs explanation. The mail has increased in volume 50 per cent in ten years, while the expense of handling it and carrying it has increased 121 per cent.

Now, the answer given nearly always, as a reason for this extraordinary expense, is that it is because of the railway transportation charges. Is that true? Several years ago it seemed to be accepted on the floor of this House as a settled proposition that it cost 5 cents a pound to carry every pound of mail matter that was carried on railway trains. In 1899, at the time of the weighing, there were 1,347,000,000 pounds carried on railway trains, and it cost 23 cents per pound to carry that mail. It now costs 21 cents per pound to carry the mail. The fact is we are paying less per pound for carrying the mail by railroad than we paid ten years ago.

If you will examine the system of payments, you can well understand how this could be. Then, if you will remember what has happened in the last three or four years with reference to the reduction of railway mail pay and also with reference to the system of weighing, you will understand how this reduction has been made in the last ten years. The Postmaster-General, in his last report, in speaking of the cost of carrying the mail, said of the payment to the railroads:

Of this amount, approximately 21 cents per pound is paid to the railroad companies for transportation; a few mills must be added for car service, freight on empty mail bags, etc., which items increase the total cost of railway handling of second-class matter to approximately 21 cents per pound.

This expense has been slightly reduced since that time, so that the Postmaster-General fully bears out my statement. In 1900 the railroads were paid $37,480,000 to carry 1,347,000,000 pounds, while in 1910 it will cost $51,368,000 to transport a little over

If we paid the same amount per pound for carrying the mail at the present time that we paid ten years ago, this bill instead of carrying $234,000,000 would carry $77,000,000 less. the statement, $77,000,000 less than it now carries. Now, why is the difference? We are expending on account of rural service $37,000,000. This bill carries $37,300,000. That does not account for the $77,000,000. There is something of remuneration comes from the rural service. The estimate is usually made that it pays about 12 per cent of its cost. Another thing that occurs is that the rural service reduces expenditure on account of the star route. If you will make investigation you will ascertain that the expenses for star routes from 1900 to 1905 increased nearly 50 per cent, while since that time the expenses of the star routes have not increased appreciably. If there had been the same increase in the expenditure on account of star routes for the last five years as for the preceding five years, the expenditures on account of the star route would have been more than $3,000,000 greater than is carried in this bill.

I think that it may be safely said that $30,000,000 of this bill and $30,000,000 of the $77,000,000 increase comes from the rural service. That leaves $47,000,000 to be accounted for. Now, that does not come from the Railway Mail Service. Where does it come from? I have called your attention to the two avenues to which nearly all individuals will point you, either to the rural service or to the transportation charge of the railroad companies. One accounts in part, but the other does not in any particular.

The increased pay to the railroad companies just about corresponds to the increased weight of the mail. The increase in expenditure to postmasters corresponds with the increase in the weight of the mail. I never investigated this matter until within the last two weeks, to ascertain whence it came. I was surprised to find the condition. I do not know just how it is to be remedied. I do not know certainly that it is improper. it is one of the things that my friend from Indiana, the chairman of this committee, with others on the Postal Commission, will remedy, if it can be rightfully done, by recommending a business system, which will have the effect to avoid it.

Mr. Chairman, if there is the same per cent of increase in the expenditures in the Postal Department for the next eighteen years that there has been in the last ten years, the expenditure of this department alone will amount to $1,000,000,000. friend from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] a few minutes ago said that within ten years it would reach the sum of $400,000,000. can make the computation for yourselves. The increase in the last ten years has been 121 per cent. In order to be sure that I am right, make your own figures. One hundred and seven million dollars in 1900, $234,000,000 provided in this bill. That is 121 per cent increase. One hundred and twenty-one per cent increase in the next ten years makes $516,000,000. The same proportionate increase for eight years longer will make a little over $1,000,000,000 expenditure for 1928.

Now, where is the trouble? It is accounted for to a great extent in three items, railway mail clerks, post-office clerks, and city letter carriers. The increase in expenditures for this service has been over 120 per cent in the last ten years.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman mean in the number of employees or in the amount of salaries in the aggregate?

Mr. LLOYD. I mean both. I mean that we are expending more than 120 per cent more on account of these employees than we did in 1900.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The increase of salary accounts for some of it.

Mr. LLOYD.

Mr. SABATH. Does the gentleman mean that the salaries have increased or the number of letter carriers and the number. of clerks have increased?

Mr. LLOYD. I have just explained to these other gentlemen that there has been an increase in the salary and there has been an increase in the number of employees.

Mr. SABATH. What is the increase in salaries of clerks and letter carriers?

Mr. LLOYD. Between $100 and $150 each. I have not, nor can not obtain the exact figures, because of the changed form of the items of appropriation for the service.

Mr. SABATH. That would be about 15 per cent. Mr. LLOYD. Yes; something more than that. I would rather not be diverted at this time to the discussion of the question of further increase of salaries. I want to get at the fundamental question. What is the trouble in the Post-Office Department? Why this extraordinary expense? I know from private conversation that the gentleman from Illinois is interested in the increase of salaries of post-office employees.

Mr. SABATH. Yes; because it costs to-day 15 per cent more to live than it did then.

Mr. LLOYD. I do not want to go into the question whether any particular individual or individuals are getting too much or not. I am of the opinion that it is the men at the bottom in the United States Government who are not receiving enough salaries, and the disposition in legislation in connection with all salaries is to increase at the top and not to allow the fellow at the bottom to be increased. [Applause.] You will notice the cost for city letter carriers in 1900 was $13,700,000. The amount carried in this bill is $29,700,000.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I think it proper to suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that there is a clerical error in the computation of that item, which I will ask to have corrected when it is reached in the bill. Mr. LLOYD. It is only slight, however.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. LLOYD. It does not affect this.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I only wanted to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there is a mistake in the computation. Mr. LLOYD. It does not affect the first two figures, 29.

Mr. OVERSTREET. No; it does not.

Mr. LLOYD. You notice my figures, $13,700,000. The bill itself without any change carries $29,700,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. That is for city letter carriers?

LLOYD. Yes; an increase you can readily see of $16,000,000 ever what it was ten years ago. Now, let us take the city post-office employees. In 1900 there was expended $12,500,000, and for the same items in this bill there are carried $34,500,000, an increase of 176 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield to the gentleman for fifteen minutes.

Mr. LLOYD. I want to thank the chairman of the committee for this courtesy. I was remarking that the increased expenditure on account of post-office employees in ten years was 176 per cent, while the increase in business in the offices was 50 per cent. I have no complaint to make of anyone on account of this situation.

I am not charging any man anywhere with anything wrong in this connection, but I do say this, that there is something radically wrong in a system that would increase the expenses of a business so rapidly as that expense has increased. Do gentlemen realize that the increased weight of mails that is carried now beyond that of ten years ago is costing this Government 17 cents a pound? It was 62 cents a pound in 1900. The additional weight of mail now is costing 17 cents a pound to the Government to handle and transport.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Why do we pay nearly 300 per cent more for the additional weight now? The gentleman has stated that we were paying 64 cents for a certain portion of the mail and 17

That is the expenses that I have been calling Mr. LLOYD. attention to. One of the items of it is employees in the postoffice, and I have not said that there are too many employees.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. LLOYD. Yes.
Mr. HARDY. Is not a great deal of this additional expense owing to the fact that, whereas formerly people in cities went to the post-office, now all that mail is handled a great deal more in being distributed around to private residences, mail boxes all over the big and little cities, where they were not before, and have not the facilities and the convenience of the people in cities and the country been added to largely?

Mr. LLOYD. In answer to that question I will say this: Here is a surprising fact, that the increase in the expense of the letter carriers, who are the persons that carry this mail to the people, is 118 per cent, while the increase in the employees in the post-office is 176 per cent.

Mr. SPERRY. I would like to ask my friend a question. Will he vield?

Mr. LLOYD. With pleasure. Mr. SPERRY. The gentleman is speaking of the expense-This Government of ours is growing a the increased expenses. little, is it not? Does the gentleman know of a place anywhere in the history of the Post-Office Department where he has found that the Post-Office Department was established for the purpose of putting money into the Treasury? Rather, was it not to increase and help and assist business? [Applause.] That is what it was for.

Mr. LLOYD. In response to the statement of my good friend from Connecticut, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say I fully concur in the statement. There is not any disposition on my part to want to cripple the service anywhere, and I have not thus far asked that a single employee shall be reduced in salary or that a single one shall be cut off. I am not in position to do that, for when I started out I expressed the view that this committee had done the best it could in connection with this situation.

But I want to call attention to a fact right here. The chairman of this committee, one of the most faithful men I ever knew in connection with the duty imposed upon him, can not tell anyone to-day of his own knowledge whether it is necessary to increase the number of employees in any given branch of the postal service to the extent that is asked by the Post-Office Department. How does he know? He does the best he can to ascertain why it is; so does every member of the Post-Office Committee, and yet this bill, the most economical brought before this Congress in recent years, is a bill which provides for over 7,000 new employees.

Mr. GARRETT. What relation does the deficit bear? What is the percentage of deficit? What relation does it bear to the per cent of increase of appropriations expended?

Mr. LLOYD. Why, I made a statement about that a while ago. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I would rather not repeat it. I will tell the gentleman privately.

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I would like to ask the gentleman a nestion. You are giving, certainly to me, some exceedingly valuable information. You have figured out here an increase of $16,000,000, I believe, from 1900 to 1910, due to increase of expenditures. Am I correct in that? Now, is that $16,000,000 due solely to the increase of salaries of city letter carriers or to an increase of additional-

Mr. LLOYD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I will give the For 1900 they were $13,700,000, and in this bill they are $29,700,000. The gentleman can make the computa-tion himself, and he will see it will be a difference of $16,000,000. Mr. COX of Indiana. Putting it at $16,000,000, is that due solely to the increased salary of city letter carriers, or is it due to that in addition to new city letter carriers?

Mr. LLOYD. It is due mainly, of course, to the increased number of letter carriers rather than the increase of salary; yet it is due to both, because in those ten years all of these employees have been increased more than $100 in salary.

I have called your attention to the city letter carriers and postoffice employees. I wish to call attention to the railway mail clerks, which in part accounts for these extraordinary expenses.

The cost of railway mail service in 1900 was $8,800,000. while in this bill it provides for an expenditure of $19,500,000. an increase of nearly $11,000,000, much more than double, a 120 per cent increase. Now, just at this juncture I see my additional fifteen minutes is about gone, but I want to call attention to a question which every Member, I suppose, on the floor is called upon to meet. You have received numerous letters calling attention to the fact that railway mail clerks ought to have some increased compensation on account of travel pay. In other words, that they should receive compensation for the expenses which they may incur while away from their homes in the discharge of their duties. At the present time the average pay of the city letter carrier or employee in the city post-office is a little less than $1,000. The average pay carried in this bill for railway mail clerks is about $1,165, a difference of nearly $200. In other words, the railway mail clerks now receive nearly $200 more compensation than does the city letter carrier or the employee in the city post-office.

Now, I wish to call attention in this connection, and it does not shed much light on it, but it is a little bit of history in which you might be interested, that in Great Britain the average amount paid the railway mail clerk is $940; in Germany it is $850; in France it is $870. In Great Britain it is $225 less than the United States, in Germany $315 less, and in France Now, in Great Britain the railway mail carrier is $290 less required to devote three-fourths of his time to his business. receives $780 salary and $160 travel pay. In Germany the salary is $515 and a house is provided at $135, and travel at $200. In France a house is provided at a cost of $80 and mileage $180 with a salary of $610. In the United States, as most of you know, the average railway mail clerk is required to devote one-half of his time to the service of the Government and the other half of his time he is at home with his family. During that half time, however, he is expected to devote himself to study to fit himself for the duties of the position. Now, there is another thing with reference to the railway mail clerk that does not occur to other employees. It is well known everywhere that the railway mail clerk's position is extremely hazardous. He is on the train all the time, or very nearly all of his time. It is a very dangerous position, and a very trying position to the individual standing on his feet in the performance of his duty, but the law also provides at the present time that the railway mail carriers if injured while on duty can receive one year's pay if injured and unfit for duty for as long a period as twelve months.

If misfortune should occur to such an extent as that his life is taken while in the performance of duty, a thousand dollars is paid to his family.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. If the gentleman will permit, in giving the difference between the wages paid in the United States to the railway mail clerks and the wages paid in Great Britain, of course the gentleman has not made any allowance for the difference in the cost of living. Now, is it not true that the railway mail clerk in Great Britain, when you consider the cheaper cost of living there than in the United States, gets really more for his labor than we pay here?

Mr. LLOYD. That is a question that I have gone into in part, but not to a sufficient extent to correctly answer. ally, I will answer the proposition that the cost of living is somewhat less in those countries than it is here.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. But the "somewhat" does not quite express it. Is it not true that the cost of living is 50 per cent less there than it is here?

Mr. LLOYD. Well, I would not say it is that much

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. But does the gentleman not know that the cost of all necessities of life is very much greater in this country

Mr. GOEBEL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him this question? What are the hours of railway mail clerks in Great Britain, Germany, and France, and what are the hours in the United States?

Mr. LLOYD. Why, in Great Britain three-fourths of the time.

Mr. GOEBEL. I am talking of the hours. Mr. LLOYD. Well, that is three-fourths of the time—threefourths of the full time that would be expected of any other employee. In Germany he is expected to devote exactly the same time as any other employee in the service, namely, full time. In the United States, half of the time.

Mr. GOEBEL. Is it not a fact that they have very short runs and in America very long runs?

Mr. LLOYD. Of course it is true that in England or in all the European countries the run is usually shorter than in the United States, but we have some short runs in the United States.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. If the gentleman will permit me, is it not also true that in the United States every year 25 per cent of the men engaged by the Government as railway mail clerks are either killed or injured, and is it not true that the per cent is not one-third that rate in England?

Mr. LLOYD. I understand from statistics there is a greater ercentage in the United States than in England or any other European country—a greater per cent killed, but I do not think there is 25 per cent in the United States killed. I think that is an overdrawn estimate.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I did not say "killed." I said "killed or injured."
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield the gentleman five minutes

Mr. LLOYD. I was calling attention to the railway mail clerks and the question of travel pay. Our committee has not passed on the question of travel pay. It is a new proposition. There is no man on the committee, so far as I know, but who is in full sympathy with the railway mail clerks. We are ready to do what ought to be done; but at this juncture the committee, as a committee, is not prepared to pass on the question as to whether we should provide a travel pay or increased salary; and if we provided a travel pay, what it should be, and what should be the limitation of it, and what should be the method of that pay. But we have done this much for the railway mail clerks: If you will examine this bill, you will ascertain that we have provided for the promotion of 5,440 of them, or one-third of them, at an increased pay of $100 each. The railway mail clerks have received a little recognition in increased compensation, notwithstanding the committee have not acceded in this bill to their demand for travel pay.

Mr. COX of Indiana. From what class to what class?

Mr. LLOYD. Promoting from the lower class to the higher, all the way up

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman stated a few moments ago that if the railway mail clerks are injured they receive a certain compensation, but he did not state, however, that in England, in France, and in Germany they receive the same compensation and, in addition, receive a pension.

Mr. LLOYD. I did not say anything about pensions being given to them in England.

Mr. SABATH. They do receive compensation when they are injured, and they also receive a pension in England, in Germany, in France, and in other foreign countries.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not true that reports of the Post-Office Department show that in the last five years there have been 2,963 clerks injured or killed, and that that is at the ratio of about 1 to 4 of those employed?

Mr. LLOYD. In what time?

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. In the last five years.

Mr. LLOYD. I have not the figures just now with me.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I will say to the gentleman that this is information taken from the reports and submitted to me by one who took them from the reports.

Mr. LLOYD. In 1906 there were 16 killed and 491 injured; in 1907, 21 killed and 787 injured; and in 1908, 6 killed and 640

I have not further data at hand.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I would like to state, in order that the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky may not be accepted, that I challenge that statement myself; that it can not be in accordance with the facts.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Which statement? Mr. OVERSTREET. That over 2,000 railway mail clerks have been injured in the last five years.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I have the statement submitted to me by the president of the Railway Mail Clerks, in which he says that the total number that have been either killed or injured and slightly injured is 2,963.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I challenge that statement, no matter who signs the letter.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I do not know whether it is correct or not. I believe it is true. It was supplied me from a perfectly trustworthy source, taken from the report of the Post-Office Department. I would say that the gentleman from Indiana, who has questioned it so much without knowing anything about it, might himself supply the record.

Mr. SABATH. I will give you information on that point. would like to say to the gentleman from Missouri I have the figures here showing how many people have been killed and injured by our railroads during the last year, and the figures show that the people killed were 4,534.

Mr. LLOYD. I have called attention to the fact that the excesses in expenditure are largely chargeable to the rural service, the expenses in the city post-offices, city letter carriers, and the railway mail employees. This bill provides for 2,625 new clerks in city post-offices, 1,700 letter carriers and 1,056 railway mail clerks. The bill contemplates the establishment of 1.500 rural routes and the expenses of the carriers therefor. Some definite system ought to be adopted by which the Post-Office Committee and the Congress can have accurate knowledge as to the needs of the service. No patriotic citizen wishes to cripple it in the least, but, on the other hand, not a clerk should be provided that is not necessary to the postal service.

I have been interrupted a number of times. I ask leave to revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks leave to revise his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to incorporate in the Record a statement by Mr. H. E. Miles, of Racine, Wis., an eminent Republican, manufacturer, and protectionist, showing the protection given by the Dingley law to the great American

The excess of the duty above the wage cost and the ability of the trusts to do with no protection whatever is shown by their exportation of their products into the open markets of the world. Invariably these trusts charge the home consumer from 15 to 25 and sometimes 60 per cent more than their foreign customers, adding thereto a considerable part of the tariff to their prices as against the home consumer.

And sausages, etc.): total export of meat products, $195,759,282.

Note.—The items of wages in this exhibit do not include wages in prior operations, for which in most cases allowance can easily be made. In glucose and linseed, for instance, the prior labor is that of raising corn and flax. In steel the prior labor is in mining and transportation of materials. The United States Steel Corporation's total wages, covering everything from ore in ground to finished product, is just under 25 per cent of its selling price, instead of 15 per cent shown in table for steel plants only. On the other hand, protection is to be measured not by the total wage cost, but the difference in total costs here and abroad. The difference in cost is very much less than the total wage cost. The tables are therefore highly significant of the excessive protection of which American trusts take advantage.

It is to be noted that most of our great trusts control the raw materials, with the minimum of wage cost. The car builders' trust is of the other sort, controlling a highly finished product. This wage cost would be greatly increased by the wages in its supplies, atles, textiles, etc. The addition of this prior labor would still show the duty very excessive, while exportations amounting to $9,000,000 annually show the need of little or no protection.

Most, if not all, of these large trusts charge the foreign consumer much less than the domestic consumer. They saw in the Dingley tariff not only an opportunity of great profit, but practically an invitation from the United States Congress to consolidate and add as much as they might of the excesses in the tariff to their selling prices. The hurt to the "ultimate consumer" is evident. Almost as much hurt has been done to the 175,000 independent, nontrustified manufacturers, who operate under the competitive principles and look to these trusts for supplies and to the workingmen in these nontrustified establishments, whose wages and hours of labor are affected in proportion as their employers

Mr. SHEPPARD. The preceding table was prepared by Mr. Miles, and the note appended is also of his authorship.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I have here an article prepared by the vice-president of the American Letter Carriers' Association, Mr. Edward J. Gainor, which contains a great deal of thought, study, and general information on the subject of the postal deficit.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Porto Rico.

Mr. LARRINAGA. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of making a few remarks in connection with some cablegrams I have received from Porto Rico. Ever since the civil government was established in the island there has been a petty game started there by some people who want to keep Porto Rico in the same condition of a colony that it is now. The purpose is to make the people of the United States believe that there is a sentiment of anti-Americanism in the country. This is an old game, Mr. Chairman. It has not even the merit of being an original one. It was tried in the old times under Spain.

Whenever the liberals were in power at Madrid something was started in Porto Rico to keep the Government from improving our political condition by giving us some measure of political reform. Some artificial revolution was fabricated, some hot speech was made by somebody, perhaps paid to make it; some articles were published in the papers for that purpose; and so on. It just happens that the same policy has been going on since the Foraker Act was established in Porto Rico. The purpose is to imbue the administration and Members of Congress with the idea that there is a sentiment of anti-Americanism in the island. That there is a sentiment of discontent there is no doubt. We are not satisfied either with our political or our economic conditions, but to say that a sentiment of anti-Americanism exists is the greatest calumny on our loyal people that could have been invented.

Mr. Chairman, let me tell you from this moment on you will see the American press full of these reports from an agent there purporting to make Members of Congress believe that there is such a sentiment. In order to be ready to meet it, I wish to expose that conspiracy right here in this House.

The agent down there in charge of sending news to the American press is to-day, and has always been, in the pay of the Government. The Government takes great care to have him always in a very good office. Already the nefarious work is begun. An unfortunate affair, one in which the honor of an old family was involved, resulted in the shooting of an officer of the police, alleged to have been the destroyer of that home. Immediately the sad occurrence was flashed to the American press under the caption "Porto Rico crime swept!"

Mr. Chairman, our criminal statistics compare very favorably with those of any State in the Union, but we must be prepared to hear more from this on. They will not stop the slanderous work on that peaceful, law-abiding people, whose only sin is to shelter such men.

That is one of the articles of faith with the local government; but I tell you, gentlemen, that if that was true, if a sentiment of anti-Americanism existed there, I would not be representing the people of Porto Rico in this House.

For more than forty years I have been known through the island as one of the most enthusiastic advocates of American annexation, of American principles, and one of the many who had cooperated to form that spirit of friendship with which the Americans were received on the 25th day of July, 1898, at the Port of Guanica. That was so sincere, it was so deeply rooted in the hearts of the people that, although at the time we had no grudge against the Spanish Government, for Spain had already conceded to us our self-government—a better government than that of any province in the mother country—yet they were received as friends. Mr. Chairman, that was not the whim of a moment. The people knew that the geographical and all other circumstances were such that their final destiny was to become a part of that great Nation they had been taught to admire and revere. True it is, Mr. Chairman, that we expected better treatment at the hands of this great Nation. We protested when that organic act was given to us in 1900, but that was a temporary act, and the United States had many difficult problems to solve at that time, with all the different Territories that, through accident of war, had come into their hands. We patiently have waited to see if that act was amended in a manner more in harmony with the conditions of our people and the principles of American democracy, but, as the gentleman from Ohio very justly said the other day, the time has come when our people should be granted a better form of government than that given by the present organic act.

For many years we have been putting up with all the encroachment of our masters in that executive council or upper house. For many years we have cooperated with our local government to the verge of humiliation; but the time has come, Mr. Chairman, when we are no longer disposed to allow them to go beyond the limits fixed by the organic act, narrow as those limits are, for the genuine representation of the people in the lower house. I will explain the present situation.

In 1904 the Union party, the one more strenuously opposed to the Foraker Act, carried the elections by an overwhelming majority; in 1906 we carried the whole island, electing every member to the lower house; in 1908 we swept the island from one end to the other. This shows very clearly that our people are more determined every day to stop the encroaching tendency of that upper house or executive council. Every member elected by the people belongs to the party that is no longer disposed to be ruled by those gentlemen of the executive council according to their caprice. These are the present political conditions down in Porto Rico.

In order to scare the weak-minded and to engage the sympathy of Congress, of the Executive, and of the American people, it seems that they are taking up the old game of talking of the existence of anti-Americanism in our party.

There is no such thing, Mr. Chairman; it is an unmitigated falsehood, a miserable political trick, and I solemnly denounce it right here as such. As regards the American people and the Nation, the same sentiment that existed at the landing of the Americans exists to-day.

I am elected by my people by more than 100,000 votes, and by an overwhelming majority, not because of any recognized ability in statesmanship or politics, which do not concur in me, but because of my unflinching faith in the righteousness of our cause, my devotion to the true American principles, and my love and admiration for the American people.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. At the appropriate time I shall offer an amendment to this bill so as to grant to 50 per cent of the highest grade (fourth grade, at $1,000) clerks in second-class post-offices a promotion to the fifth grade at $1,100. This increase is not included in the Treasury estimates, and will cost about $50,000. The bill before us, reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, grants to 50 per cent of the highest grade (fifth grade, at $1,100) clerks in first-class post-offices a promotion to the sixth grade, at $1,200. This increase is likewise not included in the Treasury estimates, and will cost about $150,000.

If this bill is adopted without the amendment I shall offer, it will establish the precedent that there shall be a difference in salary amounting to $200 per annum between clerks of equal standing and equal responsibility, based solely on the reason that one group of such clerks serves in small cities while the other group serves in large cities. The post-office law of 1907 distinctly repudiated the view that $200 should mark the difference in salary between highest grade clerks and carriers in large and in small offices.

The difference was established at $100. In my belief, even that amount of difference is unreasonable and not based on any fair measure of relative costs of living. Except in the items of rent and perhaps transportation, living expenses are no less in small cities than in large.

In view of the depleted condition of the Treasury, I should have raised no objection if the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads had adhered to the Treasury estimates; but the committee has not seen fit to do so. Inasmuch as the promotion for clerks in first-class offices has been recommended, all considerations of equity would seem to require the inclusion of a corresponding promotion for clerks in second-class offices.

I especially hope that the second paragraph on page 20 of this bill will not be retained in its present shape. It is not consistent with our practices in other matters to force railway postal clerks to pay their own expenses when traveling strictly on post-office business away from their designated headquarters, No private employer would require such a sacrifice from his employees and a fortiori the United States should not do so.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Currier, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 26305, the post-office appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ALLEGED INSULT TO THE AMERICAN FLAG.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs which should have accompanied a motion to lay on the table the resolution (H. The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred the House resolution (H. Res. 493), asking that the Secretary of State report to the House any information he may have received concerning an encounter in the city of Prague, Bohemia, in which it was stated that the American flag was torn into strips and trampled in the mud, respectfully report it back to the House with the recommendation that it lie upon the table.

In support of this recommendation, attention is called to the following correspondence of the Department of State:

AMERICAN EMBASSY, Vienna, December 3, 1908.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that martial law was declared yesterday in Prague, Bohemia. The cause of such action on the part of the Government was a riot which broke out on Monday between the Czechs (Bohemians) and the German students at the university in that Czechs (Bohemians) and the German students at the university in that city.

Since the first outbreak on Monday, the popular feeling has found expression to such an extent that the police and gendarmes have been unable to maintain order. A serious conflict took place in one of the principal streets of Prague on Tuesday between the rioters, numbering about 20,000, and the police, during which many persons were injured, including several police officers, although no fatalities have been reported. The revolt on the part of the Czechs has not been confined to the students, the Czech population not only sympathizing but openly joining the ranks of the rioters.

It is said that the immediate cause of the present outbreak was the advertised laying of the corner stone of a new German university in Prague. The Bohemian students desire that a Bohemian university shall be built instead, in which courses of instruction shall be given in the Czech language.

shall be built instead, in which courses or instruction shall be given in the Czech language.

It is reported that similar outbreaks on a smaller scale have taken place in Laibach, Troppau, Brunn, and other places in the Austrian Empire. Austrian flags were torn down and insulted and many of the rioters sang the national songs of Servia.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

Hon, Elihu Root,

Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

Department of State, Washington, January 22, 1909.

Sir: Referring to my letter of the 20th instant in regard to the resolution introduced by Mr. Hitchcock, calling for information concerning the alleged insult to the American flag in Prague, I now have the honor to inform you that inquiry has been made by telegraph and reports have been received from the American consul at Prague stating that he has investigated the matter and has had an interview with the police president, and is able to say that the report of the alleged insult is without foundation. It appears from the telegrams, copies of which are appended for your information, that the American and British flags were displayed over a photograph shop, and that the British flag was torn down by a riotous procession and carried some distance, when it was taken by the police. The American flag was left undisturbed.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

He also introduced a bill (S. 8893) to provide for acquirement, by condemnation, of lands at Cape Henry, Virginia, for the purpose of fortification and coast defense, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses

He also introduced a bill (S. 8894) granting permission to the Lynnhaven Terminal Corporation to improve the lower Chesapeake and Lynnhaven Bay by the construction of a breakwater, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McCUMBER introduced a bill (S. 8895) granting an increase of pension to Elton M. Durfey, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. RAYNER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 8896) to incorporate the Washington, Baltimore and Annapolis Railway Company, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 8900) granting a pension to Helen Mirrin;

A bill (S. 8901) granting a pension to Lucy Ann Palmer;

A bill (S. 8902) granting a pension to Louisa E. Lawrence; A bill (S. 8903) granting a pension to Emma R. Walters; and

A bill (S. 8904) granting a pension to Sarah Elsie Green.

COAL LANDS IN NORTH DAKOTA,

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I introduce a bill authorizing final proof and directing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents to entrymen under the homestead laws in the State of North Dakota, notwithstanding the fact that the land entered may contain lignite coal; and I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. I wish to ask the indulgence of the Senate for just one moment in a brief explanation of the bill for the benefit of the chairman of that committee.

Mr. President, a very large percentage of all the land in the western part of my State is underlaid with lignite coal. that land has been opened to settlement as agricultural land. It has been entered as agricultural land, and an immense number of entries are now being held in suspension and a vast number of final proofs are now also being held in abeyance until an investigation can be had to determine whether or not the land is coal land and whether or not it should be segregated from public entry.

This is a great hardship to the settlers in that State. The great majority of those settlers are men who have little means. It has been customary for them after maintaining a residence and cultivation of some fourteen months to make final proof and borrow enough money to pay for the purchase of teams, machinery, and so forth. Many are unable to do this under the present conditions because of the tying up of these lands.

This opens up the greater question as to whether the coal lands in the State of North Dakota should be segregated and taken from the homesteader in that State to be sold as coal lands only. I have not heard of a single instance in which any land has been sold for coal land which has brought a higher price than like land for agricultural purposes. There may, of course, be a few isolated cases.

The coal under these lands is of the lignite variety. It is not a high grade of coal and is used for heating purposes on the farm. We have a few coal mines in the State, but none of them have been made to pay very well, as I understand. These lands are situated hundreds of miles—some of them nearly a thousand miles—from woodlands, and the settlers must depend upon the coal that they can secure under the surface of their own land for their fuel during the winter time. The land for the most part-I am informed 95 per cent, at least, of it-is more valuable for agricultural purposes than for coal purposes

Under the land laws, patent issues, as a matter of course, upon proof of residence and cultivation at the local land office. These patents, however, have been suspended, in some instances for more than two years, in order that the department might investigate the question of the character of the coal underneath and ascertain whether the land is more valuable for coal purposes than it is for agricultural purposes. This has been a great injury to the settlers throughout the western portion of the State, and I submit to the committee that I believe all of this land should be taken the same as any other agricultural land, and that the entryman should have title to the coal that is under the land, as well as to the surface land above the coal,

We are to-day granting the right to one man to make a mineral entry. He may locate a gold mine. He may take $50,000,000 out of that mine, every dollar of which may belong to that one man. I do not believe that all the coal in the State of North Dakota to-day could be sold for $50,000,000, yet we are depriving all of these entrymen of the right to use the little coal that there is under that land for their benefit, while inconsistently, I think, under the idea of conserving the resources of the United States, we are allowing the gold miner to take out millions from a single mine.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator, before he concludes, have the bill read? It is a very interesting subject, and we should like to hear the bill read.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. President, there is no man in the Senate who is in more hearty accord with the purpose to conserve all the timber lands and the mineral resources of this country than I am, but I admit that lignite coal is not of such great value to future generations that we can afford to-day to deprive the present generation of the benefit of the use of that coal and prevent the farmers, who pass the long winters there and are to-day developing that country for the benefit and comfort of future generations, from having the coal for their own use.

I have made this statement simply that the chairman of the committee may consider the propriety of taking up the bill immediately and if possible reporting it at the present session of Congress

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. McCUMBER. In just one moment. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] asked that the bill be read. It is short and I ask for its reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

as requested.

The bill (S. 8897) authorizing final proof and directing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents to entrymen under the homestead laws in the State of North Dakota, notwithstanding the fact that the lands entered may contain lignite coal, was read the first time by its title and the second time a length, as

Be it enacted, etc., That where public lands in the State of North Dakota have been heretofore, are now, or hereafter shall be, open to settlement under the homestead laws of the United States, and homestead entry made thereon and final proof of residence and improvements on the land entered by the entrymen made to the local land office, as required by law, to secure title to agricultural lands, such final proof shall be received and accepted by the local land office, and the Secretary of the Interior shall thereupon issue patent to the entrymen, notwithstanding the fact that the land embraced within the entry may contain lignite coal.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from North Dakota whether there is any report from the Geological Survey in regard to the character of the land which he mentions?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have no doubt there have been some reports, but as I only ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, the committee can investigate the whole

Mr. TILLMAN. I wanted to call attention to the fact that unless we go very carefully in this matter of single entrymen getting 160 acres we will find ourselves face to face presently with men who will enter the lands in good faith and then sell them to some combination which will create a monopoly there.

If the character of coal is of the type which the Senator mentions, and is only useful for fuel, because a man can not do any better, and he wants to go down in a hole on his own ground and get some to warm himself with, I can see no objection; but if the bill is not very carefully guarded we may find ourselves with a monopoly there like that which was attempted in the Indian Territory a few years back.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think that the coal land within a quarter of a section there is of such value as would justify

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WARREN. I thought the Senator was through with his remarks

Mr. McCUMBER. I was through, as far as I am concerned. except to answer questions.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will yield to me, I suggest that he broaden the terms of the bill beyond the confines of North Dakota and take in some of the Rocky Mountain States.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have no objection to that; but I am not familiar with the conditions in other States. It will be for the committee to consider the question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. JOHNSTON submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to contract for and purchase one small vessel, whose vitals are located below the normal load water line, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PILES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,000,000 for actual necessary traveling expenses of railway postal clerks, at not to exceed $1 per day, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the post-office appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the construction by the Quartermaster's department of roads, walks, wharves, etc., from $1,000,000 to $1,133,000, intended to be proposed by him to the army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FULTON submitted an amendment providing for paving with asphalt Connecticut avenue extended from Macomb to Newark street, in the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MARTIN submitted an amendment providing that all employees of navy-yards, gun factories, and naval stations in addition to the leaves of absence provided for by existing law may hereafter be granted leaves of absence with pay, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment providing that the Hospital Corps of the United States Navy shall consist of chief pharmacists; pharmacists, who shall be appointed by the President; and such ratings in the enlisted branch as may be designated according to the law governing other enlisted men, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. FRYE submitted an amendment providing that the number of officers of the grade of senior captain in the Revenue-Cutter Service be increased from 6 to 12, who shall perform duty in connection with the construction of vessels and the inspection of their armament, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

FRANCIS S. NASH-WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. MARTIN, it was-Ordered, That there may be withdrawn from the files of the Senate the papers relative to the case of Francis S. Nash, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, Senate bill 5771, there having been no adverse report thereon.

IMPROVEMENT OF HARBOR AT LEXINGTON, MICH.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. C. Res. 80), which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a preliminary survey to be made of the harbor at Lexington, Sanilac County, Mich., with a view to deepening the same to a depth of 20 feet and to submit a plan and estimate for such improvement.

ACCIDENTS TO RAILROAD EMPLOYEES.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I submit a resolution which I send to the desk. It is a short resolution relating to a matter that will not be contested, and I ask for its present consideration. The resolution (S. Res. 267) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and it hereby s, directed to send to the Senate a statement showing the number of allroad employees killed and injured each year since June 30, 1901, rom the following causes:

1. Lack of, insecure, and improperly applied, sill steps;

2. Inefficient and improperly applied hand brakes;

3. Insecure and improperly applied ladders;

4. Lack of, insecure, and improperly applied, roof hand holds or grab rons; and

5. Lack of, insecure, and improperly applied, running boards.

irons; and 5. Lack of, insecure, and improperly applied, running boards.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HALE. I should like to ask the Senator who introduced the resolution whether he believes all that vast and various the resolution whether he believes all that vast and various amount of information can be furnished by the Interstate Commerce Commission without taking, it may be, weeks and needing an additional force. It struck me as it was read that it is a resolution which calls upon the commission for a great amount of extra work. At any rate, I will object to its consideration now in order that I may examine it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the resolution will lie over.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It would not, therefore, be proper for me to state what I think about the Senator's questions at this time?

Mr. HALE. The resolution will come up to-morrow morn-

ASSESSMENT AND COLLECTION OF TAXES.

Mr. BROWN. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 265) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from further consideration of the bill (S. 3186) to amend section 3224 of the United States Compiled Statutes so as to prevent the restraining of the assessment or collection of any tax, State, county, municipal, district, or federal, and that the same be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I think I shall have to object to the present consideration of the resolution. I wish to explain, however, briefly my reason for so doing.

The bill is one that was referred to me as a subcommittee. I am not quite certain whether there was more than one on the subcommittee or not; but it does not favor the bill. I have explained to the Senator who introduced it and has it in charge the objections to it as far as I am concerned. I expect that I am more responsible than any other member of the committee for the bill not having been reported. So far as I am concerned, I have no objection to reporting the bill unfavorably. I think we generally dislike to do that unless the Senator having the measure in charge is willing that it shall be done.

I suggest that the resolution go over, and I think the Senator can get a report on the bill. There is no disposition on the part of the committee to prevent a report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made to the present consideration of the resolution, it will lie over.

CENTENARY OF THE BIRTH OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

H. J. Res. 247. Joint resolution relating to the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln and making the 12th day of February, 1909, a legal holiday, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. WETMORE. I ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. CULLOM. If there is to be any discussion of the measure again, I shall feel constrained to object.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not think there will be any discussion of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the joint resolution the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the 12th day of February, 1909, the same being the centennial anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, be, and the same is hereby, made a special legal holiday in the District of Columbia and the Territories of the United States. Be it further Resolved, That the President be authorized to issue a proclamation in accordance with the foregoing, setting apart the 12th day of February, 1909, as a special legal holiday.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. In view of the fact that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox]—
Mr. ALDRICH. My colleague is going to move an amendment.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, this matter can not go through without discussion. I object to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to submit a resolution.
Mr. CULLOM. I thought morning business had been disposed of.

Mr. FULTON. I wish the Senator from Illinois would not press that motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CULLOM. I can not yield. I gave notice yesterday that I would move an executive session at this time, and I make that motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I desire briefly to call attention to the joint resolution providing for the Lincoln memorial exercises. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE] in conference with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox] has arranged to offer a substitute for the House joint resolution which has just come to the Secretary's desk. I can see no objection to that. It would put the matter in conference. I renew the request for unanimous consent that the joint resolution be now considered. I am sure it will lead to no discussion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana requests unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 247) relating to the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, and making the 12th day of February, 1909, a legal holiday, and for other purposes. Is there objection?

Mr. HALE. If it gives rise to any debate I must object. The Senator from Illinois is very desirous of taking up an important treaty, and it was the understanding yesterday that we should take it up this morning.

Mr. CULLOM. I gave notice yesterday that I would make the motion this morning immediately after the morning business. I supposed the morning business was completed when I made the motion. Otherwise I would have deferred it.

Mr. CARTER. If the joint resolution leads to any discussion whatever, I will withdraw the request for unanimous con-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana withdraws the request for unanimous consent. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Library

Mr. WETMORE subsequently, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 247) relating to the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, and making the 12th day of February, 1909, a legal holiday, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

EARTHQUAKE AT SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Mr. PERKINS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 266), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, requested to furnish the Senate with a copy of such consolidated report as he may have on the work of the army in connection with the San Francisco, Cal., earthquake and fire of April, 1906.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE COLUMBIA RIVER, OREGON.

Mr. FULTON. I submit a concurrent resolution, which I ask may be read.

The concurrent resolution (S. C. Res. 81) was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimates to be made for a project of improvement of the Columbia River from the mouth of the Willamette River to the ocean, in the States of Oregon and Washington, and of the Willamette River, in the State of Oregon, from the city of Portland to the mouth of the river, with a view to securing and maintaining a uniform depth of not less than 30 feet at the lowest stage of water in said rivers from said city of Portland to the ocean, such survey and estimates to be reported to Congress.

Mr. FULTON. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Commerce. While I have the floor I wish to take advantage of the opportunity to state that I hope the motion to go into executive session will not be pressed. I want to proceed with the consideration of the omnibus claims bill, and I hope the Senate will allow us to do so. If it does not, we can not hope to get that bill disposed of during the present session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Commerce. Is there further morning business?

Mr. CULLOM. If there is no further morning business. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. [Putting the question.]

By the sound the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senate will vote to go into executive session.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McENERY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW].

Mr. OWEN (when has name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins] to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] and will vote. I vote nav.

Mr. SCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO], but as this vote does not appear to be on party lines, I will take the responsibility of voting. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

The result was announced-yeas 40, nays 31, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, January 27, 1909.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer was offered by Rev. George L. Perin, of Boston, Mass. The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

COMMITTEE ON IRRIGATION OF ARID LANDS.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the following resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 517.

Resolved, That the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands shall have authority to order such printing as may be necessary connected with the business of said committee during this Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

BRIDGE OVER INDIAN RIVER NORTH, FLORIDA.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 26073) to approve and ratify the construction of a bridge across the Indian River North, in the State of Florida, by the New Smyrna Bridge and Investment Company.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the construction by the New Smyrna Bridge and Investment Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Florida, of the bridge across the Indian River North from the town of New Smyrna, on the west, to the land lying on the east of said river be, and the same is hereby, approved and ratified, subject to the provisions of existing laws, and particularly subject to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to legalize a bridge across Indian River North, in the State of Florida."

The committee amendments were read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in neu increof the following:

"That the bridge constructed across Indian River North at the town of New Smyrna, Fla., by the New Smyrna Bridge and Investment Company be, and the same is hereby, legalized, and the consent of Congress is hereby given to its maintenance by the said corporation, its successors, or assigns: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to exempt this bridge from the operation of the existing laws enacted by Congress for the protection of navigable waters and any changes in the said structure which the Secretary of War may deem necessary and order in the interest of navigation shall be promptly made by the owners thereof at their own expense.

"Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

Amend the title so as to read as follows: "To legalize a bridge across Indian River North, in the State of Florida."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

INAUGURAL CEREMONIES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House Senate joint resolution 106, authorizing the granting of permits during inaugural ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect, March 4, 1909, and so forth. Without objection, a similar bill having already passed the House, this bill will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

THE SPEECH OF MR. WILLETT.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a privileged resolution and report, by direction of the select committee appointed under House resolution 494, and I ask that the Clerk may read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Report No. 1962, by Mr. Mann.

The select committee appointed under House resolution 494, which

The select committee appointed under House resolution 494, which reads as follows:

"Whereas the speech of Mr. Willett, printed in the Congressional Record of January 18, 1909, contains language improper and in violation of the privilege of debate: Therefore be it

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., January 22, 1909.

House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C., January 22, 1909.

To the honorable special committee having in charge the matter contained in House resolution No. 44, adopted January 19, 1909.

Gentlemen: I have received information through your chairman that your committee will meet on Monday next to consider any statement in writing I may desire to present, and in pursuance therewith I desire to respectfully submit the following:

It is my serious and earnest contention that I was entirely within my rights to make the speech, under the order of general debate, and in availing myself of the freedom of debate and the uniformly recognized latitude of discussion I but followed the established custom and practice of the House, and did in nowise transcend the rules of the House as they have always heretofore been understood by the Members of the House.

It will serve no useful purpose for me to cite numerous instances where personal reference has been made by Members to nonmembers, Members to Members, and Members to the Chief Executive in the course of debate in language, taken separately or collectively, infinitely stronger than my own—this committee is composed of Members of long service in this House—and a citation of cases is unnecessary.

Freedom of speech has always been held so sacred that the utmost latitude has been allowed in debate, and I respectfully submit that to strike my speech from the record in this instance will establish a precedent extremely dangerous, because it will mean, in the light of past precedents, that the House has at last surrendered to the proposition that no Member can discuss any subject the discussion of which happens to displease the majority.

Urging again my sincere conviction that my speech should remain on record, I assure the committee of my Sincere respect,

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to occupy the time

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to occupy the time of the House. The report is a unanimous report. If any gentleman desires, I will yield time, but otherwise I ask for a vote. The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolu-

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to. POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the post-office appropriation bill. And pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that general debate close in two hours and thirty minutes, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennes-see [Mr. Moon] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and pending that motion he asks unanimous consent that general debate close in two hours and thirty minutes, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. Overstreet was then agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. Currier in the chair.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. Lever.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, it will be a source of disappointment to the rural population, the farmers, of the country that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads in its wisdom did not see fit to include in the bill now under consideration provisions carrying into effect certain recommendations of Postmaster-General in his last annual report. I wish to call the attention of the committee briefly, because my time is limited, to one recommendation of the Postmaster-General which I regard as of vast importance to the fullest development of the postal service. I refer to that recommendation which contemplates the inauguration of a limited parcels post on rural routes.

I read from the Annual Report of the Postmaster-General for the fiscal year 1907:

I recommend the establishment of a special parcels-post system on rural delivery routes for packages originating on a rural delivery route or at the distributing post-office for delivery by rural carriers to patrons thereof at a rate of 5 cents for the first pound and 2 cents for each additional pound or fractional part of an additional pound up to 11 pounds; for 2 ounces or less, 1 cent; over 2 ounces and up to 4 ounces, 2 cents; over 4 and up to 8 ounces, 3 cents; over 8 and up to 12 ounces, 4 cents; over 12 ounces and up to 1 pound, 5 cents.

This recommendation carries the idea of giving the farmers of the country conveniences additional to those now brought to them by the rural delivery service. One of the annoyances of country life is the inconvenience involved in obtaining for use many of the small necessaries of life. Every farmer here present knows of his own experience how much time is taken in extra trips to town and city for these necessities of the home He knows that in the aggregate the waste is incalculable, and I am sure, if given an opportunity to have a direct vote upon the proposition, he would guard himself and all of the farmers of the country against its continuance. Let me illustrate: The farmer makes his usual trip to the village on Saturday to provide himself with supplies for the following week. Likely as not he has jotted down a memorandum of the various things he is to purchase. It develops on Monday morning that his good wife had overlooked the fact that she was in need of a package of soda or a pound of coffee or a few yards of cloth for the children. A plow must be stopped in the busy season of the year, it may be at the sowing or harvest time, when every hour is valuable, and some one must make the trip to town, else the bread goes without soda or the breakfast comes without its usual cup of coffee. This is not only a serious inconvenience, but, I repeat, in the aggregate amounts to a tremendous drain upon the time of the farmer, and it must be remembered that time is money to the farmer as well as to every other class.

Under the system recommended by the Postmaster-General, and which I most earnestly advocate, this inconvenience and waste of time will be obviated. A post card to his merchant setting out that a package of soda or a pound of coffee or a few yards of cloth or any other article of small weight is needed will have the desired article forthcoming by rural carrier the next morning, and at a cost which amounts practically to nothing.

This plan is so simple, so pregnant with benefits to so large a class of our population, so justified by good sense and the desire to legislate in the interest of all the people, that it must seem strange that Congress has not already authorized by law its establishment. The fact is that practically no consideration has been given it. It has been neglected, cast aside, and to that extent met unfavorable consideration.

The Postmaster-General, I take it, is not the kind of man to lose heart because of one rebuff, and in his annual report for this year he is so earnest in his insistence that this proposed plan be given the consideration to which its probable beneficent results entitle it that he asks Congress only to permit him to ascertain its practicability by allowing him to establish experimentally a limited local parcels post in not to exceed four counties in the United States. His recommendation reads:

counties in the United States. His recommendation reads:

I urge that the Postmaster-General be authorized and directed to establish experimentally a limited local parcels post, confined entirely to rural-delivery routes in not to exceed four counties in the United States for packages of fourth-class matter originating on a rural route or at its distributing post-office for delivery by rural carriers to patrons thereof at such special rates of postage and under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may deem advisable, and that no parcel shall be accepted from any person acting as representative for any person or company not a resident on such rural delivery route or in the town from which they emanate, and that only such parcels shall be received for delivery at the special rates of postage as are offered by bona fide merchants or dealers whose regular places of business are on such rural delivery routes in the ordinary and regular course of their business and in their individual capacity by residence on such routes.

Howe the Postmaster-General bees Congress to allow him to

Here the Postmaster-General begs Congress to allow him to experiment, to ascertain the facts, to see how the system works, that we, as the representatives of the people, may be the better informed as to the wisdom of enacting legislation which looks to the establishment of such a system for all rural routes throughout the country. This is not an unreasonable request, and it passes my understanding that any objections to it from any source should arise.

It may be well for gentlemen to bear in mind that we now have a general parcels post; but the system is such that it is little used by the general public, for the reason that the limit of weight for each package is only 4 pounds, and the postage per pound is 16 cents. The system proposed increases the weight of the package to 11 pounds and reduces the postage on a package of 11 pounds to a little more than 2 cents per average pound. Such a system, in my judgment, as is sought by those who agree with the recommendation of the Postmaster-General would find universal favor, and in a short time become as popular with the people even as rural delivery, and likewise as indispensable and as fruitful of benefits.

If must be remembered that it is not necessary to construct any special machinery with which to put this system into operation. We now have the machinery in the 35,000 rural delivery routes in operation and serving 18,000,000 of our rural population. This system of rural delivery is costing us $35,000,000 per annum, and it does seem not unreasonable to ask for legislation which will give it its fullest development and bring from it its greatest possible good to the people.

The cost of putting into operation this system of limited parcels post will be met by the increased revenues arising from it. In fact, the Postmaster-General expressed the belief that the revenues arising from such a system will not only increase the salaries of fourth-class postmasters, because of augmented cancellations, but will at the same time bring such an increase in revenue to the Government as to go far in wiping out the present large postal deficit which confronts the country from year to year. In support of this idea he sets out in detail data which convince me that he is correct in this opinion, so that I have no fear that we are about to saddle upon the country an expensive system. On the contrary, I should look to it as a source of revenue.

Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact that Great Britain, Germany, France, and many other foreign countries have had for many years systems of general parcels post, and my information is that they have worked most admirably. I am not willing at this time, however, to go on record as favoring a general parcels post, but I do believe that it is wise that a limited parcels post should be inaugurated and that it should be done at once.

What is the opposition to such a system? Upon what reason is it founded? Who are those circulating petitions for signatures all over the country against it? When he was Postmaster-General, John Wanamaker said that "there are but four strong objections to the parcels post, and they are the four great express companies." I do not fully agree to this as it relates to a general parcels-post system, but I do agree to it as it relates to a limited parcels post, as advocated by the present Postmaster-General in his several reports upon the subject; and, I may add, that to the opposition of the express companies must be noted also the vigorous objections of the great mail-order houses.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Is it not a fact that the great mail-order houses of the country are the ones who are really in favor of the parcels post?

Mr. LEVER. Not at all. On the contrary, this plan looks to giving the merchants of local towns from which rural routes emanate the benefit of a reduced rate over merchants and companies of other cities and towns. In other words, the mailorder houses would not be able to compete with the local merchants upon the basis of the postage rates recommended by the Postmaster-General for a limited rural parcels post. The wisdom of discriminating in favor of the local merchant must be apparent to anyone who regards for a moment the danger involved in a system which would inevitably centralize the commerce of the country. Unfortunately there is too much of this at present, and every expedient should be adopted to check its growth.

But I insist, Mr. Chairman, that a great system should not be throttled and kept from consideration because, perchance, a few great corporations think they are to suffer on account of it. We are here to legislate in the interest of all the people, and here is a plan offered by which 18,000,000 people now patiently enduring many inconveniences may be helped, and it is our duty to afford the aid.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not attempt a further discussion of this most important proposition in the short time which has been allowed me, but I want to say that the opportunity is ours to authorize this experiment as is recommended, an experiment which will, in my humble opinion, bring a "direct and vital benefit to every man, woman, and child within reach of a rural route." We have been generous to the rural delivery system. It had its beginning in the teeth of the most violent opposition; it was begun as an experiment; it is now a settled policy. Who would destroy it? It is the belief of those of us supporting a limited parcels post that ten years from the first experiment with it it will prove as beneficial, as far-reaching in its influence for good, as helpful in making farm life happy and contented as has the great system of rural delivery. And, Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the House to the unfortunate tendency among our rural population to drift away from the country into the towns and cities, and this is especially true of our young men and women.

The reason is the desire for more conveniences, better schools, better roads, and a closer social contact upon the part of the rural population. Whenever the day comes that our country people become dissatisfied with the conditions which surround them, and find it necessary to move into towns and cities to find the relief they seek and which they should have, it will be an evil day for this Republic. Rural delivery has had much influence in checking this tendency; the rapid inauguration of rural telephones over the country is having a large influence in the same direction; and the establishment of a system of delivering small packages at a mere nominal cost at the gates of the rural population will, in my judgment, be a most vital agency to the same end. In fact, I doubt not that these three influences acting together, resulting in better roads, improved school facilities, easy communication, and greater conveniences for country life, will turn the tide, and the drift in the future will be from the city to the country; and this is a consummation devoutly to be wished. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Finley].

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, it is a matter of some regret to me that I may not be able to add very much to the sum of knowledge or information which, to my mind, the House is entitled to when a great bill carrying $234,534,370 is under dis-The postal service of this country is a great service. It is complicated, and in some respects that service is antiquated and out of date. There has been in existence in this country for some years a Postal Commission having for its purpose the remedying of the postal service and bringing that service up to date as a business proposition. That commission has labored long. They have worked faithfully, I have no doubt, and to-day we have the result of the labors of this commission in the form of a report, and, I may add, a bill containing 293 pages with 623 sections. It is hoped by some people that the recommendations of the Postal Commission may be carried out at this session of Congress.

I for one regret to say that I do not see how this can be accomplished. It is proposed to reorganize the postal service. It would be impossible in a speech of an occasion like this to even give a fair criticism of the bill, either favorably or unfavorably. I may say that in some of the recommendations of this commission I heartily approve, but there are others to which I am unalterably opposed. I do not believe that it is possible in the short session, in the time that will elapse from now until the 4th of March, to give a great subject like this proper consideration. I think that three months in committee is the shortest time possible in which to give the bill proper consideration. Believing this, I shall oppose in every way in my power the passage of the bill at this session. I believe that this subject should be thrashed out thoroughly in the Post-Office Committee room. The time will come, so we are told, after the 15th of March, when Congress will be called in extraordinary session, to give the Republican party an opportunity to reform the tariff, as they have promised to do.

Then, if precedent is to be followed, the other committees of the House, except the Committee on Ways and Means, will have little or nothing to do. There will be ample time for the Post-Office Committee to take up the work of the Postal Commission and consider the proposed revision, codification, and amendment of the postal laws of the United States. Amongst other things, there is contained in this volume-for that is what it amounts to-recommendations for new offices and an increase of salaries. I believe it is claimed that the increases in salaries amount to only $290,000. I do not agree to that proposition. I think that an analysis of this bill will show that the increases of salaries asked for amount to a much larger sum. Besides the new offices to be created, there is one that I have been studying to ascertain, if I can, the limitations of power conferred upon him—the director of posts. Up to this time, Mr. Chairman, I have been unable to approximate the power and authority that will be lodged in this individual.

The tendency of the times is, and I think harmfully so, to-ward centralization. The director of posts is to be the great tycoon of the Post-Office Department. I observe that the rural delivery service, a service that is of unbounded benefit to the people living in the rural sections, is attached to the bureau of post-offices, where I think it should not be, for the reason that this is the political division of the service. I will not go on with this discussion, but I want to say that to my mind there is not time at this session of Congress to take up this bill; and the statement has been made here that it is hoped that this will be done. I think that I should voice my opinion and give my reasons in a brief way why I do not believe it can be done.

Now, as to the bill under consideration, Mr. Chairman. I shall discuss very few items in that bill. The estimates of the Post-Office Department, I presume, given to us are officially passed on by the Postmaster-General. It is a fact that this individual, learned and patriotic and able man that he is, sometimes makes mistakes. He recommended $36,243,000 for the support of the rural-delivery service this year. In committee room when this proposition was thrashed out it was found that the amount was insufficient to support the service for the next fiscal year and to inaugurate any new service. In other words, if his recommendation had been carried out there would not have been 150 rural-delivery routes inaugurated next year. So the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads wisely--and I may say this is the first time there has been a unanimity of opinion as to what the proper amount should be—brings in a bill recommending $1,117,000 more money for the support of the rural-delivery service than was recommended by the Post-Office Department; so this accounts in some measure for the aggregate of money carried in the bill exceeding their estimate, and I think the increase a proper and necessary one.

Take the matter of salaries. We all know that to secure the best talent in the postal service you must have the very best employees obtainable, and merit and ability in a man engaged in this service are measured exactly as they are in other lines of business. You must pay people in order to secure the most efficient service. I think that Congress in recent years has been comparatively fair and liberal in this respect. I may say it is perhaps true that the rural carriers have not received the same consideration that has been shown to other employees of the postal service; but, Mr. Chairman, the time will come, and I hope shortly, when further and proper consideration will be given to them. I think that their salary should be at least $1,000 per annum. It was found impossible to do so at this session of Congress, for the reason, we have heard so often stated, that to-day the Government is running behind in its receipts; that they are smaller than the expenditures of the Government. and the prospect is that by the end of this fiscal year the deficit will amount to anywhere from $135,000,000 to $165,000,000.

I do not think that considerations like this should always control; but, Mr. Chairman, they are likely to control the majority party in power. We have made some recommendations for increases of salaries by way of promotions; but they were necessary, in the main, for the good of the service. Some small allowance has been made for clerks and carriers at first and second class offices. Some little consideration has been shown to employees in the Railway Mail Service, but, in my opinion, not enough. The question whether or not there should be an allowance or expense account, so to speak, provided by law for the railway mail clerks has been agitated for many years. This is a question that appeals to the fairness of Congress. facts as they are. Every railway mail clerk in the same grade receives the same salary. Now, it is true that some of the employees in the Railway Mail Service have a travel expense each year, amounting in some instances to as much as $360 a year. Others in the same grade have an expense account amounting to little or nothing, only a few dollars. This, in my judgment, should be remedied.

I may say that the United States is one of the few great nations of the world that does not recognize this discrepancy and does not make a proper allowance. England, France, and Germany do.

Mr. Chairman, it has been argued here that the salaries paid in this country are much greater than the salaries paid in the European countries mentioned by me. This is true, measured in dollars; but when you take into consideration the cost of living in the United States and the cost of living in England, France, and Germany, I state emphatically that the railway mail clerks of the United States receive a smaller wage than they do in those countries. The cost of living in this country, practically speaking, is twice as high as in Germany, nearly twice as great as in France, and a great deal larger than in England. So, when you consider the conditions here and abroad, my opinion is that Congress should make due and proper allowance in this respect. Whether Congress will do so at this session or not, I do not know. With the permission of the committee I will incorporate in my remarks some statements as to the average wage rate and allowance and cost of living in the United States, England, France, and Germany. Our neighbor, Canada, makes an allowance, and I may say that the United States is practically the only great country in the world that does not recognize the merit of this proposition. [Applause,]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Ollie M. James].

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday in a colloquy with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Overstreet] some dispute arose in the House as to the number of railway mail clerks killed or injured, or slightly injured, during the years 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907, and 1908. The statement I made yesterday that more than 2,900 mail clerks were killed or injured in the last five years was quickly challenged by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET]. I now desire to verify the statement I then made. I have a list here now, taken from the reports of the Post-Office Department, which I desire to incorporate in the RECORD, showing the number killed or injured, or slightly injured, during the five years mentioned, to be 2.940.

Following is the statement:

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Indiana

[Mr. Overstreet] now occupy the remainder of the time?
Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Overstreet] is not on the floor at present, but I understand he is to yield some time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks]. If the gentleman from Wisconsin is on the floor, I would suggest that he proceed. Otherwise I will yield, in conformance to the arrangement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Over-STREET], to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks] for ten minutes.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the committee to some statements that were made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] yesterday in referring to the sale of two ships to the United States Government to be used in connection with the Panama service. The ships were the Tremont and the Shawmut, of the Boston Shipping Company. They had been operated between Seattle and the Orient. were built for that purpose. Their original cost was between $1,800,000 and $1,900,000. It was estimated that their value at the time they were offered to the Government was this amount, less 3 per cent to be deducted each year that they had been in service. Therefore an appropriation of $1,500,000 was made to purchase them. There was no secrecy about this appropriation. It was introduced in the sundry civil bill last year by an amendment offered by the senior Senator from Massachusetts. The amendment was published in all the papers. It was acted upon by the Senate; it went to conference, was approved in conference, as the conference report was by the House, and therefore it received the approval not only of the Senate but of the House, acting through the conference report.

It was intimated by the gentleman from Illinois that those ships were not needed; that they could not be used in the service for which they were purchased; that they were unfit for service; and other things which I will not refer to. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, before these ships were purchased the Secretary of War requested the Secretary of the Navy to appoint a board to pass upon the condition of the ships and their value. They were surveyed by the inspectors of the Panama Canal Commission. Both boards reported in favor of the purchase of the ships. Then, before making the purchase, the Secretary of War offered the company owning them the cost of the ships less 6 per cent deduction for every year they had been in service. In other words, he paid for the ships delivered in New York—not delivered in Seattle—$1,150,000.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois forgot to state yesterday that in purchasing the ships the Secretary of War, instead of paying the amount of the appropriation, bought them for $1,150,000 at the port of New York, delivered there by the company selling them. That was $400,000 less than the appropriation, and it included the cost of bringing the ships around from Seattle to New York.

The gentleman from Illinois forgot to mention one other thing—that in purchasing the ships, they were bought for the Panama Canal Commission, to be used in that service as long as needed, and then to be transferred to the Navy Department, to be used as colliers or auxiliaries or some kind. Everyone knows that we employed 200,000 tons of foreign bottoms in order to send our fleet around to the Pacific coast. If we had owned these ships, and they had been in commission at that time, we would only have had to have chartered 180,000 tons of foreign bottoms for that cruise; and, further, I am informed that, based on the price at which they were purchased, the transportation of supplies for the Panama Canal Commission can be made to the Isthmus cheaper than the going rates for foreign tramps. Therefore, while it is regrettable that the company which built these ships and attempted to operate them found it necessary to make such a great sacrifice, the Government in buying them may be congratulated on obtaining a good bargain.

Furthermore, the gentleman said that there was not depth of water enough on the bar at Colon for the ships. I think he is mistaken. I went into that harbor more than 25 years ago in a ship drawing more water than do the Shavmut and Tremont. There was no difficulty at that time, and I doubt if there is any difficulty to-day. Furthermore, we are building the canal so that we may send the largest battle ships and the largest ships from one ocean to the other; if we are going to do that we must deepen the channel up to the entrance of the canal for that purpose, and therefore it need entail no unnecessary expenditure to use these ships, even if there were not water enough there at the present time.

Taking everything into consideration, Mr. Chairman, we may conclude that the Government made a good purchase in buying these ships; there was no secrecy in connection with it; everybody knew it was being done. The purchase had the sanction of the War Department at that time, and the succeeding War Department carried out the purchase.

Now, there is just one thing more I want to call to the attention of the committee, and that is the reference which the gentleman from Illinois made to the senior Senator from Massa-

I should not take the time of the committee to refer to the character of the charges made against him if they were not involved in the statement of facts to which I have just referred. His distinguished career for the past twenty-four years in the two Houses of Congress should have protected him from such unfounded charges. Many Massachusetts men dissent from his political views. He has, as have most men, created personal opposition, if not enmity, but the people of Massachusetts, whether friendly or otherwise, political foes and political adherents alike, would unanimously resent and repudiate any aspersion against his personal integrity, or any charge of collusion on his part of an attempt to misappropriate public funds. [Applause.]

If the other so-called "facts" in the conspiracy which the gentleman from Illinois developed yesterday are as unfounded as the charges to which I have referred, the whole speech deserves to be relegated to the realms of fancy.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee if he desires to use any further time? My understanding is that the gentleman has occupied all the time he desires. I merely wanted to confirm that idea; but I observe the gentleman is not on the floor.

Mr. WEBB. I think that is right.
Mr. OVERSTREET. I had expected the gentleman from South Carolina to occupy his full time, and had granted time to one of the gentlemen on this side after the gentleman from South Carolina finished; but he finished much sooner than was expected, and the gentleman to whom I have accorded time is not present. I therefore ask for the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. RAINEY. If the gentleman has more time at his disposal, I should like to have about five minutes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think I had better not yield except to those gentlemen to whom I have accorded time on this side. I ask that the reading of the bill be begun.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem allowance of inspectors in the field while actually traveling on official business away from their home, their official domicile, and their headquarters, at a rate to be fixed by the Postmaster-General, not to exceed $4$ per day, $325,000: Provided, That the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, allow inspectors per diem while temporarily located at any place on business away from their home, or their designated domicile, for a period not exceeding twenty consecutive days at any one place, and make rules and regulations governing the foregoing provisions relating to per diem: And provided further, That no per diem shall be paid to inspectors receiving annual salaries of $2,000 or more. or more.

Mr. GOEBEL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order on the paragraph just read, and I ask unanimous consent that this paragraph, with the point of order reserved, be passed without prejudice until we have concluded the reading of page 22.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I dislike that practice very much, and I can not grant unanimous consent to pass this matter. I do not know just what the gentleman's point of order is, nor do I know what his purpose is. Of course I have no right to ask him not to make his point of order, but I do not agree to pass the paragraph.

Mr. GOEBEL. I thought probably the gentleman would agree that for the present we pass it. There may be some difference of opinion as to some items in this bill that may be reconciled, and I would prefer at this time that this paragraph

Mr. OVERSTREET. I would rather not do it.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not know what the gentleman re-He has made no statement to me. fers to.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio insist on his point of order?

Mr. GOEBEL. I must insist on my point of order if the gentleman does not consent to the passing of this paragraph at

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio will state his point of order.

Mr. GOEBEL. My point of order is that there is no statutory law which authorizes this appropriation. Now, I will say, Mr. Chairman, that there are other provisions in this bill relating to traveling expenses and per diem of railway mail employees. It is my purpose, if you please, to call to the attention of the Chair and of the committee the fact that on page 20 of this bill there is a provision as follows:

For actual and necessary expenses of division superintendents, assistant division superintendents, and chief clerks, Railway Mail Service, and railway postal clerks, while actually traveling on business of the Post-Office Department and away from their several designated head-quarters, $23,000.

I want to be perfectly frank with the gentleman from Indiana, and will say to him that at the proper time I propose, if permitted, to offer an amendment to that provision, which amendment is as follows

Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GOEBEL. Certainly.
Mr. OVERSTREET. Do I understand the gentleman from Ohio to suggest that his proposition is to let this paragraph. pass over without prejudice or action for the purpose of later in the bill offering an amendment which he thinks is equally out of order, and that if I will not make the point of order against his amendment he will not make the point of order against this paragraph?

Mr. GOEBEL. If the gentleman will permit me, I will tell him just what I propose to do.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I desire to treat my colleague with the utmost courtesy and fairness, but I submit that he is not addressing himself to the point of order, and I can not see for the life of me why he considers this point of order in connection with a subsequent amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Indiana furnish the Chair reference to any law upon which he thinks this paragraph is based?

Mr. OVERSTREET. There is a statute, a permanent law, which is the real basis for this legislation, and I have just been making a search for it. Section 4017 of the Revised Statutes, I think it is. It is an old statute, authorizing the employment of special agents, and upon that statute has grown from year to year the enlargement of the number of special agents and a change of title from special agents to post-office inspectors. That has been recognized in permanent law, which is authority of law for items in the appropriation in the postal service for post-office inspectors. I have not before me the different decisions and citations. No one has ever during my term raised a point of order on this item and therefore I do point of order on this item, and therefore I do not happen to have all the data.

Mr. GOEBEL. I would rather have the gentleman furnish the data now

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have furnished the citation as far as I have it. I would like to have the gentleman disprove it.

Mr. GOEBEL. It is not incumbent upon me to disprove it. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Indiana should call the attention of the Chair to the exist-

Mr. OVERSTREET. I may not have given the Chair the right number of the section, but that is the nearest I have to it here.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not the right section. The section the gentleman cited refers to supervisors of election.

Mr. GOEBEL. Had not the gentleman from Indiana better let it go over?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will not let it go over. I do not think it is proper to enter into a bargain with anybody about an amendment that may come up subsequently in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Indiana states to the Chair that there is existing law which would warrant this appropriation-

Mr. OVERSTREET. That has been my understanding for four years. I regret that I can not point to the statute. And this citation given the Chair is the one the Clerk seems to have recorded for that section. I am quite sure there is a permanent statute authorizing the appointment of special agents in the postal service, and upon that statute appropriations have been made from year to year for the post-office inspection service.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman must call the Chair's attention to it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I quite agree that if I can not point it out, I fail in my point. But I decline to agree to let it pass on some hazy idea of some amendment which the gentleman desires sometime and somewhere to make.

Mr. GOEBEL. The gentleman did not permit me to make a statement. It seems, however, that it would not have influenced the gentleman if I had made it. Therefore we will abide by the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire a ruling on the point of order?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am willing that the Chair should rule. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk read as follows:

For traveling expenses of inspectors without per diem allowance, inspectors in charge, and the chief post-office inspector, and expenses incurred by inspectors not covered by per diem allowance, $35,000.

Mr. GOEBEL. To that, Mr. Chairman, I make a point of Mr. OVERSTREET. That is based upon the same statute to which I have already referred.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to clerks and employees at first and second class post-offices.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, after line 17, amend by inserting the following:
"That after June 30, 1909, employees in first and second class post-offices and in other post-offices having city delivery service, may be granted leave of absence with full pay for not exceeding thirty days in a fiscal year."

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think, Mr. Chairman, the amendment would not be in order at this point because the paragraph is not completed, but I reserve a point of order on it.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not see why it would not be in order

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is in order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. I did not understand the gentleman from Indiana to make a point of order, but to reserve it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will reserve the point of order. Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is simply to give the clerks and carriers the same advantages that are accorded to all other employees of the Government. It seems to me that the work performed by those in this branch of the government service is quite as important as that performed by those engaged in other branches of the service; and, if under existing laws or executive orders, employees in every other branch of the government service are entitled to thirty days' leave of absence at full pay, there is 20 good reason why that same rule ought not to apply to the people acting in the capacity of clerks and carriers in the Post-Office Department. Recommendations have been made more than once by the postal authorities in favor of the leave of absence proposed by the amendment. It seems to me that no better investment can be made by the Government than to give the men who are engaged in the arduous duties of clerks and carriers in the Post-Office Department a few days during the year in which to recuperate. When they come back from the vacation which this amendment would permit, if it should be adopted, they would be infinitely better qualified to perform the duties devolving upon them than they can be now, where they are kept constantly at work. I hope the gentleman in charge of the bill will not insist upon his point of order and that the amendment may be adopted.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I trust the gentleman will reserve his point of order for a moment or two, and I hope the gentleman will not insist upon it finally. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has said, there is no class of governmental employees that I know of who are so much in need and so deserving of the thirty days' leave which is granted to all other employees as the employees legislated about in this amendment. Everybody knows the arduous work that the letter carrier does. Any man who has seen the letter carrier in his daily travels through the great cities of this country, carrying great burdens of the mail that he is compelled to carry, knows that this leave would be no more than fair, no more than proper. Throughout the departments located in this city the thirty-day leave of absence is practically universal. We know that the clerks in the post-office are confined in close quarters, compelled to breathe the vitiated atmosphere. We whow that tuberculosis is rampant among that class of employees, and we know, too, that thirty days in a year would be of great benefit to them. There are no harder worked employees in the service of the Government, no more faithful, no more honest employees than the rank and file of the Post-Office Department, and I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I feel compelled to make the point of order that it is not authorized by law.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman permit a question before that point is made?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman explain why it is that there is discrimination between the employees of other departments and the employees of the Post-Office Department. and why this overworked class should not be entitled to the same leave as clerks in other departments?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, that is a pertinent question asked by the gentleman from Missouri, and I shall be very glad to explain briefly the development of this situation. I have forgotten the date of the law, but for a number of years there was no limit whatever to the period of vacation which might be accorded an employee of the Government by the head of one of the departments.

There was great favoritism and discrimination. Some employees were given longer than two months and some were given almost unlimited periods of vacation, and it was not for the purpose of granting the thirty-day leave of absence annually to clerks in the departments that the law was first enacted, but for the purpose of limiting and restricting the wholesale manner in which vacations had been given theretofore. That was what prompted the enactment of the statute fixing the period of vacations to employees in the departments at Washington at not exceeding thirty days. Many individuals, I am sure, have labored under the impression, quite erroneous, that the thirty days' period of vacation granted employees of the departments at Washington was a statute which originally meant thirty days' leave of absence with pay, but instead of that it was a law passed for the purpose of limiting the wholesale manner in which many of the heads of the departments granted unneces-sarily longer leaves of absence for vacation periods than thirty days. There was not at that time any provision for leaves of absence to employees in the service in the field.

I have felt that there was on the face of things an apparent discrimination in favor of the vacation period to the employees at Washington, but I believe, Mr. Chairman, the proper way to remedy that would be to further limit the period of vacation to the employees in the departments, rather to enlarge the period of vacation to employees in the field. There is a certain element of sympathy which goes out from all of us toward any person who is employed and who ought to have some period of vacation with pay. Congress has provided that in these two instances, although with an apparent discrimination in regard to the employees in the field, that the period so given be fifteen days, but the Post-Office Committee a year ago voluntarily recommended to the House that that period of vacation should be exclusive of Sundays and holidays, which has increased it two days, because it is impossible to give fifteen days' leave of absence without striking two Sundays, so that the period of vacation to the employees of the postal service in the field is now at least seventeen days instead of fifteen days.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Is there not also a thirty-day period of sick leave given the clerks here in Washington which they get with pay also?

Yes; there is a so-called "sick-leave Mr. OVERSTREET.

period," but that grew up in the same way.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. That applies to the Washington clerks only?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Exactly. That was part of the original plan, the head of the department having unlimited authority in extending periods of vacation and of sick leave, and prompted the statute to make it not to exceed thirty days.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. That does not apply to clerks of any other department outside of the city of Washington?

Mr. OVERSTREET. No; it does not. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant cashiers, superintendents of delivery, assistant superintendents of money order, assistant superintendents of malls, assistant superintendents of registry, assistant superintendents of stations, book-keepers, cashiers, chief mailing clerks, chief stamp clerks, special clerks, finance clerks, foremen of crews, private secretaries, superintendents of carriers, superintendents of malls, superintendents of money order, superintendents of registry, superintendents of second-class matter, and superintendents of stations, 630, at not exceeding $1,300 each.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, on page 10, line 2, to strike out the word "thirty" and insert the word "fifty-nine."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Page 10, line 2, strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty-nine."

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, the reason I offer this amendment is this: There are 5 superintendents of stations in the city of New York who now only receive the maximum clerk's salary of $1,200. There are 24 assistant superintendents of stations in the city of New York who now only receive the maximum clerk's pay of $1,200. Some of those stations in which these assistant superintendents serve have over a million dollars of receipts, and yet this bill contains no provision, so far as I am aware, by which any of these men can receive any increased compensation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from New York will permit, I will state that he is laboring under a misapprehension. This bill provides for promoting 139 to $1,300. The gentleman can have assurance of that fact; and I believe, with that assurance, he will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. PARSONS. With that assurance, I will withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant cashiers, assistant superintendents of delivery, assistant superintendents of mails, assistant superintendents of money order, assistant superintendents of registry, assistant superintendents of stations, bookkeepers, chief stamp clerks, clerks, finance clerks, foremen of crews, private secretaries, superintendents of carriers, superintendents of second-class matter, and superintendents of stations, 6,961, at not exceeding $1,200 each.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last That is the item in regard to the number of $1,200 clerks. Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman means just clerks?

I think that item only covers $1,200 clerks, and want to ask the gentleman if he will not state to the committee just what he has included in this item?

Mr. OVERSTREET. As to the provision in that item?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That item, Mr. Chairman, provides for appropriations sufficient to care for all the clerks of that grade who will be in the service on the last day of the fiscal year and the promotion of 50 per cent of the clerks of the $1,100 grade.

Mr. BENNET of New York. If the gentleman will yield, I will say, as I understand the gentleman, it provides also for such incidental promotions as might come up.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, certainly; whatever incidental promotions may come up. I may say, Mr. Chairman, while at that point, that I think the committee has erred on the side of liber. ality in the estimates of employees in first and second class offices, and I refer to both offices. I really believe that the total sum could safely be reduced and still have ample money for that purpose. Now, then, to explain a little further.

The total amount, which will be read on page 11, will be sufficient to pay all the salaries of all employees in offices of the first and second classes who are in the service on the last day of the current fiscal year and provide for the promotion under the automatic scale of the classification act of all classes, of all grades below the highest grade in these offices based upon the service in the next lower grade of at least twelve months and an efficiency record satisfactory to the department and a pro-vision for the promotion of 50 per cent of the clerks of first-class offices of the eleven-hundred-dollar grade, and in addition to that enough money for 2,250 additional clerks, and, in my judgment, have still remaining over and above all of these requirements some $250,000 or $300,000.

Mr. MANN. Well, that is not such a very large sum out of the total; that would not be a very large surplus out of

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, no; but I am saying, counting at the maximum all of the employees at their salaries on the 30th day of next June, counting all promotions that are possible under the classification act, and counting all new employees necessary which ought to account for all service, there is still a very liberal surplus remaining.

Mr. MANN. I did not intend to go into that; but if the gentleman has the figures, and he may have them, I wish he might tell us what the total sum would be if you multiplied the salary by the number provided for.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have not that at hand. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], who may have the data.

Mr. MANN. You provide for a number of clerks at a certain salary?

Mr. OVERSTREET. If the gentleman will pardon an interruption, I think I see his trouble.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman himself went into it. Otherwise

Mr. MANN. The gentleman himself went into it. Otherwise I should not have referred to that particular thing.

Mr. OVERSTREET. What I mean is that you can not multiply the total number by the total salaries, because they are not all appointed on the first day of the year.

Mr. MANN. I understand that part of it. I asked the gentleman, if he had the figures, what would be the sum if we did multiply the solary by the number provided for because what multiply the salary by the number provided for, because what you do in the first place is to get it, and then reduce it on some scale.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I rise to the negative of the motion to strike out the last word. My purpose is to ask a question or two of the chairman of the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads. The chairman has just explained to us that this bill provides for all the automatic promotions in the highest class post-offices and all the automatic promotions in the second-class post-offices, which means that everybody who is going up in the regular scale provided by law will receive the money to which the statute entitles them. In addition, the chairman has pointed out that the bill promotes 50 per cent of the highest grade clerks in the first-class offices. In other words, as to those clerks in first-class offices who have risen as far as they can automatically the bill gives to 50 per cent of them a rise of a hundred dollars each to the sixth grade, but it gives no such rise to the corresponding clerks in the secout it gives no such rise to the corresponding clerks in the second-class offices. Am I correct that, as far as the second-class offices are concerned, there is no provision made for the promotion of 50 per cent of the highest grade clerks?

Mr. OVERSTREET. If the gentleman was listening he heard me say that in addition to all of that there was remaining a surplus of $250,000 for these several items to be applied under the law.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. For such purposes as that amount may be put to?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Under the law; and in my judgment that amount ought to be reduced.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amend-

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads if it is instructions relative to rating of post-office clerks and carriers as to efficiency. I think it may be of interest to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET]?

There was no objection.

The document referred to is as follows:

KEEPING EFFICIENCY RECORDS—DEPARTMENT INSTRUCTIONS RELATIVE TO RATING OF POST-OFFICE CLERKS AND CARRIERS.

The following factors shall be taken into account in rating clerks and carriers on efficiency and faithfulness:

1. The average speed with which they do their work from day to day; in other words, the quantity of work they turn out.

2. Their accuracy in performing that work.

3. Their faithfulness in observing the postal regulations and published office rules, including their punctuality and regularity in attendance.

4. Their familiarity with the regulations and instructions pertaining their work, and in the case of distributers with their distribution

QUANTITY OF WORK PERFORMED.

Comparative ratings shall be given, on a scale of 100, on the quantity of work employees turn out. Such ratings shall be based on observation of the employees' work, supplemented when practicable by actual counts of the amount done during representative brief periods. The clerks and carriers who set the standard for the office with respect to quantity of work should be rated 100, while those who do enough work to justify their promotion only on condition that their records for accuracy and faithfulness are at least average should receive a rating of 70 for quantity. Employees in the lower grades should be rated somewhat more liberally than those who have had longer service. Recommendations for ratings on quantity of work shall be submitted to the postmaster by supervisory officers on Form 3990 in duplicate. After completion in the manner described below the original copy shall be placed on file in a jacket or envelope containing all the papers relating to the employee's efficiency, while the duplicate copy shall be sent to the employee as a notice of his rating.

ACCURACY AND FAITHFULNESS.

sent to the employee as a notice of his rating.

ACCURACY AND FAITHFULNESS.

Ratings on accuracy and faithfulness shall be given by imposing demerits for errors, for misconduct or unfaithfulness (including tardiness, failure to register on time recorder, etc.), and for absence in excess of thirty days in one fiscal year when not due to illness or other unavoidable cause. For every ten such demerits 1 per cent shall be deducted from the rating given for quantity of work in order to obtain the combined rating on quantity of work, accuracy, and faithfulness.

In imposing demerits postmasters shall observe the schedule on pages 5 to 8 hereof, unless there are extenuating or aggravating circumstances that make the specified penalty clearly excessive or inadequate. However, an employee who is required to perform several distinct classes of duties—as a "general utility" clerk, or a clerk at a small station or second-class office—should be given fewer demerits for any given error than one who is regularly assigned to a single class of duties. In the case of such employees one-half of the specified penalty will often be sufficient. If a grave offense is repeated, it should ordinarily be penalized more heavily the second time than the first. Errors and offenses not listed in the schedule should have the same penalties as listed delinquencies of the same gravity. In deciding on the penalty for errors not listed both the degree of carefulness indicated and the seriousness of the probable consequences should be taken into consideration.

Employees shall be notified on Form 3991 of every error and offense reported to have been committed by them and shall be given an opportunity to submit any desired explanation. This form shall be filled out in duplicate. After considering the reply the supervisory officer shall submit both copies of the form to the postmaster with a recommendation for a penalty. When final action has been taken the number of demerits imposed for errors and the number imposed for misconduct, etc., shall be t

CASE EXAMINATIONS.

All employees engaged in distributing mail shall be examined at least once in each year on their knowledge of their distribution schemes. Such examinations shall consist in sorting addressed cards representing all the possible separations called for by the schemes. Postmasters whose clerks have not been examined heretofore should apply to the First Assistant Postmaster-General for instructions.

The results of case examinations shall be reported on Form 3989 in duplicate, the carbon copy of the report being sent to the employee concerned and the original being filed in his jacket.

A record of 95 per cent correct and an average of 16 cards correctly thrown per minute shall be required on case examinations. Clerks making lower records shall be reexamined, and those finally falling to attain the required standards shall not be promoted. At the end of each year the results of the year's case examinations shall be averaged, and clerks making an average of more than 95 per cent correct and 16 cards correct per minute shall have their general yearly records increased 1 per cent for each additional per cent correct and one-fourth per cent for each additional card correct per minute.

EXAMINATIONS ON REGULATIONS AND INSTRUCTIONS.

of the Committee on the Post-Omce and Post-Indeas II it is not a fact that these promotions often, although they are called "automatic," are made on efficiency records?

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is quite correct, Mr. Chairman; upon the efficiency records and also upon twelve months' service in the next lower grade.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert as part of my remarks the department.

those finally failing to attain the required standard shall not be promoted. Employees having average records for the year higher than 95 per cent shall receive 2 per cent credit on their general yearly ratings for each 1 per cent additional.

GENERAL RATING.

GENERAL RATING.

When an employee becomes eligible for promotion, his supervisory officer shall be called on for a recommendation as to the rating to be given him on quantity of work performed. This recommendation shall be submitted to the postmaster on Form 3990 in duplicate. Both copies of the form shall then be filled out from the records on file in the employee's jacket so as to show (1) the approved rating on quantity of work; (2) the number of demerits charged for errors and omissions, for misconduct, tardiness, etc., and for unnecessary absence in excess of thirty days in a fiscal year; (3) the average of the examination records for the year and the credits due the employee for records higher than the required standards; and (4) the resultant general rating. When an employee has served in a grade for six months a copy of Form 3990 shall be similarly filled out and sent to him as a preliminary notice of his standing. The difference between the rating shown by this preliminary notice and 60 (the required rating) will indicate the maximum number of demerits that can be charged against the employee during the remainder of the year without preventing his promotion, provided that his rating on quantity of work performed and his examination record do not improve. If the question of restoring an employee's salary after a reduction is considered and his general rating made up at the end of one quarter, the number of demerits charged against him during that period must be multiplied by 4 in order to obtain the correct number of points to be deducted from his rating for quantity of work, because he has had but one-fourth the usual time in which to commit errors and offenses. Similarly, if an employee's advancement is considered after three quarters the number of demerits charged against him must be multiplied by 2.

After an employee has reached the highest clerk or carrier grade, ratings shall be made up for him at the end of each fiscal year and preliminary notices of his standing sent him at the end of each cale

REQUIREMENTS FOR PROMOTION, ETC.

Clerks and carriers in the grades from $600 to $1,000 in first-class offices and from $600 to $900 in second-class offices shall not be promoted to the next higher grade if their general rating is less than 60. Promotions will be made to the $1,200 clerk and carrier grade at first-class offices and to the $1,100 clerk and carrier grade at first-class offices and to the $1,100 clerk and carrier grade at deast offices when vacancies occur by death, resignation, removal, or reduction, and when additional positions in those grades are authorized by Congress, the employees who maintain the highest degree of efficiency being advanced; but no employee shall be promoted to the $1,200 grade if his rating is less than 70 or retained in that grade if his rating falls below 60; and no employee in a second-class office shall be promoted to the $1,100 grade if his rating is less than 70 or retained in that grade if his rating falls below 60.

If an employee's general rating is less than 50 when a statement of his record is made up as directed above, or if at any time he has 500 demerits charged against him, he shall be reduced to the next lower grade. If an employee's general rating is less than 30 when a statement of his record is made up, or if at any time he has 700 demerits charged against him, the case shall be submitted to the department, with a recommendation relative to his removal from or retention in the service.

with a recommendation relative to his removal from or retention in the service.

If an employee has been absent for any cause for ninety days or more during the year following his appointment or his last promotion, he shall not become eligible for the next promotion until the completion of another quarter's service. If he has been absent one hundred and fifty days or more, he shall not be eligible for promotion until the completion of two more quarters' service; if two hundred and forty days or more, not until the completion of three more quarters' service. The above instructions and the accompanying forms are designed primarily for the larger offices, but it is believed that postmasters at smaller offices should be able to adapt them to the local conditions.

Any difficulties encountered in the operation of the plan should be reported to the First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Approved.

MANN In this connection may I make a further

Mr. MANN. In this connection, may I make a further inquiry of the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Over-We have pending before the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service an annuity retirement or retirement annuity bill, one of the features of which proposes to take a portion of the salary whenever a promotion is made, which as applied to the post-office clerks and carriers receiving automatic increases, would, I think, take one-half of the first three months' increase of salary. Would the gentleman, who has more experience in post-office matters than anybody else, think that that would be likely to work satisfactorily?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I confess I have not read the proposition. Generally speaking, I have rather opposed the civil pension list. I think it is foreign to our institutions and would not be easily engrafted upon them, but, assuming some sort of a civil pension list, I should say that the suggestion the gentleman has made as coming from that provision of law would be a very fair proposition. That is to say, if they took one-third of the amount of the first year's promotions, it would be a minimum, in my judgment, of what might be taken.

But I do not think it would be satisfactory to the employee. Does the gentleman think that the employees now consider that under the law they are just as much entitled after the first period expires to $800 salary as they are during the first period to the $600 salary?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Undoubtedly; and before the sun goes down they think they are entitled to the next promotion.

Mr. MANN. When the time comes. Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes, sir. So I do not think that would satisfy them.

Mr. WANGER. I want to ask a question of the gentleman. Have you any satisfactory evidence that the order for a fair, uniform efficiency record is being administered in the postoffices?

Mr. OVERSTREET. We have not been able to obtain information from all the offices, but that was the distinct understanding obtained from departmental officials from inquiries made by members of our committee as to the way they said they had undertaken to have uniform, fair, efficient records in the various offices, and that they did not know of any unfair administration. Personally I do not know of any

Mr. WANGER. Do you know to what extent they have investigated the service?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Only what they say. That they have called upon the postmasters for information, and they base their answers to inquiries upon those answers of the postmasters. In my judgment it would be wholly unfair and unwise to provide for an automatic promotion without any efficiency record. A lack of requirement of an efficiency record would take away all the stimulus and encouragement for proper work. I hate to stop and criticise the classification bill. I did not favor it as drawn. I think some of its chief promoters must have lived to see that they were then mistaken; but in the condition of affairs throughout the country, it was impossible to stem the tide for the bill providing for the increases at that time in the classification act. I think it ought to be continued for a while until a proper trial of its administration shows how it will operate and the inequalities have been developed, and then give some opportunity to make some reasonable recommendation for their cure.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant superintendents of stations, clerks, private secretaries, superintendents of carriers, superintendents of second-class matter, and superintendents of stations, 7,315, at not exceeding $1,100 each.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 16, strike out "three" and insert "eight."

Mr. OVERSTREET. I reserve the point of order on that until I can hear it explained.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. OVERSTREET. May I, before the gentleman gets into his argument, make an inquiry for my own information? What is the purpose of that amendment?
Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. It is my purpose to explain it to the House.

Not your purpose, but the purpose of Mr. OVERSTREET. the amendment, confined to one particular class mentioned in this paragraph?

Mr. KELIHER. Mr. Chairman, can we have the amendment read again?

The amendment was again read.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Now, Mr. Chairman, the exact effect of that amendment, if adopted, will be to promote 500 clerks who are now in the fourth grade, receiving $1,000 salary, to the fifth grade, receiving $1,100 salary. By a comparison of this bill with the Treasury estimates, the following situation has developed itself: By a provision of the section, which has just been read, the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads has gone beyond the recommendation of the Treasury estimates, and has provided for the promotion of 50 per cent of the highest grade clerks in the first-class offices. other words, 50 per cent of those now receiving $1,100 will this coming year receive a salary of $1,200.

There are two thousand nine hundred and odd clerks at present receiving $1,100. The promotion of 50 per cent of them would promote 1,500 individuals. That is provided for in the section which we were discussing a few minutes ago. But there is no corresponding provision in the bill for the promotion of the highest grade clerks in the second-class offices, as anyone can see by comparing this paragraph with the Treasury estimates. There are 953 such clerks now receiving a thousand dollars in second-class offices. If my amendment is adopted, 50 per cent of them will be promoted from $1,000 to $1,100, just as the provision reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads promotes 50 per cent of the highest grade in the first-class offices from $1,100 to $1,200.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Certainly. Mr. OLMSTED. As I understand the gentleman's amendment, it seems to me it would hardly make up the difference to give the promotion to second-class clerks. It would only make a total increase of $500 in the appropriation.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I do not think the gen-tleman has read it correctly. I change the number of individuals to be promoted.

Mr. OLMSTED. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I see it is clerks; I thought it was dollars.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. There are 500 of those to be promoted.

Mr. PRINCE. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. Will you please state to the House what offices are first class and what offices are second class, and what effect your proposed amendment has upon the clerks in the first-class office and what in the second-class office?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, the qualification necessary for an office to be rated as first class, substantially speaking, is the annual receipt of revenues of $40,000,

Mr. WANGER. Not all. Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit me-

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. From ten to forty thou-

Mr STAFFORD. If the gentleman desires to enlighten the House as to the different classes

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I have not yielded, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is entitled to the floor. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, all offices with over $40,000 receipts are first-class offices. I am uncertain as to the dividing line between second and third class offices, but I think it is $10,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say for the information of the House that the dividing line between second and third class offices is $8,000, and between third and fourth class offices is $1,800 gross receipts a year.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think the members of this committee understand exactly what is meant by "automatic promotion." Neither do they understand the effect of what is proposed by the committee in this bill. The statute under which the clerks and carriers in post-offices are organized provides six grades of clerks, carriers of the highest grade being the $1,200 grade, the next $1,100, and so on down. The law provides that as soon as a man enters as a clerk or a carrier he begins at the bottom grade, and year by year, if he is efficient, he works up. When he has reached the fourth grade, which is $1,000, if he is in a second-class office, then his promotion stops so far as automatic promotion is concerned. When he reaches the fifth, or $1,100 grade in first-class offices, then he stops, so far as automatic promotion is concerned. In other words, the law says that the Post-Office Department shall promote automatically in the first and second class offices until a clerk reaches $1,100 in one and $1,000 in the other. In addition to the regular automatic promotions, the law provides, permissively, that in case of meritorious service the department may promote to the sixth grade in a first-class office-the $1,200 grade-or it may promote to the fifth grade and even to the sixth grade in a second-class office.

In other words, Congress established the general principle that $100 should measure the difference between the cost of living and the responsibility of the highest grade clerk in the large city and the highest grade clerk of equal responsibility and equal length of service in the small city. The adoption of the paragraph which was discussed by the gentleman from Illinois, coupled with the rejection of the proposed amendment, will establish this principle, namely, that there shall be $200 instead of $100 difference in the salary of the highest grade clerks in the first-class offices on the one hand, and in the salary of the highest grade clerks in the second-class offices on the other. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the sum of $200 far more than measures any possible difference in the cost of living in the respective cities. Taking the most extreme cases that I could find, I am strongly of the belief that $100, as now provided in the statute of 1907, far more than exceeds the measure of difference in the cost of living in any two cities in this country. If the principle is once established of $200 difference, it will be very hard to reverse it in the future.

Mr. PARSONS. I should like to ask the gentleman, have there been any investigations into the cost of living in cities with second-class post-offices? Has the gentleman any figures on which he bases that statement?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I have no I think it is well known that no figures have ever been compiled. I have in my district, however, the city of Salem and the city of Beverly, separated by a bridge. I know from personal observation that the cost of living in those two cities is substantially the same. If this provision goes through without my amendment the salaries of the highest-grade clerks in the Salem office will be $200 a year higher than the salaries of men in the Beverly office, who do exactly the same work and have exactly the same responsibility.

Does the gentleman argue that the cost of Mr. PARSONS. living in a city of the second class is as great as it is in a city of the first class, like Boston or New York or Chicago? And is so, has he any statistics to prove it?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I endeavored to answer that same question before. It is only a matter of general impression. I can say in a general way that in country towns clothing is a little more expensive than it is in Boston, that butcher's meat is a little more expensive, that country produce costs a little less, that rents are a little less in small cities, and that transportation is sometimes nothing a day instead of 10 cents a day.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Why would it not be a good plan to incorporate two towns into one office, and then all the clerks would get pay at the higher salary?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. As I have only a few moments left, I do not want to devote myself to any academic proposition.

Mr. PARSONS. I would like to ask the gentleman if the item of rent is not a large item for the residents of cities, and is not the item of rent a very small item for residents of smaller towns?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I think each Member of this House understands the point I have raised, and each will decide for himself, according to his own good sense, whether or not there is $200 difference in the respective costs of living. I call the attention of the committee to this additional fact: In this bill every other class of clerk is getting promotion: every third, second, or lower grade clerk gets his automatic promotion, while 50 per cent of the top grade in the big offices get their promotion in this bill. The only class which gets no promotion is the class of high-grade clerks in the second-class If my amendment is adopted, I invite the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that it will be necessary to amend the next paragraph by striking out the words "five hundred."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes; but I hope that we will not reach that point.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist upon his point of order?

Mr. OVERSTREET. No; Mr. Chairman, in view of the explanation made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, I shall not insist on the point of order.

Mr. TIRRELL was recognized. Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire if the gentleman from Massachusetts is opposed to the amendment?

Mr. TIRRELL. I am not.
Mr. OVERSTREET. It seems to me that some one should be recognized in opposition to the amendment,

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask to be recognized in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, for the information of the House I wish to call attention to the number of first and second class offices that were in existence on the 1st of July of the past year. There were 384 first-class offices and 1,595 second-class offices In the classification bill that was passed two years ago automatic promotions were provided in the first-class offices to the $1,100 grade, from $600 to $1,100; in second-class offices, from $600 to $1,000. In the bill that was reported to the House, which was the best judgment of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, we reaffirmed the then-existing law—that clerks of second-class offices should be limited to a salary of $1,000. We did it after deliberate consideration, because we believed that clerks in second-class offices

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. STAFFORD. I will not yield until after I finish this point. I say we did it after deliberate consideration, because we believed that $1,000 was the maximum pay that could be expected to be paid for that character of service. The secondclass offices comprise those where the gross receipts are between $40,000 and $8,000, and are located in cities with a population varying from a few hundred people to only a few thousand. not generally exceeding more than 10,000 or 15,000 people. The contrast between the second-class and the main first-class offices was so marked—the difference of work, the difference of re-sponsibility, the cost of living—that we thought that compulsory promotion should go automatically up to $1,100 in the first-class offices, and to enable the clerks, when the Treasury conditions warranted and the Congress approved, to be promoted to the highest grade of $1,200.

Anyone that is acquainted with the character of the work of clerks in first and second class offices knows that the clerks in the first-class offices have much more onerous and responsible duties than those in the second-class offices. I represent a district that has both first and second class offices, and I am in a position to state that the character of service is much heavier in the first-class offices than it is in second-class offices, and it is ridiculous to contend, even though you may find some few cases in the twilight zone where there are offices barely over the second-class gradation and those which are just below the firstclass office, that the work in first-class offices is not more responsible, exacting, and intensive.

Now, the committee in this Congress recognizing the extraordinary deficit that is confronting us, because of the reduced postal receipts since the panic in October, 1907, believes that we were not warranted in increasing the salaries of clerks of the second-class offices beyond the $1,000 grade. Adopt the proposi-tion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] and you will, without any regard to the service, compel the compulsory promotion of 50 per cent, and the next year the argument will be made by a certain number of eleven hundred grade clerks in these offices that they, in turn, are entitled to go to twelve hundred grade.

I claim there is in the great majority of cases a greater difference than $200 in workmanship, in efficiency, in intensity of employment, in cost of living, and in all these other elements that go to distinguish between the second-class and the first-class office. Call to mind, any gentleman here, the salary that is being paid to the cashier of a bank in some of these towns where second-class offices are located, and in many instances it will be found that even though the cashier may have some money invested in the bank he is not receiving this maximum salary of $1,000 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Who is there to contend that we are not doing well and adequately by the clerks in second-class offices when we pay them a maximum salary of a thousand dollars a year? Yea, more., I wish to direct the attention of the House to the fact that whereas before we passed this classification rule the clerks in second-class offices on entering the service began at $500, we wiped away that grade and fixed the salary for all to enter at $600. All these clerks, numbering 963 in the second-class offices, that are to-day receiving $1,000 have been promoted in the past two or three years, the majority of them successively, from $600 to $800, from $800 to $900, and from $900 to $1,000.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] lays the burden of his argument upon the fact that as we have singled out 50 per cent of the clerks in the first-class offices where the conditions are very meritorious, and claims that we should parallel this policy and adopt a like course in the case of clerks in second-class offices, where there is no warrant for increasing the salary beyond $1,000. In first-class offices, such as New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Boston, and all the other large cities, anyone who is acquainted with the character of the service knows that in those offices the clerks must know the scheme of many routes to properly arrange the mail for dispatch, and that those clerks are occupied much more of their regular time and that their work is more intensified in this distribution of mails than the clerk in small second-class post-offices. It would be ridicurior responsibilities receiving that same compensation, Mr. COX of Indiana. Suppose that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts prevails, can the gentleman inform us as to how much additional cost that would add lous for us to increase the salary to $1,100 in a place of only 600 people or a couple of thousand inhabitants, when in no instance in private life are people who are employed under supeto the Post-Office Department per year?

Mr. STAFFORD. It would add $50,000, because it would provide for 500 clerks, with increase in salary from $1,000 to $1,100, but it is not a question of amount so much as it is a question of principle. The committee has been attacked in its policy the gentleman because we have recognized meritorious cases in first-class offices, where the cost of living is greater and where the work is superior, to maintain the personnel of the service, by providing for 50 per cent, that therefore, even though there is no demand from the clerks in these smaller offices, we should promote 50 per cent of them from $1,000 to

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentle-man whether it is not a fact that clerks in second-class offices have to undergo the same examination and have to work the same number of hours a day as clerks in first-class offices?

Mr. STAFFORD. They have to undergo the same examina-tion and they have to work the same number of hours, but the intensity of the work is not to be compared with that of the clerks in the first-class offices. The clerks in the first-class offices are obliged to be occupied almost all of the time, generally, in distributing the mail and applying themselves closely, while in the second-class offices, as we all know, the work does not require close and continuous application.

Mr. OLMSTED. I have in mind a second-class office at Steelton, Pa., which practically adjoins Harrisburg, and is a town of some 20,000 inhabitants. The cost of living is practically the same as in Harrisburg, and the clerks have to work just as hard as in Harrisburg.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are some offices in that twilight zone where we may find some parallel case to an office of the first class, just across the line, but it is not a fair example when you consider the condition of these 1,500 or more offices of the second class which are located in smaller localities, and where the population is only perhaps 2,000 or a few hundred, to the average first-class office located in cities of several hundred thousand and some few of several million inhabitants.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes longer.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman to say that the clerk in the second-class office has the same length of hours and the same work to perform and the same schemes to learn as in the first-class offices.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no; I answered the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he had generally the same examination and generally the same hours of employment, but not the same character and amount of work.

Mr. MANN. Take a clerk of the ordinary first-class office. where there are half a dozen or more railroads coming into the town. Does he have the same schedule to learn as in a secondclass office where there is one railroad, where the mail must come one way or the other, as where he has to know the scheme of the city as he must and he does in a large city, where every clerk must know the scheme of the entire city?

Mr. DRISCOLL. How long do you think it would take a clerk to get from where he lived in your city to the post-office? Mr. MANN. From my district it would take about an hour.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Then that is so much extra time.

Mr. MANN. It will take him more time to learn the scheme that he has to know than I or the gentleman from New York could devote in the rest of our lives at our age.

Mr. STAFFORD. Following the argument advanced by the gentleman from Illinois as to the number of railroads coming into a first-class office, and the number of railroads that enter a second-class office in these large cities, the railroads entering a large city bring the mails continuously and keep the clerks occupied all the time, while, generally speaking, in the second-class offices they have lapses whereby, although on duty, their work is not so arduous as that in a first-class office. Now I yield to the gentleman from Illinois

Mr. SABATH. Is it not also a fact that clerks in the firstclass offices are doing 25 per cent more work than in the second-class offices, and some of them 100 per cent more? Mr. STAFFORD. I have no data on that score, but I would be inclined to accept that statement. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts who yielded to me.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman ever examined the time sheets of the clerks in first and second class offices?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; but I am acquainted generally with the time sheets of the Milwaukee office.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. What is the average of the time sheets of the Milwaukee office?

Mr. STAFFORD. About eight and a half hours. Sometimes in a rush season it averages much more, nine to ten, but the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads have endeavored to provide sufficient clerks so that they would work no longer than eight hours in any office.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I have been pleased to present to the attention of the Post-Office Department more than once time sheets in second-class offices running as high as eleven hours.

Mr. STAFFORD. There may be exceptional conditions where that is the case, but the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads, following the recommendation of the Post-Office Department, as stated in the hearings, that it is their aim to have the clerks employed but eight hours, has provided for a sufficient number of clerks so as to have clerks work on that basis.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. May I ask another question, and then I have finished?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman has pointed out the amendment I offered will cost $50,000, and that their estimates did not provide for that promotion. Now, do their estimates provide for the promotions which the committee have provided in their bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, I am taking exception to the argument which the gentleman advanced in his speech, and, as I said before, the question is not so much of dollars and cents as principle. If the gentleman wants me to answer the question as to the amount it will cost to promote 50 per cent of the clerks in the first-class offices, I will be able to furnish him that information if he does not have it at hand.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I had Mr. STAFFORD. It will cost $150,000. I have it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. That is correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Wilson], who was kind enough to ask for an extension of my time.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. I understood from the gentleman that it was the intention of the Post-Office Department and of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to make it so that post-office employees should only work eight hours a day. That I understood to be the gentleman's statement.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is supported by the hearings before our committee last year, when the question was asked of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, and by the hearings of

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. If that is true, why is it that the Post-Office Committee has not provided as many clerks as the Post-Office Department asks, for the purpose of giving these post-offices all over the country more men, in order that the hours of work may be reduced?

Mr. STAFFORD. The Post-Office Committee, until the present year, have always followed the recommendation of the Post-Office Department in granting them the full quota of increase of clerks that they requested, and this year in the estimate that is presented we granted them their full quota, based upon their revised estimate as to what would be needed, predicated upon the reduction of postal business—by reason of the postal business of the country not advancing as fast as it did during the former years when the business was normal. When the estimates were prepared, the officials based their calculations on an 8 per cent increase in postal business, but the past six months show that in the 50 largest cities the revenues increased 3.65 per cent, or less than half they estimated. Accordingly, the committee believes it has provided for ample clerks for increase and growth of the postal service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and the paragraph close in ten minutes, five minutes to be used by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Tirrell] and five minutes by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Over-STREET] asks unanimous consent that all debate-

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modified request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. WANGER. I object, Mr. Chairman. Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to make it eighteen minutes, eight minutes to be used by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Tirrell], two minutes by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER], and eight minutes by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Over-STREET | asks unanimous consent that all debate on the paragraph and amendment thereto be closed in eighteen minutes, eight minutes of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Tirrell], two minutes by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER], and eight minutes by himself. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Chairman, last year when this matter was under consideration, I presented to this House some facts which had been gathered together by the Post-Office Association of New England relative to the details of this particular subject under consideration, especially to that part of it that has been referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] as to the amount of work and the hours of labor comparatively between the first and second class offices. Now, that data showed, and it is in the Record of last year under the discussion of this bill, and all can refer to it, and about which there can be no question, that, taking it all together, the clerks and the carriers in the second-class offices throughout this country work longer hours, carry heavier weights, and do more work than the same clerks and carriers of the first-class offices of this country. All that it is necessary to do is to take any fair second-class office in this country and get the data, and then take the data from the city and compare it, and you will be at once convinced. In my district is the town of Gardner. It can not be said, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Stafford] says, to be in the "twilight zone," because it is up among the hills of Massachusetts, 65 miles from Boston, on the borders of New Hampshire, and with a population of about 12,000 people. It is said to be the largest chair-manufacturing town in the United States. The Post-Office Association of New England gathered together the data last year, and it appeared that the carriers in the firstclass offices carried an average weight of 78.6 pounds per day. For the week ending January 26 in the present year they weighed up their mails in Gardner for the entire week, and it showed that the average weight that those carriers took out for distribution was 82.7 pounds per day, some 4 pounds more in weight than the carriers of Boston averaged last year.

Not only that, gentlemen, but they traveled an average of 161 miles every day. This I admit is above the average. In the compilation made by the association I have referred to the average travel in cities of the first class was 10.67 miles a day and in towns with second-class offices 13.50 miles. three trips, the same number of trips that are made by carriers in the city of Boston, but with this difference: In the one case over roads in part without sidewalks and up long and steep hills; in the other over paved sidewalks, few hills, and comparatively short distances.

I was born under the shadow of Boston. I have always lived, it is true, in the suburbs, where there are second-class offices, but I have carried on business in the city of Boston and have been thoroughly conversant with the situation there for more than thirty years. Why, gentlemen, there are hundreds of carriers in the city of Boston who do not go a distance farther than from here to the other end of the Capitol, and then take an elevator, go to the top of those big skyscrapers, and then come down with their mail. Instead of traveling 13.50 miles a day, as they do in the second-class offices, and carrying 4 pounds more in weight over that distance, they travel, perhaps, an eighth of a mile, take elevators, and distribute their mail, and they do not distribute any more mail than the carriers in the second-class offices. They have clean sidewalks to traverse, comfortable buildings to enter, short distances to travel, and elevators to help them.

Now, you may take any town, I do not care what it is, because this has been reduced to figures and is not conjecture, and you will find that the carriers and the clerks do on an average more and harder work, and are more exposed to the inclemency of the weather, and have a more trying experience, take it summer and winter together, than the same class of employees in our cities. I do not claim the city employee receives too much compensation; but condemn a system that, without cause, singles him out for special consideration. we object to in this bill is the discrimination. It is not a question of economy. If it was a question of raising so much money equally to apply to all who received salaries, I might vote against it, in view of the deficit in our post-office receipts. But when you come in here, or when the committee comes in here, with the recommendation that the clerks and carriers in our first-class offices shall be promoted to a higher grade, receiving $200 more, and work less and have a much more pleasant experience, I say it is unjust. If it is unjust it ought not to pass. It would, in my judgment, be more satisfactory to post-office employees themselves to enact a law under which the salaries all might be on a lower scale, but all treated without discrimination, than a law arbitrarily fixing salaries improperly and without just reason, giving a larger sum to a clerk or carrier because he happened to live in a large place, although his work might be easier and his expenses the same or less. By such a course you arouse dissatisfaction among a very large proportion of such employees throughout the counand we should constantly be besieged, and rightly so, to rectify the wrong. It is on that principle I am in favor of the amendment of my colleague from Massachusetts.

I want to take issue with the position taken by the gentleman from Wisconsin, and I know what I am talking about when I say that outside of rent—and there is no such difference of rents in the towns around about Boston—you can live very much cheaper in Boston than in the towns which have second-class post-offices in my district. This also has been ascertained with the result that the city carrier pays for rent on the average $18.17 per month and the country carriers $14.79, a difference of $3.38 a month, or $40.56 a year. Do you suppose, gentlemen, that the people of Natick, Mass., for instance, where I reside, and other towns in the suburbs of Boston know what they are doing when they drop the country towns and go to Boston and buy almost everything necessary for their families; not only the necessaries of life, but furniture and everything else connected with living expenses? What do they do it for, gentlemen? They know that they can get a better market. Anybody who has lived in the city and has carried on business in it. as I have done for thirty years, knows, if he knows anything ar all about this thing, that you can buy anything, I do not care what it is, from the stores in the large cities for less than you can in the country towns. Therefore, the argument is all in favor of my colleague from Massachusetts, because it does not cost any more when you average up for the clerks and carriers in the large cities than it does in the country in the secondclass offices, where men do as much work as in the city offices, have as long hours, have as much business, and a harder job than the city employees.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there ought not to be any controversy between the Representatives of the large cities and the Representatives of congressional districts where important second-class offices exist. We have provided in the case of the first-class offices, for the meritorious part of them, without any grudging on our part, and we simply ask our colleagues to deal out a like measure of justice toward us. The question of my colleague from Illinois [Mr. Mann] seems, of course, to answer itself. When first-class offices are distributing centers, there is necessarily a more elaborate study of schedules than there is in second-class offices not so situated; but occasionally the converse of this proposition exists, that a second-class office is a distributing center and a first-class office is not, but more frequently first and second class offices are situated exactly similarly along railway lines, and the learning of schedules is just as extensive and just as arduous for the clerks of the second-class offices as for the clerks in the firstclass offices. Again, the first-class offices are equipped with a much larger number of clerks, so that the work is subdivided and there is not nearly so large a percentage of the total imposed upon one, or upon a very limited number of clerks, and the labor of each—that is, of the clerks in the first and in second class offices, many of them, are equal. Therefore, I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts will be adopted.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts will be disagreed to. It is true that the amount carried by his amendment is not large as sums go in the post-office appropriation bill. But, Mr. Chairman, it is not so much the length of this step about to be taken as the direction of the step. If this amendment prevails, it will come back to haunt Congress at the next session, and each succeeding session, until you will have practically annulled the classification act by your continuously amending it, and thus destroy the effect which it was sought to ingraft upon I am opposed to such rapid increases of salaries. have subjected myself to much embarrassment and not a little trouble in that I have stood opposed to such radical increases of salaries for this service. I believe it ought to have fair play, and we have given fair play to the service. two years the classification act was passed providing for these grades.

It destroyed the $500 grade and merged it in the $600 grade. It destroyed the $700 grade and merged it in the $800 grade, and has provided for a thousand-dollar grade in the second-class offices where $900 had prevailed theretofore. We have therefore brought up every one of the clerks in the second-class office, and every one who has served twelve months in such an office and has an efficiency record has been promoted under the provisions of the post-office appropriation bill for the past two years.

If we now begin this step in the direction of further increasing the highest grade clerks of the second-class offices to $1,100, then if you are consistent they will go to $1,200 in the succeeding Congresses. And then when they get to $1,200, you bring them up on a par with the highest grade clerks in the largest offices of the first class; and in order to be consistent, you must push them a grade or two further.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Lloyd] on yesterday contributed to the House and the country a very valuable statement of statistics demonstrating that Congress in the last ten years, and most of it in the last five years, has increased more than 100 per cent the amount paid to employees in the service, while the business of the postal service has increased only about 50 per cent. Members must stop and consider this. Both of the gentlemen from Massachusetts who have favored this amendment, the only two who have spoken in favor of it, excluding the gentleman from Pennsylvania for the moment, gave illustrations within their own districts, statistics evidently prepared by friends who are interested in the promotions. make no criticism of that. It is entirely honorable and quite in keeping with the principles of legislation, but your committee, charged with the great responsibility of the duties of this service, have not been guided nor prompted by the requests from the employees in their own communities and districts.

We like the applause of the employees; we like the clapping the entire country and not for the benefit of our particular bailiwicks. Why, Mr. Chairman, I have been told—though, unfortunately, I have never experienced it—that some Members of this House who have clamored for the increase of salaries of these postal employees have been met with brass bands upon their return home and with a concourse of the employees, placed in carriages, and escorted along the streets to their offices or homes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. OVERSTREET. I have but a few minutes. I hope my friend will pardon me for not yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I am not criticising that, but is that the way to legislate? We are charged here with a duty to perform. If we are to organize for the purpose of recognizing only the demands of the postal employees' organization, we will do little else than direct the drawing of warrants upon the National Treasury to promote these people year after year.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is the situation? We have these second-class post-offices, with receipts under $40,000 a year, and we have the first class year.

we have the first-class post-offices, with receipts above $40,000 a year. I insist there is a difference in all of the elements that enter into the consideration of the problem in favor of the employees of the first-class office. The highest grade clerks of the second-class offices receive a thousand dollars a year except in special instances. A thousand dollars, Mr. Chairman, is the average compensation to the foreman of the leading factory in the community of the second-class post-office. It is the ordinary salary of the average man who is an assistant cashier in the bank, the salary of the leading managers of the dry goods stores, The average compensation of the professional men-legal, medical, and clerical-rarely exceeds a thousand dollars a year in a community where the second-class post-office is located. Are we then to commit the error of increasing the salaries of the clerks of the second-class post-offices so that they will be greater than the compensation paid to the average professional man, to the leading foremen of the leading factories, the higher grade pay in the offices of banks and other mercantile establishments?

That is not the way to legislate. These men have lower rent to pay, they have fewer expenses, their wives and daughters associate with the wives and daughters of the best people of the community. There are no social privileges which they do not enjoy as well. If therefore we make the mistake of this element of the classification bill in order to make them all equal, we have legislated not in error, but we have legislated in the wrong, because wrong is more than error. Both of these gentlemen from Massachusetts have depicted special cases in their own districts. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] can remedy his case by a request to the Post-Office Department to merge those two offices into one. That would be good administration; but that would perhaps put out of office some favored friend who is now postmaster. Too often, Mr. Chairman, we yield to importunities. I hope, then, in the name of good administration and good government that the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Gardner of Massachusetts and Mr. Wanger) there were 61 ayes and 43 noes

Mr. OVERSTREET. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. OVERSTREET and Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported 71 ayes and 60 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assistant superintendents of stations, clerks, clerks in charge of stations, private secretaries, superintendents of carriers, and superintendents of second-class matter, 6,500, at not exceeding $1,000 each.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 21, strike out the words "five hundred."

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is simply to reduce the number, in view of the action of the committee in adopting the preceding amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clerks, clerks in charge of stations, and private secretaries, 5,000, at not exceeding $900 each.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. My purpose in offering that amendment is to get some of hands when we return home, but we are compelled by the duties imposed upon us to insist that there shall be some propriety, some system, some reasonable action for the benefit of direction of the Postmaster-General," headed "United States postal service." Whether it is issued at regular intervals I do not know. On page 39 I find a few paragraphs that indicate that the Postmaster-General, who has been, I believe, the chief advocate of the new policy of postal savings banks, has put in operation a modified scheme of postal savings banks. At least, this publication encourages the taking of money from banks and from circulation and the depositing of it with the Government by the purchase of postal money orders.

The language is so important and interesting that I will read it, and will ask the gentleman from Indiana to give me some information about it. It is headed, "Savings feature:"

For a trifling sum (30 cents for each $100) anyone can make the United States custodian of his funds by purchasing a postal money order, or orders, payable to himself at the office of issue, or at any other money-order office.

Then, under another heading, "Absolute security," printed in larger type than the other, it says:

Money represented by such orders is held by the Post-Office Department, and is thus safely kept.

Another paragraph tells how it is repaid, and how duplicates may be issued if the certificate is lost. And then, under the heading of "Warrants," it says:

Orders to be presented for payment within seven years from the date of issue. If presented after the lapse of more than one year from the last day of the month of issue, they will be paid by means of warrants on the United States Treasury. The Post-Office Department thus insures $100 for a term of seven years for a fee of 30 cents.

Mr. Chairman, the effect of that publication is to discourage the deposit of money in banks. It is to encourage the with-drawal of money from business channels, and to encourage the less well informed of our citizens to deposit their money with the Government of the United States for a fee of 30 cents for each $100, which, under the statement issued by the Postmaster-General, is insurance for that period. I should like to have the chairman of the committee tell me if this is not an unusual publication, or if it is a periodical issued at the expense of the Government, which encourages the withdrawal of money from commercial channels, where it is needed, and the deposit of it with the Government, where it is not needed. This is issued by the Postmaster-General, and undertakes, it seems to me, to put into operation at once a modified form of his pet scheme of postal savings banks. I ask the chairman of the committee to tell me whether the publication is unusual or not, and whether this information, published at the expense of the Government, is to advance the pet hobby of the Postmaster-General?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing new in that position; it is in accord with existing law. There is no statement, if I have followed the gentleman, that he has read that is not correct. There is no statement that is not true.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman did not hear me or he did not follow what I said. I entirely agree with the statement of facts when referring to the law, but I call his particular attention to the fact that the language of this document "issued by the Postmaster-General" is intended to and doubtless will encourage the deposit of money with the Government and to encourage its withdrawal from the channels of trade. As to the statement of facts, we all agree that it is law, and as to the security we are all of one opinion, because we believe that the Government is going to continue. There is no issue on the facts stated, but I seek information as to the policy and whether or not it is a new one for the Postmaster-General to use his great office to advance a scheme of his own in this way. He is certainly advertising for deposits, and it appears that he has undertaken to establish postal savings banks without waiting for action by Congress.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that the Postmaster-General has violated any of the laws, either directly or indirectly, in his administration of the money-order service or any other service. Undoubtedly the Post-Office Department seeks to stimulate the money-order service as it does the registry service; as it does any other service of the postal system. merely a great business concern, and it is entirely within the proper administration of the department to advance that service. I do not think the Postmaster-General has inaugurated any new policy relative to the money-order service.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is not this something more than the usual stimulation of the money-order business in the Post-Office De-

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think there is this unusual stimulation, that a larger number of small offices have been made money-order offices. I do not think there has been any unusual stimulus here

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, it impresses me to the con-

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is a matter of opinion. The mere printing in larger type does not change either the law nor the policy. It may be it is a change in the general practice so as to challenge attention to it, but that could hardly be such a violation of his proper administration of the service as to challenge criticism of that administration. I do not think there is anything out of the way in that.

Mr. WANGER. Is it not a fact that it has been the policy of several administrations of the Post-Office Department to stimulate the money-order department?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Undoubtedly.
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired, and the gentleman from Indiana will be recognized in his own right.

Mr. OVERSTREET. If the gentleman desires, I will yield to him for a further question.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask if, as a matter of fact, the Postmaster-General by this publication is not endeavoring to make the post-office a bank of deposit and, if he succeeds, will it not withdraw an important sum of money from the ordinary channels of trade?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman's question might be, with propriety, addressed to the Postmaster-General, but I could hardly be expected to answer it. I can not answer as to the purpose of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question for information, not directly on the paragraph, but on the subject-matter of the bill. Do carriers, either city or rural, while they are actually engaged in carrying the mail, have permission for private individuals to do anything for pay by way of soliciting orders for merchandise?

Mr. OVERSTREET. They have not. The only exception is that a rural carrier is permitted to perform a service for a patron at the office for hire upon the patron's request. That is to say, if the patron of a rural service wants a carrier to bring him out a plow point on the next delivery and pay him a dime for it, he has that right to accept the dime; but, generally, the rural carriers are prohibited from doing anything for hire, except at the request of the patron of the route, and the letter carriers in cities are prohibited entirely from doing anything for

Mr. SIMS. Then, Mr. Chairman, I wish to read two letters at this time, to show the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and the House, what is actually being done.

I will first read a letter which is addressed to me by the postmaster at Hurricane Mills, Tenn., under date of October 4, 1908. It is as follows:

HURRICANE MILLS, TENN., October 14, 1908.

Hon. T. W. SIMS, Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: The attached letter explains itself. Mr. William Crockett is a gentleman, and handed me the attached letter just to show me what was being offered. I asked him to answer it and let me have the answer, and that I would send both to the department so they might be on the lookout for all such.

I will thank you very much to place this mail in the hands of the proper parties, and don't once think that Mr. Crockett wants a single thing to do with such business.

Yours, truly,

Jas. T. Anderson, Postmaster.

I will state that the Mr. William Crockett referred to in that letter is a rural carrier. The letter to Mr. Crockett is as follows:

GEO. H. GOODMAN COMPANY, Paducah, Ky., October 5, 1908.

Mr. WM. CROCKETT,

Hurricane Mills, Tenn.

Dear Sir: We have a proposition whereby you can add from three and four to ten and fifteen dollars per month to your wages, with practically no additional work for yourself.

The salaries paid rural free-delivery carriers by the Postal Department are not large, and we believe that a legitimate increase in your monthly receipts would be welcomed by you. Hundreds of your brother carriers have been taking advantage of our offer for the past several years, and it results not alone to their advantage but to the advantage of the patrons on their routes.

If you are interested, kindly let us hear from you and we will outline our proposition in full. If you are no longer a carrier, we will appreciate it if you will advise us to that effect, giving the name of your successor.

Successor.

Assuring you all correspondence will be held in the strictest confidence, and trusting we will hear from you promptly, we remain,
Very truly, yours,

GEO. H. GOODMAN COMPANY.

GEO. H. GOODMAN COMPANY.

I suppose that this carrier answered that letter, and received the following:

GEORGE H. GOODMAN COMPANY, Paducah, Ky., October 12, 1908.

Mr. WILLIAM CROCKETT, Hurricane Mills, Tenn.

DEAR SIR: We have your favor of the 8th, and our proposition is

DEAR SIR: We have your late. We this:

If you will show your initials on every order from your route, we will keep account and at the end of each month send you 10 per cent of the total amount. If you prefer, you can deduct the discount from the money order at the time of sending, but nearly all the carriers prefer a monthly settlement.

We do not ask you to solicit orders, or anything like that; but, of course, we will appreciate any good word you can say for us. Many of your patrons will hand you the amount and leave the place from which to order entirely to you. Our business relations will be strictly confidential, and unless you tell that you are receiving a benefit from the business no one will ever know.

We make shipment of goods by first express and guarantee against breakage or loss. We own controlling interest in registered distillery, No. 7, fifth district, Nelson County, Ky., and contract for the entire output of the Clermont Distilling Company, Warren County, Ky., one of the State's foremost fruit distilleries; consequently we are in position to furnish unequaled qualities at the various prices. We operate branch houses at Memphis, Tenn.; Shreveport, La.; and Evansville, Ind., and, complying with the pure-food laws, ship nothing but straight whiskies—not handling a drop of rectified goods. Even our $1.50 per gallon line is straight whisky, reduced of course, in proof.

Awalting your favors, we remain,
Very truly, yours,

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

I ask for a minute more. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. That letter says that hundreds of carriers are accepting this proposition and are adding to their salaries by Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to dispute the fact the gentleman has recited. I would only suggest that it is in violation of law, clearly, and whoever practices that in violation of law ought to be removed and prosecuted. We can not help it if people do not obey the law. That is not countenanced by the department.

Mr. SIMS. It is a violation of law for the carrier to do so?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes. Mr. SIMS. And yet these gentlemen here say that hundreds of them are doing this and adding to their salary by doing it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. If they are, then hundreds are violating the law. My impression is that that gentleman is not telling the truth, because my information and knowledge is that rural carriers are not that class of men.

Mr. SIMS. That has been my information. These letters were sent to me by a postmaster.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, at the conclusion of the general debate on this bill I endeavored to get five minutes for the purpose of replying to the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks], and I make this motion now for that purpose. In his defense of the senior Senator from Massachusetts, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks] "doth protest too much." I did not criticise the senior Senator from Massachusetts. I am not interested in the slightest degree in his career. I did not criticise his zeal for his constituents, though in this particular I might well do so. The statement I made on the floor yesterday was this, that the Isthmian Canal Commission did not want and did not ask for those two ships. The amendments of the senior Senator from Massachusetts gave them something they did not want. I also made the charge that under these two amendments there were only two ships in all the world that could be bought, and I challenge the gentleman from Massachusetts to say that that statement is not true. Those two ships were bought. They were not in commission at that time. They belonged to the constituents of the senior Senator from Massachusetts. Now, on account of the fact that the senior Senator from Massachusetts is perfectly familiar with our merchant marine, it is impossible for me to reach the conclusion that he did not know that those two ships and no other two ships in all the world could be bought under his amendments. Now, I challenge everybody on that side of the House and everybody in the Senate to show that under this act any other ships could be purchased than these. I have here the original amendments, two of them, proposed by the senior Senator from Massachusetts. They are so drawn as to fit these two ships and no others. In defending the senior Senator from Massachusetts the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks] makes the statement-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend for a moment. The Chair must state to the gentleman that the gen-Heman can not discuss proceedings in the United States Senate.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, is it usual for the Chairman to make that point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that the rules make it imperative upon the Chair to do so. The rules provide that a Member may, but that the Chair shall enforce

Mr. RAINEY. Well, there are no rules that will keep me from answering the gentleman from Massachusetts at some other time, and I will take pleasure in doing so. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clerks, and clerks in charge of stations, 1,625, at not exceeding $600 each.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 11, lines 1 and 2, amend by striking out the words "sixteen indred and twenty-five" and insert the words "two thousand" in lieu

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard. The object of this amendment is for the purpose of increasing the post-office force. I notice in the estimates submitted by the Post-Office Department they asked at that time for 2,000 clerks of this grade and at the same time they stated that this was a decrease of 485 from what had been requested by the various post-offices all over the country. This estimate of 2,000 which they ask for has been reduced by the Post-Office Committee to 1,625. In other words, 375 have been stricken out, making 860 post-office clerks of this grade which the Post-Office Department asked for which will be refused. Now, I have in my possession some data showing that the post-office clerks in the first and second class offices range in working hours from nine to thirteen. There are 43 States in the Union where the postoffice clerks in the first and second grade offices-that is, in some of the offices in those States-where the boys, the employees, are obliged to work from nine to thirteen hours a day. And it seems to me that if the clerks requested would be allowed by the department to the post-offices the time of work-an eight-hour schedule-which is in force in most all large cities and the large post-offices would follow in the smaller and second-grade post-offices. I find on investigation here that in the State of Alabama the clerks are worked from nine to eleven hours in some of the offices, and in Connecticut from nine to eleven hours and in Florida from nine to ten hours and in Georgia from ten to thirteen hours. This goes to show all down the line of the 43 States in the Union where the boys are working this overtime.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Certainly.
Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman state to the committee upon what source he gets his information?

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. I can, very easily; it comes from the post-office clerks in the various offices of the various States to which I have referred.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Addressed directly to the gentleman? Mr. WILSON of Illinois. It comes to me. I have it in my

Mr. OVERSTREET. From what source does the gentleman have it?

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. It comes from the clerks.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Does the gentleman get it from one of the officials of the Post-Office Clerks' Association?

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. I got this information, and it comes direct from the post-office clerks. It does not make any difference, it seems to me, unless the chairman of the committee can contradict it. It is authentic, so far as I know.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I intend to put over and against that.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. I am willing to submit it as authentic to the Members of this House.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Does the gentleman decline to tell me whether it comes from one of the officers?

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. It does not make any difference where it comes from. It comes from the post-office clerks in the various States of the Union. In 43 of those States the post-office clerks work from nine to thirteen hours a day, and when an amendment is offered in the House at this time that the post-office clerks shall receive a vacation period with pay it is stricken out on a point of order, but, at the same time, the post-office clerks in the department in the city of Washington have thirty days' vacation with pay and thirty days' sick leave with pay, and they only work eight hours a day. In the cities of New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, and others where the firstclass offices are, the eight-hour rule prevails, but in a great many other cities all over the country they work from nine to thirteen hours. I say that it is not fair. They do not have any vacation period, either.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is— Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I was waiting to see if the gentleman had concluded. I hope this amendment will be disagreed to. The department, in its original estimate, recommended 2,625 additional clerks. The bill before the committee carries 2,250, a reduction of 375; but that reduction was made after consultation at the hearings with the officers of the de-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield for a question?

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Will the gentleman permit me just question? In this particular section here this bill carries 1,625 clerks at the $600 grade.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I know, and I will explain it to the gentleman. I am going to undertake, Mr. Chairman, in a brief way to explain to the committee, if they will give me attention, how impossible it is for the House to act upon estimates recommended by the post-office clerks' organization and not upon estimates recommended by the department.

It takes a good deal of skill with the departmental officials to make this gradation by paragraphs in this great bill. We deduct from the number in one grade a number of clerks who are promoted into the next grade, and then we add that number to the next grade. That necessarily makes a difference in the numbers of the various grades. I am putting over against the gentleman's testimony, which, I undertake to say, comes from the organization itself, the testimony of the department charged with the duty of, and compensated out of the Treasury for, making these estimates for Congress. I intimated a while ago, Mr. Chairman, that we are rapidly approaching a time when we will legislate in accordance with the directions of these post-office employees' organizations unless we take heed in time and give some attention to the recommendations of the department. Now, how futile it would be, a very act of folly, for us here to-day, Members not having given their own personal and individual attention to these hundreds of items and details, to follow the recommendation of the organization of the post-office clerks and not give some sort of hearing and respectable attention to the representations and estimates of the department of the post-office service.

Mr. Chairman, we have recommended 2,250 additional clerks, as against 1,532 for the current year-718 more than we gave for the current year. Is not that enough, in view of the condition of the Treasury, when we are increasing it 50 per cent over the current year's recommendation? Now, I want to explain again, even for the information of my genial friend from Illinois, that until you have taken a table like I hold in my hand, with the various grades of pay, with the various numbers of employees in each grade, with the various salaries of each special employee, and then provide for the promotion so as to deduct from one grade the number of that grade which will go into the next, and then add that number to the number of the next grade, and then bring in at the bottom the full number of employees intended for the new service-because under the law they must be appointed at the lowest grade-you can not fully understand the preparation of the items of the bill.

I do not think it worth while to take the time of the committee to explain in such detail. I think the committee ought to vote down this amendment.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a

Mr. OVERSTREET. No; I think we had better vote on this

The question was taken on the amendment, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Division!

The committee divided; and there were-ayes 14, noes 63. So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitutes for clerks and employees absent without pay, in all $31,908,500.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking for information about this paragraph. This is an increase of over $3,000,000 over the last appropriation, an increase of over 11 per cent on the last appropriation. view of the discussion on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, I would like to ask the chairman if he can state approximately what part of this increase is to pay an increased number of employees and what part is to pay increased salaries of employees?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from New York I will state that on the 30th day of June, 1903, there were 28,224 clerks and employees covered by

So that this total item, $31,908,500, is intended to pay all the compensation for all of these employees who will be in the service on the 30th day of next June, and then cares for 2,250 new clerks and for the promotion of all the clerks below the $1,100 grade who have had one year's service and the proper efficiency record up to $1,100 and the promotion of 50 per cent of the clerks of a thousand-dollar grade in the second-class post-offices to $1,100.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Are there 2,200 of those?
Mr. OVERSTREET. Two thousand two hundred and fifty. They would not all be employed now on the 1st of July.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Why is the proportion of these larger this year?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The great bulk of the increase is due to the promotions provided under the classification act.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of the total appropriations in round numbers $2,250,000 would be for promotions, and $750,000 for additional service by reason of growth of business?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The heavy part of that 11 per cent increase is due to promotion purposes only.

Mr. WANGER. And that will recur in the years to come for some years.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Undoubtedly, and if Congress keeps on as it has, overriding and disregarding the classification bill, I think it will be multiplied many times.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the appointment and assignment of clerks hereunder shall be so made during the fiscal year as not to involve a greater aggregate expenditure than this sum, and the assignment of the several grades of compensation to the various offices shall be made, so far as practicable, in proportion to the amount of business transacted through such offices and the respective divisions thereof.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of calling the Chair's attention to the two items on pages 2 and 3 of this bill, which were stricken out on a point of order. I have the statutes, which I was unable to refer to at the time of the discussion of the point of order, and I merely now want to call them to the attention of the Chair.

The statute is 4017, passed on the 8th day of June, 1872, authorizing the employment of special agents. In the statute of June 11, 1880, the title of these special agents was changed to post-office inspectors. Of course I have no right to ask the Chair to modify its decision; but I want to show the Chair that I have made reference to the statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair might state to the gentleman from Indiana that, in view of the information now given the Chair regarding the existing law, the gentleman could recur and offer an amendment.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not suppose I could recur without unanimous consent; but at the same time I have the right to bring the Chair's attention to the fact that I had correctly quoted the statutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is very glad to have the gentleman from Indiana call the attention of the Chair to existing law.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask unanimous consent to recur to the paragraphs mentioned.

Mr. GOEBEL. For the present I object.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think, if the Chair will permit, that there are precedents in parliamentary procedure justifying the Chair, where the Chair has been given the wrong citation or has failed to have the right information, upon later and proper information, upon its own motion, in changing its ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has always understood the rule to be the other way. The Chair has understood that after the Chair has made a ruling on a point of order it can not reverse that ruling on account of new reasons assigned.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I wanted to demonstrate to the Chair that I had not misled the Chair in my statement that there are permanent statutes upon which these two sections are properly placed in the paragraph.

I may say, if the Chair will permit, this is not a new reason. I was told after the decision was made that the Chair had not caught the citation which I give. I give the citation of section 4017, and the ruling of the Chair, as I understood, was that that section did not apply. I think the Chair caught a different number.

The CHAIRMAN. It was understood at the desk that the citation was section 2017.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That was a mistake, either in my statement or in the understanding of the Chair. The section was this particular appropriation. We recommended then 1,532 additional clerks. I think all of them have not been appointed. of the Chair. It occurs to me that this is not a new assign-4017, and that is the one to which I now direct the attention ment, but it is information which the Chair is entitled to consider.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is very glad, indeed, to get the information. If the Chair had had this information before the ruling was made

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not know how the Chair got the figures 2017. I may have said that; I do not know; but I had before me section 4017, and that is what I undertood to call the attention of the Chair to. If the Chair misunderstood me, when in fact it was 4017, I should think the Chair could return to that for the purpose of correcting an erroneous ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the only way in which the correction can be made is to recur and offer an amendment replacing the portion stricken out on the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I suppose it is in the power of the Chair, just as it is in the power of a court before final judgment, to correct his own mistakes,

The CHAIRMAN. But in this case the final judgment has been made, and there was no appeal.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I shall be content—
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels no doubt at all that the precedents are as the Chair is now ruling.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am just told by a Member that he understood me to say 4017; and if the Chair misunderstood

The CHAIRMAN. When the Chair asked the gentleman to furnish the citation upon which he relied, the gentleman said that he was satisfied there was such a law somewhere, and the Chair is more than ever convinced that the gentleman was unable at that time to cite the provision.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That was on the assumption that the Mr. OVERSTREET. That was on the assumption that the Chair had ruled that section 4017 did not apply, when the Chair had referred to section 2017. I am quite content. I have no complaint. It seems to me it is quite evident that if the objection tion is insisted upon, it can not be insisted upon with due regard to the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to watchmen, messengers, and laborers, 660, at $700 each; 425, at $600 each; and 140, at $500 each; in all, $787,000. Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 11 strike out lines 19 to 23 and insert the following:
"For compensation to watchmen, messengers, and laborers, 660, at $800 each; 325, at $700 each; 225, at $600 each; and 15, at $500 each; in all, $898,000."

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve a point of order on that amendment, Mr. Chairman,

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I will say with regard to this proposed amendment that while we have been increasing the salaries of carriers and clerks in the last Congress and in the first session of this Congress, the laborers, mechanics, firemen, and watchmen have always been left out. This proposed amendment does not come from any body of the employees in the postal service, but has been recommended by the Postmaster-General in three successive annual reports. When I say the report of the Postmaster-General I naturally mean the printed report.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I suppose when the gentleman says the eport of the Postmaster-General he means the report of the First Assistant?

Mr. OLCOTT. The report of the Postmaster-General which I have in my hand contains the report of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, and is printed as part of the report of the Postmaster-General. The First Assistant Postmaster-General did make a report to the Postmaster-General, and I refer to that. In the recommendations of legislation he asks that watchmen, messengers, and laborers' salaries be increased so that the limitations should be from $500 to $900. I therefore think that the amendment I make is entirely in line with the suggestion of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, and such recommendation is vouched for by the Postmaster-General, in view of the fact that he publishes it in this book on a page upon which appears the heading, "Report of the Postmaster-General." I ask for the passage of the amendment. The laborers in the Post-Office Department receive less than the laborers in other departments. The First Assistant Postmaster-General recommended an increase up to $900, and my amendment only asks that the increase go to eight hundred.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, quite the contrary is true relative to the recommendation. The Postmaster-General stated specifically in his report that he made no recommendation for increases. I am not denying that the First Assistant Postmaster-General made the recommendation; but here is the reason that it is not advisable to adopt this amendment. The First Assistant Postmaster-General himself recognized it when his attention was called to it. This would increase the pay of this grade of employees beyond the pay received by similar employees in other branches of the service. For example, the Treasury Department does not pay that amount to all its employees. An office of the first class occupies a federal building, and there are in it laborers paid by the Treasury Department out of the general fund, only $45 a month. There are laborers paid under this specific appropriation, so if we raise this amount we would increase still more the difference between the amount paid for a similar character of employees in the same building at the same time. This amendment not only does what the gentleman from New York states it does, but it does also another thing. It increases the number, which the gentleman did not call attention to.

Mr. OLCOTT. The gentleman is mistaken, because my amendment does not increase the number, and as far as amount is concerned, laborers in the Treasury Department receive as high as $840.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Then, I misunderstood the reading. If it does not increase the number, still there is the objection to it that I have stated. Gentlemen will see what trouble we would get into once we began to pay laborers doing nothing but laborer's work in the same building difference in compensation. Mr. KELIHER. Will the chairman indicate what character of labor these laborers do that get $10 a week?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Ordinary labor, such as throwing about mail sacks, piling them up; just the ordinary laborer's work. It is not limited to any specific scheme. The gentleman from Massachusetts is familiar with the work which these laborers do.

Mr. KELIHER. I want to ask the gentleman if he believes that $10 a week is enough for any man, no matter what he

Mr. OVERSTREET. The lowest of them get $500 a year.

Mr. KELIHER. But the $500 a year man has to eat as well as the $600 and $700 men.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Not at all. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman

Mr. KELIHER. I want to ask the gentleman if he believes that $10 a week is enough for a man doing any character of work at all? Why, the padrones pay the Italians more than

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, this is not the first time the gentleman from Massachusetts has sought to arouse sympathy. He is one of the favored few whom the bands meet on his return home, and doubtless he wants a repetition of that ovation. It is needless for us to go into sentimentalism to talk about the ordinary employment of the laborers. I wish they all might have as much as the gentleman from Massachusetts receives, but, unfortunately, the world is not so constituted, and a different character of employment in the postal service calls for a different degree of compensation. The lowest grade of pay of these laborers is $500, and there are 140 of them. 425 at $600 and 660 at $700. There is a gradation in their employment. Some of these laborers in these offices go with the messenger who takes the deposit of the postmaster's revenue to the bank, and assists him-carries it along with him-and he is paid in proportion to that work.

Some handle the empty mail bags, throw them in the piles where they can be rapidly cared for, others tie up mail bags, and there is a variety of employment. Of course they all have to eat, as the gentleman from Massachusetts says, but that is not a factor in the determination, otherwise the gentleman would say, "Why should not these men have terrapin and canvasbacks? Are they not men with appetites as well as you?" we do not legislate in that way.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this committee has recommended this number according to the needs of the service, based upon the salaries paid similar employees in the same building by the Treasury, and I hope the amendment will be disagreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin insist on his point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this is not in any way an increase in the number of employees.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I would like to inquire by what right the gentleman from New York has the floor?

Mr. OLCOTT. The Chair asked me whether I wished to be heard on the point of order of the gentleman from Wisconsin. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin made a

Mr. OVERSTREET. I thought the gentleman from New York was addressing himself to the merits.

The CHAIRMAN. No; he was addressing the Chair on the

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, it does not seem to me that there is anything against the regular order of this House to suggest that a different schedule of pay for the same number of employees could be substituted.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair ask the gentleman a question. This is an increase of compensation to certain employees.

Mr. OLCOTT. It is.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the compensation fixed by law now?

Mr. OLCOTT. I can not answer the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think I can supply the In the classification act, which is found in Postal Rules and Regulations of 1902, on page 129, and which is a part of the act of March 2, 1889, being chapter 374 of the first Supplement, page 680, is this paragraph:

Pressmen, messengers, watchmen, laborers, janitors, porters, firemen, carpenters, waste-paper examiners, and general utility clerks, four classes, salary graded in even hundreds of dollars, from $400 to not exceeding $700 per annum.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment under consideration——
Mr. OLCOTT. That is a part of the post-office regulation is it not?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is a part of the law.
Mr. PARSONS. Is it not a part of the post-office regulations?
Mr. STAFFORD. That is part of the act of March 2, 1889, and is found in the first Supplement, page 680. That law specifically provides that the maximum of salaries shall be $700. In the amendment now before the committee there is an increase providing for $800.

The CHAIRMAN. In the bill of last year was this provision carried identical with this?

Mr. STAFFORD. Identical in every way with the one now

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the gentleman from New York cares to be heard further, the Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to be heard on

Mr. PARSONS. Yes. I think what the gentleman from Wisconsin has stated to the Chair is contained in the rules and regulations and is not a verbatim copy from the statutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman upon what he bases that statement?

Mr. PARSONS. I base it on the statutes printed in that report of the Postal Commission—a report on classification. I looked in that and tried to find the statute covering this point and could not find any such statute as that to which the gentleman has referred.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will examine the Supplement, he will find this classification act in extenso, and he will find there a provision that has not been superseded by any subsequent law limiting the salary of these designated employees to $700. An attempt is made to increase it to $800 by the amendment now before the committee, and I contend that it is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the existing law on this subject is as the gentleman from Wisconsin has stated it:

Pressmen, messengers, watchmen, laborers, janitors, porters, firemen, carpenters, waste-paper examiners, and general utility clerks, four classes, salary graded in even hundreds of dollars, from $400 to not exceeding $700 per annum.

That is existing law, and even if that was a regulation and not the law the appropriation of last year makes the law in determining the salaries. The Chair has no hesitation in sustaining the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of letter carriers at offices already established, including substitutes for carriers absent without pay, city delivery service, $29,618,500.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, lines 14 and 15, strike out "twenty-nine million six hundred and eighteen thousand five hundred" and insert in lieu thereof "twenty-nine million four hundred and sixty-eight thousand five hundred."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, that is to correct an error in the committee room on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, in making the proper calculation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of substitutes for letter carriers absent with pay, and of auxiliary and temporary letter carriers at offices already established, $1,300,000.

Mr. KELIHER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 18, after the word "dollars" insert the following:
"Provided, That hereafter substitute letter carriers be paid at the rate of 30 cents an hour for the time they are employed when serving in the places of regular carries on leave of absence, or when serving for carriers who are granted leave of absence with pay, in order that they may serve as members of the local civil-service boards, or as witnesses for the Government in United States courts; and that they shall be paid the pro rata salary of carriers for whom they serve who are absent without pay."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. KELIHER. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KELIHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. That amendment, Mr. Chairman, was offered for the purpose of remedying what I consider, and what is considered by many more, an injustice that is being done to the substitutes in the carrier service of the country. It is not offered with a sentimental motive at all, and I have this to say to the distinguished chairman of the committee, who accused me a minute ago of being a sentimentalist, that if calling attention to the fact that Uncle Sam is paying but $10 a week for certain men doing laborer's work-a wage no more than padrones of the country pay their cheap help-then I plead guilty to being a sentimentalist.

But perhaps the gentleman proceeds upon the theory he enunciated in his reply to me a few minutes ago, that men of that class do not need to eat. And I will say further to him that I am probably one of that class to whom he referred, who are met at their home railroad stations by a thankful body of men, in consideration of work done in Congress, with a brass band; but I would much rather be met by a brass band in my district than by a bludgeon, as some men I know of in this House have been, Mr. Chairman.

But to proceed in the discussion of this particular branch of the service, to which my amendment related. The substitute is compelled to buy a uniform upon his appointment to the service. He works for about three years before he gets into the regular service. He does not make, on an average, more than $25 or $30 a month. He can hardly engage in any other sort of employment, because he is at the beck and call of the service to which he is attached. Now, then, when he goes to work in the place of the carrier who is on vacation leave, he is paid 30 cents an hour.

That is right; but when he takes the place of a carrier who draws $3.06 a day, performing the same work that that carrier does, it is only fair and it is only justice and it is simple equity that he should receive the pro rata pay of the man whose place he takes, particularly when it is borne in mind that the carrier for whom he substitutes is receiving no pay whatsoever, and if this amendment were not objected to, Mr. Chairman, it would not impose another dollar of expense upon the Government and would remedy what I consider an injustice done to these men. Why, here we are told that the Post-Office Department is going to add 1,700 new carriers to the service during the coming fiscal year, yet there is not provided another dollar in addition to the money that is carried in the appropriation bill which is providing for the current expenses of the department of this year. I call the attention of the House to the fact that in the act of last year we provided for this particular branch of the service $1,300,000, and in the present bill the same amount is carried; yet the First Assistant Postmaster-General declared to the committee that 1,700 more men would be brought into the service, and it formulated its bill upon that basis without providing an additional dollar.

Now, how are they going to pay for the increased substitute force which will be required? And I believe, Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the fact we will be told that the substitutes would prefer to receive 30 cents an hour, because, forsooth, some days they work ten or twelve hours and make $3 a day, the fact is they never work ten or twelve hours and rarely go over six hours at a stretch; and the man who, as a substitute, has waited for three years to get into the regular service who has made over $40 a month is an exception. I believe it will be only fair to change the method of compensating these men. Chairman, I call the attention of the House to the fact, and the chairman of the committee also, that his infallibility is not always recognized by this House by reminding him of the fact that the House has taken the bit between its teeth with great frequency and enacted legislation to comport with the best judgment and wisdom of the country in regard to the postal service despite the protests and contrary to the opinion of the gentleman from Indiana. [Applause.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, facts amount to something yet in this House, and it demonstrates the futility of undertaking in a town meeting-I am, without disrespect, referring to the Committee of the Whole House, where so few know all the details of the estimates and the calculations necessary-to frame a proper schedule for appropriations for this service. The gentleman criticises with a good deal of vehemence our failure to increase this item when we are asked to increase the number of carriers. The increase of the number of carriers, Mr. Chairman, is provided in the other item, which is now passed. This item is limited entirely to the establishment in the first instance of the substitute-carrier service in a city that never before will have had a substitute-carrier service. We appropriated for the current year $1,300,000. We carry the same item for the next year.

The reason this is not increased is that it was found that the $1,300,000 for the last year was too high, and they had nearly $200,000 unexpended. This amount was agreed to after a hearing, after inquiry with the officials having charge of this appropriation. It has not been curtailed in any spirit or disposition of being penurious. This is not the money of the committee. Some people can vote loudly to expend money other than their own, but the Committees of Appropriations of the House are obliged to scrutinize very carefully the necessary expenditures and recommend to the House in a fair way such expenditures and appropriations as inquiry has demonstrated will be necessary. I think it ill becomes any Member of the House to criticise so severely a committee which, in my judgment, Mr. Chairman, gives as much time, at least as much zealous work, as many unselfish hours of labor, to the discharge of the heavy and numerous duties of the committee as any other committee in the House. I can speak, Mr. Chairman, with knowledge upon that fact. I have seen these men and have worked with them. They deserve the highest praise for the conscientious, faithful, and honest manner in which they have discharged their duties. [Applause.]

It had not been my intention, Mr. Chairman, at any period of this session to make reference in any degree to the fact of my retirement from the House. The intimation of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Keliher] that it was due to a bludgeon gives me the opportunity, without any favor of the future, to express my appreciation of the loyal support of my colleagues upon that committee. What little I have been able to do will have been finished practically with the conclusion of Whether I have been in error or not I will let history this bill. record, but it has not been with any intent to take food from anybody's mouth nor to withdraw the proper meed of praise The duties are arduous, are embarrassing, from any employee. The duties are arduous, are embarrassing, are troublesome. We are not met with brass bands as others are who are more favored for their zealous work in a raid upon the Treasury. We have tried, Mr. Chairman, to perform our service with an eye to the Government's needs, and with fair equity to the employees, and I believe it has been done, Without any disposition to criticise, I believe those few instances in the recent past when the recommendations of the Post-Office Committee have been overthrown by the action of the Committee of the Whole House and the House, that the committee, at least, have not been in error. The facts will demonstrate that their work has been done with careful scrutiny of the facts, with the proper regard which the officials of the department are entitled to receive for their labors, and with a view, Mr. Chairman, of recommending to the House only legislation for which they can properly stand and can at all times defend; and in no instance during my six years of service as chairman of this committee has there been put into a bill any joker for the benefit of any member of that committee. stood, Mr. Chairman, for what we believed to be right, without regard to the insinuations of Members who think that we ought to join with them without reference to our duties and our consciences in voting appropriations to aid Members to increase their popularity with the postal employees. We are willing to stand or fall by that record. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of letter carriers, substitute and auxiliary letters carriers at new offices entitled to city delivery service, $120,000, of which sum $20,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of expressing, as one man who comes from an exclusively city district, the extreme sense of regret that the great majority of men here from city districts feel over the retirement from this committee and Congress of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. [Applause.] It will go down into history, to which he appealed with confidence, that during Post-Offices and Post-Roads. the .ime he has been chairman of the committee the clerks and carriers in first-class cities have received a greater measure of justice and consideration than during the chairmanship of any other man. And I want to express to this House my assurance that whatever the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Overstreet] was met with in his district, he was not met with any bludgeon in the hands of post-office clerks and carriers men who appreciate his honesty, who appreciate his ability, who appreciate his disinterestedness, who appreciate his fairness, and who, I know, all over the country will join with me in wishing him in his retirement all sorts of peace and prosperity, success and good will. [Applause.]

Mr. KELIHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may be recognized to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York

Mr. KELIHER. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to ask this question of my colleague: If he believed, when he stood by me and others last year in the movement for obtaining an increase in the pay of the carriers and clerks of the principal post-offices of the country, he was engaged in a raid upon the Treasury?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I am very glad to answer. understand we were not. We were engaged, as I expressed in my few remarks, in obtaining a measure of justice. I want to say to my friend frankly that we who come from the large cities look at this situation from one standpoint. We do not have upon our shoulders the burden and entire responsibility of this Post-Office Committee. We were able to convince the House, and have been for two or three sessions of Congress, that we were right in our contention; but the mere fact that in some of these contentions the gentleman from Indiana differed with us gives no more ground for criticism of him than does it give ground for criticising any Member who then differed with us on the floor.

He had on his shoulders the whole post-office appropriation We have a better appreciation, perhaps, as to the needs of the carriers of the great cities. I will say to my friend from Massachusetts, at any time that he wants to lead another fight of that kind, and the deficit is not so large, that he will find me and every other man who voted the same way on this side of the Chamber backing him up just as strongly as we did then. But that does not justify a criticism of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. GRIGGS. Did you get the increase you desired last year?

Mr. BENNET of New York. We got a piece. [Laughter.] The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. WEEKS. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I make that motion for the purpose of asking that unanimous consent be given the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] to conclude the remarks he was making when called to order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will modify that to a specific length of time, I have no objection. I ask him to modify that to five minutes.

Mr. WEEKS. I modify it so that the gentleman will be given five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] be given five minutes to conclude his remarks. Is [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, when my remarks were interrupted, I was making the point that under the item in the sundry civil bill of last year to which I referred it was possible to buy only two ships, and we did buy those two ships; and I again make the same statement. The point made by the gentleman from Massachusetts with reference to the purchase was that we got the ships cheap enough; that we got them for about $400,000 less than the amendment to which I referred proment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read, | vided for. That was not the fault of the item in the bill. The officials of the War Department who had charge of the transactions are responsible for the fact that those ships were bought for less than $1,550,000. The gentleman makes the point that they were worth fully that. I do not know how much they were worth; but I do know that we did not need them, and I know that we did not want them, because the Isthmian Canal Commission never asked for them. Now, it may be that they were worth that much. It may be that we could buy timber elephants in India—a hundred of them for $500 apiece—to work on the canal, and that might be a reasonable price for timber elephants, but that does not excuse an enormous expenditure of money for that purpose.

When the French were on the Isthmus of Panama they bought 15,000 kerosene torches with which to celebrate the completion of that canal; and I understand, and the statement has been made, that they are now on the Isthmus and belong to us. The French might have bought those kerosene torches at a reasonable price; they may not have paid more than they were worth; but that did not justify that expenditure.

The gentleman insists that while it may be necessary to improve the harbor of Colon in order to permit vessels of 9,000 gross tonnage to enter, still it is an improvement that ought to be made, that will have to be made at some time in the future, and therefore we may as well make it now, in order to let these ships that we do not need and do not want go in.

The gentleman overlooks the fact that when this canal is completed, when it is in use, we do not propose to use the harbor of Colon at all. The completed canal makes no use of the We go some miles above the harbor and dig harbor of Colon. the canal straight across to the site of the Gatun dam, and it will never be necessary for us in order to use the canal across the Isthmus to improve the harbor of Colon.

Now, I do not know where these ships are to be delivered; but I do know that the official organ of the Isthmian Canal Commission, the Canal Record, which is only issued after having been carefully scrutinized by the Isthmian Canal Commission, under date of December 16, 1908, contains this statement on the first page, and I read from this official Record:

A cablegram from Washington states that the steamships Shawmut and Tremont will be purchased for $1,157,000 delivered at Seattle about January 1, 1909. If delivery is desired at New York, $56,000 must be added to the purchase price. These ships will be placed in the Panama Railroad Company's service between Cristobal and New York. They are owned by the Poston Steamship Company, and have recently been laid up after several years of service in the trade between Puget Sound, Japan, and China.

Now, if these steamships are to be used in the service between Cristobal and New York, the fact they are to be used in that service may require us to dredge a part of Colon Harbor that will never be used after the completion of this canal. And now I want to read again from the deficiency estimate of the chairman of the Isthmian Canal Commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. I ask five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY. This is the deficiency estimate submitted by Colonel Goethals on the 30th day of November, 1908. It is printed in the Canal Record, this official organ, on the 16th day of September. I now read from it:

A comparison of the estimates submitted to Congress for the present fiscal year in December, 1907, with the appropriation made by act approved May 27, 1908, for the department of construction and engineering is as follows:

It will be noted that there has been deducted from the appropriation for material, supplies, and equipment $1,550,000 for two steamships, which item was not in the estimates.

Now, that confirms the search I made myself of the estimates. and it shows that the commission did not want these ships that were bought, but the Boston Steamship Company had them to I am not criticising the Boston Steamship Company for wanting to sell something that they did not want, and I am not criticising anybody in connection with it. I am simply calling attention to the rocks upon which the French companies drifted; and if we want to build this canal, we can not afford to make it a dumping ground for everything that everybody does not need any longer, and wants to sell, whether we pay enough for it or [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, I ask to include in my remarks these documents to which I have referred.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to include the documents to which he has called attention in his speech as published in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The documents referred to were the following two amendments offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge]: [H. R. 14766, 60th Cong., 1st sess.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, JANUARY 28, 1908. REFERRE THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS AND ORDERED TO BE PRINTED

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. Lodge to the bill (H. R. 14766) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for prior years, and for other purposes, viz: Insert the following:

For the purchase of two steamships of American registry for the use of the Isthmian Canal Commission, to be employed in the transportation of supplies, equipment, and material for use in the construction of the canal, the sum of $1,800,000.

[H. R. 21260, 60th Cong., 1st sess.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, APRIL 28, 1908. REFERE TO THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS AND ORDERED TO BE PRINTED.

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. Lodge to the bill (H. R. 21260) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June June 30, and for other purposes view. poses, viz:

ernment for the fiscal year ending June June 30, and for other purposes, viz:

"On page 170, line 7, strike out the words "eleven million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars" and insert the words "twelve million eight hundred and fifty thousand dollars, including the purchase of two steamships of American registry for the use of the Isthmian Canal Commission, to be employed in the transportation of supplies, equipment, and material for use in the construction of the canal and employees therefor, the sum of $1,600,000: Provided, That in any contract hereafter made, transportation by sea of material, supplies, and equipment from the United States for use in the construction of the Panama Canal shall be restricted to vessels owned by the United States or by the Panama Railroad Company, or to vessels of the United States chartered by the United States tendered by the lowest responsible bidder, unless the President shall in any case deem the bids or tenders therefor to be extortionate or unreasonable, or shall find that no such vessels of the United States can be secured for the trade: Provided further, That this resolution shall not apply to any foreign steamship chartered by the Panama Railroad Company to take the place of any of the present fleet destroyed or undergoing repairs, after the President shall have been satisfied that a suitable vessel of the United States could not have been chartered on reasonable terms for that purpose: And provided further, That the Isthmian Canal Commission is hereby authorized to purchase or charter and operate vessels of the United States of the United States could not have been chartered on reasonable terms for that purpose: And provided further, That the Isthmian Canal Commission is hereby authorized to purchase or charter and operate vessels of the United States for the transportation of material and equipment for the use of the canal, employees on and mails for said canal, whenever in the opinion of the President the public interests will be best so served: And provided f

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Weeks] may have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] be allowed to address the committee for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEEKS. I feel like apologizing for taking any of the time of the committee for a continuation of this discussion, and I would not do so if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] had not lost track of one or two things in connection with this subject which have an important bearing on it. He forgot yesterday that these steamers were bought for practically $450,000 less than the appropriation, by an administration which he was criticising, and he has also forgotten, as he did yesterday, that these steamers were bought for more than one purpose. Even if you allow for the moment that they were not to be used and can not be made useful by the Panama Canal Commission, the law under which the purchase was made provided that they are to be turned over to the navy when the commission does not need them. The navy needs colliers and auxiliaries, as everyone knows, and if it is true that the Panama Canal Commission does not need them now they can be turned over to the navy and used to good advantage by the navy at once.

Mr. RAINEY. Would it not have been better, then, if this matter had been conducted in an absolutely fair manner, and if the House and Senate had been advised that they were buying these particular vessels and no others for the purpose of making colliers out of them for the navy?

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I am informed that the purchase of these vessels was recommended by the War Department. The completion of the purchase of these vessels was made by the War Department, and I therefore assume that there was some reason for buying them for the Panama Canal Commission, and that the purchase was not dependent on the desire of the Boston Steamship Company to sell them or on their being used as naval colliers.

There is no question about the desire of the Boston Steamship Company to sell these steamers. They built them at an expense of $1,850,000; they operated them three or four years in competition with English and Japanese subsidized lines to the Orient, and could not earn a net dollar on their investment. The stockholders never received any dividends, and they sold the steamers and were glad to do it, at 60 per cent of the original cost, and in addition lost the interest on the investment for something like five years. In other words, on account of our inane merchant-marine laws, citizens of the United States build steamers, try to operate them flying the American flag, and after five years are glad to sell them to anyone who will pay them 60 per cent of the original cost.

Mr. RAINEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes. Mr. RAINEY. I want to ask the gentleman if he thinks the Treasury of the United States ought to be made responsible for the fact that this Boston Steamship Company has been unfortunate in business or in investments?

Mr. WEEKS. Not at all; but, as I have said, the purchase of the steamers having been recommended by the War Department, and the purchase having been made by the War Department have been ment, a succeeding administration, would seem to indicate that there was some necessity for the purchase of these steamers for the use of the Panama Canal Commission. But if that commission does not need them and can not use them, then the Government can get full value for the money it has expended for them by turning them over to the navy and using them for colliers and auxiliaries. I yield back the balance of my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

For regulation, screen, or other wagon service, $1,600,000.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 16, lines 22 and 23, strike out "$1,600,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,675,000."

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is simply to increase this amount in accordance with the latest information from the department, and upon the department's recommendation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inland transportation by railroad routes, $46,568,000.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee the cause of this $2,586,000 increase in this provision?

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is due entirely to the increased volume of the mail. There is no change of rates.

Mr. MACON. I withdraw the pro forma amendment,

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Railway Mail Service: For 13 division superintendents, at $3,000 each; 13 assistant division superintendents, at $2,000 each; 5 assistant superintendents, at $2,000 each; 19 assistant superintendents, at $1,800 each; 136 chief clerks, at $1,800 each; 286 clerks, class 6, at not exceeding $1,600 each; 1,411 clerks, class 5, at not exceeding $1,500 each; 583 clerks, class 5, at not exceeding $1,400 each; 2,657 clerks, class 4, at not exceeding $1,200 each; 2,056 clerks, class 4, at not exceeding $1,200 each; 6,168 clerks, class 3, at not exceeding $1,100 each; 2,600 clerks, class 2, at not exceeding $1,000 each; 600 clerks, class 1, at not exceeding $900 each; 600 clerks, class 1, at not exceeding $900 each; 600 clerks, class 1, at not exceeding $900 each; 600 clerks, class 1, at not exceeding $1,000 each; 600 clerks, class 1, at not e

During the reading of the above paragraph the following

Mr. FINLEY. Will not the gentleman, chairman of the committee, agree that all the items under this head may be read, and then let the amendments be offered?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not think there will be any amendment offered to the item now being read. Let the paragraph be read, and then consider the amendment to any one line in the paragraph.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman is aware that there is likely to be amendments offered lower down.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Does the gentleman know what paragraph is being read?

Mr. FINLEY. Yes; it is in relation to the Railway Mail Service.

The CHAIRMAN. Will gentlemen suspend until the Clerk has finished reading the paragraph?

The Clerk completed the reading of the paragraph.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 19, line 17, after the word "year," insert:
"Provided further, That the men now employed in the Railway Mail Service known as porters be made regular clerks and assigned to class 1, at a salary of $800 a year."

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole House to this class of men. believe there are many Members here who perhaps never heard of them and know very little about them or about the work they do, because, as a matter of fact, there are only twelve of them now in the service. They have been in the service many years, and are scattered all over the country, so they can not possibly exercise any influence upon Congress in their interest, as other organizations in the post-office service do. They were appointed fifteen or twenty years ago as porters to handle bags and do heavy work in connection with the mail service.

But it was found that they were not required for that work, and it was not profitable to keep a porter in each particular place, or in each particular car, and immediately they were set to work handling mail, the same as clerks handle it, distributing letters, and so forth, and from that time to this they have been retained in the service at that kind of work. While they are called porters they are actually mail clerks and do efficient mail service. They have no tenure of office for there is no need of them as porters. If they did only the work they were first employed to do, they could and would be dismissed. These 12 men are survivals of the fittest, and have been kept in the service under the name of porters, but not as porters. They have been retained as clerks, and have been doing the regular work of clerks.

Mr. MACON. Do they not stand a chance of being promoted into the regular mail-clerk service?

Mr. DRISCOLL. No. I will explain that. They get now $700 a year. My amendment provides that they be taken into the regular service as clerks in the lowest grade at $800 a year. Those men who are getting $700 a year have been for years working side by side with men getting $800 and $900 and $1,000 and $1,100 a year, and doing as much work and as well as such

Mr. MACON. Why have they not been promoted?
Mr. DRISCOLL. They are not in the civil service, or are not eligible to promotion.

Mr. MACON. Why do they not get in? Can not they stand the examination?

Mr. DRISCOLL. They are now over 35 years of age and they are not eligible to civil service as railway-mail clerks, and they are in a very unfortunate position. They are working out their lives doing as much as men who get two or three hundred dollars a year more.

They are over 35 years of age, and therefore they can not be taken into the civil service in the regular way. They are They are unfit for any other sort of work except this, because they have given their lives practically to it. There are only 12 of them in the whole country and no more can be employed, because this particular class of men has been discontinued, and the department has not hired one of those men in fifteen or twenty years.

Mr. OVERSTREET. For fifteen years.

Mr. DRISCOLL. There will be no extra expense incurred by this amendment which I offer. If they are taken into the regular service they will be simply called clerks, and they will do the work they have been doing for years. We will impose no extra expense on the Government except possibly $100 a year for 12 men, and they have earned that over and over again for several years back, and I do hope, in view of the merits of this proposition, that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Macon] will not insist on his point of order.
Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I will simply state that if the gentleman from Arkansas does not insist upon his point of order I have no objection to the adoption of this amendment. What the gentleman from New York [Mr. Driscoll] has said is correct. Quite a while ago, when they inaugurated that practice

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if this was not a matter that was thrashed out in committee?

Mr. OVERSTREET. It was not thrashed out. It was suggested and was not agreed to. I have always favored the placing of these 12 porters as clerks. They have earned their position by service.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is it not a fact that the Second Assistant Postmaster-General and the general superintendent also favor this amendment?

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is my recollection.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, can we not have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. DRISCOLL. All there is of it is that these 12 men be taken into the regular service and be called clerks.

Mr. COX of Indiana. What 12 men does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. DRISCOLL. There are only 12 men now in the service at the present time who were employed about fifteen years ago and who were called "porters," and there is no demand for them as porters. They are not doing work as porters; they are doing work as regular mail clerks, handling letters, and this amendment is to the effect that they be called clerks in the service.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Why have they not been promoted heretofore?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Because they are not in the civil service as mail clerks, and they are over 35 years of age, too old to take the examination and be admitted to the civil service in the regular way.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Are they too old to stand the civil-service examination for this kind of work? Mr. DRISCOLL. They are too old to stand the civil-service examination for admission as mail clerks.

Mr. LANDIS. They are not eligible under the law. Mr. COX of Indiana. Where do these porters live?

Mr. DRISCOLL. All over the United States. There are only 12 of them altogether.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Has the gentleman got the names of all of them?

Mr. DRISCOLL. They are not needed any more as porters, and when they leave the service or die there will be none left in this class. They are what are left of several who were appointed many years ago, and I think they ought to be taken care of in this way.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I have understood that it took dimes to make dollars, and if we are

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask a question that the gentleman from Arkansas can answer as well as anybody. Is this a new provision?

Mr. MACON. 'This is a new amendment. As I started to say, Mr. Chairman, if we are careless about the saving of the dimes then the dollars will get away from us. I think, Mr. Chairman, that we are extravagant enough in the maintenance of the affairs of this Government at this time. We are told that it is necessary to increase salaries of employees in order to increase the efficiency of the public service. I have never known of a private enterprise, the business of which was running behind year in and year out, month in and month out, where it was alleged that the salaries of those who were conducting the affairs of the business ought to be increased in order to make it efficient. We know that the revenues of the Govern-ment do not meet its expenditures at this time, and hence I can not see the wisdom of increasing the salaries of employees while that condition exists.

Mr. Chairman, I fully appreciate everything the gentleman from New York [Mr. Driscoll] has said about these porters being too old to become mail clerks by promotion; but I think that if they are too old to become mail clerks under existing law that they are too old for Congress to increase their salaries and make them clerks, and for that reason I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. If the gentleman will yield to me for just a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield? Mr. OVERSTREET. If the gentleman will simply withhold

his point of order—

Mr. MACON. Yes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have sent to the committee room and have before me the names of the 12 men who are called "porters," the lines upon which they run, the date of their appointments, and their respective ages.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order—
The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Georgia state his point of order?

Mr. GRIGGS. The gentleman from Arkansas has withdrawn his point of order.

Mr. MACON. No; at the request of the gentleman I have reserved it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas reserves the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I merely want to put this in the RECORD to show where these men are at work.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to insert the document which he has just sent to of order, the Clerk's desk in the Record. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The list is as follows:

The CHAIRMAN.* Does the gentleman from Arkansas insist upon the point of order?
Mr. MACON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.
Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman wait just one moment?

want to make one statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not proceed except by unanimous consent.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I think he ought to have unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent-

Mr. DRISCOLL. Just to make one statement in reference to these men. The man I know, who lives in my district, is as white as any man here, and I believe everyone of these porters are all white men, all American citizens, and I wish the gentleman-

Mr. MACON. Nobody has said anything about the color of these porters; color has not been mentioned.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman

Mr. FINLEY. I ask unanimous consent that this item be passed over until we finish the next page, page 20.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed without prejudice until the reading of page 20 be concluded. Is there objection?

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. What paragraph is it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to find out whether there is any objection to the request.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I wish to find out what the paragraph is; what it is we are to allow to go over.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Nobody seems to object—
Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I was on my feet, and objected.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For actual and necessary expenses of division superintendents, assistant division superintendents, and chief clerks. Railway Mail Service, and railway postal clerks, while actually traveling on business of the Post-Office Department and away from their several designated head-quarters, $23,000.

Mr. GRIGGS and Mr. MOON of Tennessee rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] is recognized.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that this section is obnoxious to the rules of the House which prevent any new legislation on appropriation bills except in accordance with the general law. I make the point of order that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] makes the point of order that it is new legislation.

Mr. GOEBEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold his point of order?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] if it is his purpose to insist on his point of order?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I made it in earnest. I would not make the point of order otherwise.

Mr. GRIGGS. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Tennessee debated this question before he made the point

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was following that very closely. The gentleman was making a statement perhaps necessary as preliminary to his point, and the Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GRIGGS].

Mr. GOEBEL. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr.

Moon] withhold his point of order for a moment?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I may as well be candid with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Goebel]. I know exactly what his amendment is, and I know it is bad legislation, and, in my opinion, it ought not to be passed. The best way, I think, to kill obnoxious legislation is to insist on the point of order, and I insist upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] if there is any existing permanent law authorizing this appropriation?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Not that I am aware of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has had occasion— Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I understand from the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Finley] that there is a misapprehension in the mind of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] on the question of fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has had occasion to rule on some similar questions some two or three times to-day, and the Chair has given some investigation to the matter. the Chair has given some investigation to the matter which the gen-Chair in his ruling will take care of the matter which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] refers to.

Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. GRIGGS. Am I in order to offer an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not in order to offer an amendment at this time.

Mr. GOEBEL. Has the Chair ruled? The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. It has been repeatedly held that the insertion of a provision in an appropriation bill makes law for that year onlylaw," as it is called-unless the language used clearly indicates an intention to extend the operation of the provision beyond that fiscal year and to work a permanent change in the law. The language of the provision to which the point of order is directed indicates no such intention. The fact that such a provision has been carried in an appropriation bill more than one year-it may be for many years-does not alter the principle. It has been held that the reenactment from year to year of a law intended to apply during the year of its enactment only does not relieve the provision from the point of order. In the third session of the Fifty-eighth Congress, when the army appropriation bill was under consideration, a similar question arose. A point of order was made against a provision in that bill which had been carried in army appropriation bills for the three previous years. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Bou-Tell] was in the chair, and in sustaining the point of order he

Although this provision may have been carried for a number of years, it has never been carried in the form of a statutory enactment, but as a provision, always subject to a point of order, governing this appropriation for a single year.

From this ruling an appeal was taken, and the decision of the Chair was sustained by the committee.

There can be, under the rules, no authorization by prescription or practice. It is true that a provision in an appropriation bill reenacting verbatim an existing permanent law is not subject to a point of order; but the Chair assumes, from what has been said, that the only law covering this point is that found in former post-office appropriation bills in language identical with the language of this provision. With that understanding of the facts, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I appeal from the decision

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Mur-DOCK] appeals from the decision of the Chair, and the question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee? Upon that question the Chair desires and will order tellers. The Chair will name the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Overstreet] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Mur-DOCK] as tellers. Tellers will please take their places.

The committee divided; and tellers reported—yeas 93, nays 24. So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent, light, fuel, telegraph, and miscellaneous office expenses, schedules of mail trains, telephone service, and badges for railway postal clerks, $59,000, including rental of offices for division headquarters, Railway Mail Service, in Washington, D. C.

Mr. GOEBEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last I regret very much that a point of order is made to a proposition that has been carried in every appropriation bill for last ten years. The opposition to this paragraph is not aimed at the paragraph itself. The paragraph as it stands provides for the expenses of certain superintendents and other officers to the extent of $23,000. There can not be any objection to the paragraph itself. The gentleman who makes the point of order has over and over again in the committee voted for the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend a moment. The Chair must call the attention of the gentleman to the rule which provides that in debate matters which occur in the committee must not be mentioned.

Mr. GOEBEL. The objection, therefore, was made because the gentleman knew that I intended to offer an amendment which provides for the expenses of the railway mail clerks.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee, Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me to interrupt him just a moment? There is nothing to be concealed on my part about this point of order. I happened to be aware of the fact that the gentleman had prepared an amendment, to be proposed to that paragraph, adding $2,000,000 to this section to pay for meals and lodgings of railway mail clerks while away from their homes. As stated in my remarks yesterday, I have no objection to an increase of pay by way of salary to these men, but I do object to legislation of this nature. I do object to the proposition of having accounts taken for meals and lodgings of the men while traveling. I think it is bad legislation, and made the point of order against this section so that the gentleman could not hinge his amendment onto it. That was the very purpose. Later on we are going to take care of these clerks by proper amendment of the law, increasing their salaries, so that they may live like gentlemen, and not like children of the Government.

Mr. GOEBEL. You therefore, in making your point of order, refused to submit to this committee the proposition whether such an appropriation ought to be made.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I think it would be bad legislation.

Mr. GOEBEL. Why not trust the judgment of this commit-Why not leave the paragraph without making a point of order? You could have voted against my amendment if you saw fit; but by your point of order to the paragraph itself you do cut out every amendment, and for that reason you made the point of order.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I wanted to cut it out, root and branch, so that you could not get in your amendment. That was all.

Mr. GOEBEL. I understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again caution the gentleman against referring to a Member in the second person. While the gentleman may criticise the remarks of a gentleman, he can not comment upon the motives that led to their utterance.

Mr. GOEBEL. I do not intend to comment upon the motives of the gentleman, but I am stating a fact, which he admits.

Now. I say, Mr. Chairman, that that is not good legislation, and it is not in the interests of good legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask the Clerk to proceed with the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

For per diem allowance of assistant superintendents while actually traveling on official business away from their home, their official domicile, and their headquarters, at a rate to be fixed by the Postmaster-General, not to exceed $4 per day, $30,000, and for their necessary official expenses not covered by their per diem allowance, not exceeding $3,600; in all, $33,600.

Mr. OLMSTED. I desire to call attention to the manifest inconsistency of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon]. He made the point of order which knocked out of the bill the provision for paying the expenses of the railway mail clerks, giving as his reason that he did not wish them to be the objects of paternal care or paternal government. Now, here is a provision for paying the expenses of assistant superintendents while away from home in the line of their duty, and the gentleman from Tennessee is quite content. He makes no point of order against it; neither do I. It is quite proper that their expenses be paid. But if it is "paternal" in one case, why not in the other? Are not the railway mail clerks—that most excellent body of public servants, whose duty requires them to be away from home—entitled to their expenses as well as the higher officers? No good reason has yet been advanced, and by the point of order we are prevented from discussing and voting upon the merits of the proposition.

For balances due foreign countries, $304,000.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting some information from the chairman. I do not understand this appropriation. It says "for balance due foreign countries, $304,000." I notice it is an in-I notice it is an increase of $125,000 over the amount carried in the last bill for the same purpose.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is for the purpose of paying foreign governments the difference between what they owe us and what we owe them. It is like a clearance, sometimes more and sometimes less. The balance is usually heavily against us, because they do more for us than we do for them. It is mail service where our mail is carried through other countries. We pay them the same rate as their rate, and they pay us the same rate as our rate, and we strike the balance, and it is paid in this way.

Mr. MACON. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For travel and miscellaneous expenses in the postal service, office of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, $1,000.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to ask a question of the chairman. It is in relation to the preceding paragraph, for actual and necessary expenses of division superintendents, travel and pay, which went out on the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon].

Mr. OVERSTREET. That was stricken out.
Mr. MURDOCK. I know it is out. This has been carried for a matter of sixty years. It is now out of the bill. It was a very necessary appropriation; and what I ask the gentleman is, Can anything be done to restore it?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not know; and I do not think the gentleman's statement is accurate that it has been in the bill for sixty years. The gentleman is so familiar with the rules, and familiar with the various ways of overcoming them, I will pass it back to him. [Laughter.]

Mr. MURDOCK. I want to say to the gentleman that I never have seen a standing committee of this House before surrender a part of its own bill in order to escape an expression of sentiment in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not addressing himself to the subject of his amendment. I would like to complete the bill to-night, and I hate to hold Members here so long.

The CHAIRMAN. It is very difficult for the chairman of the committee to state just when a Member is not speaking to an amendment to strike out the last word. The Chair thinks the debate must be confined to the paragraph.

Mr. MURDOCK. I have nothing against the paragraph that has been read. I am out of order, and will take my seat, according to the rule. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Supplies for the rural delivery service, including collection boxes, furniture, satchels, badges, straps, map supplies, repairing satchels and furniture, repairing, erecting, and painting collection boxes in the rural delivery service, $60,000.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 25, page 25, add as a separate paragraph:
"The age limit fixed by the Civil Service Commission for rural letter carriers shall not apply to persons who served in the civil war and were honorably discharged."

Mr. OVERSTREET. I make a point of order against that. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will not the gentleman withhold his point of order?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I dislike not to accommodate the gentleman, but I want to complete the bill to-night, and I do not want to hold Members here so late.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I believe the gentleman would accept the amendment.

Mr. OVERSTREET. No; I heard the amendment.

Mr. COCKRAN. Regular order!
The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To defray expenses incident to the shipment of supplies, including hardware, boxing, packing, cartage, freight, and the pay of 1 carpenter and 3 laborers for assignment in connection therewith, $100,000.

Mr. SLEMP. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 26, after line 4, insert the following:

"That on and after July 1, 1909, letter carriers of the rural delivery service shall receive a salary not exceeding $1,200 per annum, graded according to length of routes. And each carrier in said service shall receive an additional $100 per annum as compensation for the use of horse and vehicle. In addition to the foregoing, there shall be allowed to each carrier who carries a lock pouch, compensation to be fixed by the Postmaster-General, not exceeding $100 per annum."

Mr. OVERSTREET. To that I make a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of letter carriers, substitutes for carriers on annual leave, clerks in charge of substations, and tolls and ferriage, rural delivery service, $37,360,000, of which amount the sum of $163,000 shall be immediately available: Provided, That not to exceed $12,000 of the amount hereby appropriated may be used for compensation of clerks in charge of substations: Provided further, That in the discretion of the Postmaster-General the pay of any carrier on a water route who furnishes his own power boat and is employed during the summer months may be fixed at an amount not exceeding $900 in any one calendar year.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "thirty-seven," in line 7, page 36, and insert the words "forty-

On page 26, line 7, strike out the words "thirty-seven" and insert "forty-one."

Mr. GRIGGS. And to add thereto "of which amount four millions per annum shall be for maintenance and horse hire of Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to that, and that there are two amendments.

Mr. GRIGGS. I will withdraw the last part of the amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment may be regarded as a single amendment, and the Chair sustains the point of order.
Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Page 26, at the end of line 17, add:

"Provided further, That of the sum hereby appropriated not exceeding $20,000 may be expended for experimental purposes in the delivery of packages of merchandise weighing not over 11 pounds over rural routes designated by the Postmaster-General, under such regulations and at such special rates of postage as he may prescribe, provided that packages thus delivered shall originate on the same routes on which they are delivered."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that amendment is both contrary to existing law and not germane to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 26, at the end of line 17, add:
"Provided further, That of the sum appropriated in this paragraph $20,000 shall be applied under the direction of the Postmaster-General for experimental delivery of packages originating on the same routes on which they are delivered, under such rules and regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I request the gentleman from Indiana to reserve it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 17, page 26, add as a separate section:
"In passing upon a petition for the establishment of a rural free delivery route neither the color nor the illiteracy of the petitioners shall be considered."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of line 17, page 26, the following: "Provided further, That the 25th day of December, when it falls on any day other than Sunday, shall be a legal holiday for rural mail carriers, and substitutes shall be employed to carry mails on said days and paid at the rate of $3 per day."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read, and I would give notice that I desire to discuss the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 26, at the end of line 17, add:
"Provided further, That no part of the sum appropriated in this paragraph shall be paid to carriers who deliver packages, except under rules and regulations prescribed by the Postmaster-General."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order, and the Chair is ready to rule. The matter is too plain for discussion on the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, after the word "available," page 26, line 10, the

Amend by inserting, after the word "available," page 26, line 10, the following:

"Provided, The rural carriers shall be hereafter required, under such rules and regulations as may be established by the Post-Office Department, to carry parcels originating at any point on their respective routes, and for delivery at any point on their said routes, any parcel or package weighing not over 11 pounds at the following rate of compensation, 5 cents for the first pound"—

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, the Clerk has gone far enough to indicate that the amendment is out of order. It is quite apparent that it is subject to a point of order, and I make the point of order.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, I think I am entitled to have the amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. If any part of a proposition is out of order, it is all out of order. As soon as it is apparent that the amendment is out of order, that fact is disclosed, it is proper for a gentleman to make the point of order. The point of order has been made and the Chair sustains the point of order; and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the appropriations herein made for the officers, clerks, and persons employed in the postal service shall not be available for the compensation of any persons permanently incapacitated for performing such service. The establishment of a civil-pension roll or an honorable-service roll, or the exemption of any of the officers, clerks, and persons in the postal service from the existing laws respecting employment in such service, is hereby prohibited.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so for the purpose of calling the attention of the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Overstreet], who is in charge of the bill, together with the attention of the members of the Committee of the Whole House, to the fact that the amendment which I offered is in every way analagous to the amendment to the post-office appropriation bill of 1893, which established the rural free-delivery service.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I feel I must make the point of order that the gentleman is not addressing himself to his amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. GRIGGS. the gentleman from Alabama may argue the point of order. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama has been recognized and the Chair overrules the point of order, and the gentleman from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to the fact that some of the most valuable legislation, if this could be called legislation under the point of order, has been provided by such amendments as the one proposed, and all I asked the chairman to do was to explain his point of order or reserve it, so that I might make it plain that this would not involve any expense to the Government; that it would not entail any competition with any private companies whatsoever: that it would be of great benefit to the patrons of rural delivery routes throughout the whole country, and I speak advisedly, for my own district pro rata utilizes the rural delivery service for money orders and registration more than any district in the United States. Great service would be rendered to 18,000,000 of our population, and at the same time a large revenue would accrue to the Government. The amendment only provides for a trial; and if the trial should prove successful and should be applied generally, it is estimated that the revenue would exceed $15,000,000 annually without entailing additional expense, going far toward making the rural free delivery self-sustaining and toward wiping out the annual deficit in the Post-Office Department.

The hour is late, but it would only require five minutes' time for the amendment to be adopted by unanimous consent. I ask, therefore, that the amendment that I proposed be considered by unanimous consent at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the amendment which he proposed be considered now. Is there objection?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, under all the circumstances and the lateness of the hour and the desire of gentlemen to complete the bill and adjourn, I shall object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The gentleman has one minute left, if he desires to use it.

Mr. HOBSON. I wish to remind the gentleman from Indiana that this amendment only provides for packages that originate on the rural delivery routes, and I should like for the half minute that is left me to be utilized by the gentleman from Indiana in specifying his objections.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Does the gentleman yield to me a half minute?

Mr. HOBSON. I give the gentleman my remaining half minute of time and he can take what other time he desires, I presume.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, under the circumstances will utilize that half minute by asking the Clerk to read.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a separate paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Insert, after line 13, page 27, the following:

"For per diem allowance of inspectors in the field while actually traveling on official business away from their home, their official domicile, and their headquarters, at a rate to be fixed by the Postmaster-General, not to exceed $4 per day, $325,000: Provided, That the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, allow inspectors per diem while temporarily located at any place on business away from their home, or their designated domicile, for a period not exceeding twenty consecutive days at any one place and make rules and regulations governing the foregoing provisions relating to per diem: And provided further, That no per diem shall be paid to inspectors receiving annual salaries of $2,000 or more."

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order against that amendment, that it is new legislation.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, this is the same paragraph that went out on a point of order earlier in the afternoon, and I afterwards called the attention of the Chair to the permanent statute.

The CHAIRMAN. Since the ruling of the Chair on the proposition earlier in the afternoon, the attention of the Chair has been called to the permanent law, which authorizes, in the opinion of the Chair, the appropriation, and the Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. Mr. GOEBEL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word or two upon the amendment that has been offered. This morning I made a point of order upon the paragraph which contained the amendment just offered. I had reason to believe that there would be a point of order made against the paragraph on page 20, which the gentleman from Tennessee did subsequently make, and if it had not been made would have permitted me to offer an amendment allowing the expenses of railway mail clerks.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment as now proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Overstreet] provides for a per diem compensation to certain classes of employees in the Railway

Mail Service

Mr. OVERSTREET. Not in the Railway Mail Service.

Mr. GOEBEL. Well, in the postal service. To permit this amendment to be adopted you would be discriminating in the interest of a certain class of employees and against railway mail clerks and other employees in this great department. By this amendment you propose to give them, in addition to their compensation, a per diem of not less than $4 a day and expenses.

Why this discrimination? What service do they perform that is not included in the regular course of their duties which would warrant this additional compensation? I might have explained to the gentleman from Indiana some matters in relation to this item if he had permitted me to do so. I do now object to the adoption of this amendment, because it discriminates in the interest of one class as against another class. The railway mail clerks have their duties to perform, and while in the performance of that duty they are subjected to certain expense. It was my purpose in offering the amendment to permit an appropriation of $2,000,000 for expenses, leaving it for the Post-Office Department to audit their accounts and stipulating that the amount should not exceed $1 a day to any one clerk. I was not permitted to offer that amendment by reason of the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee to the entire paragraph. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that we ought to be consistent. There is no reason for selecting this class of employees and giving them $4 a day as a per diem and traveling expenses. Now, then, I object to the adoption of this amendment, because it does make an unfair and unjust discrimination.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, just a word-of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I offer that as a separate paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a separate paragraph at the end of the bill: "For traveling expenses of inspectors without per diem allowance, inspectors in charge, and the chief post-office inspector, and expenses incurred by inspectors not covered by per diem allowance, $35,000."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Acordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Currier, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 26305, the post-office appropriation bill, and had instructed him to report the same to the House with amendments, with a recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I rise to the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

Mr. GOEBEL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. If the previous question is carried, does it prevent any amendment to this bill?

The SPEAKER. Certainly. The adoption of the previous question closes debate and opportunity for amendment.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET].

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the vote will be taken on the amendments en

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to. The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Overstreet, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2024) to amend an act authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to grant to the Veteran Volunteer Firemen's Association use of certain property in the city of Washington, approved March 2, 1891.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles, in which the con-currence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5727. An act to establish an assay office at Los Angeles, State of California;

S. 7472. An act transferring the Indian school at Morris, Minn., to the State of Minnesota for an agricultural school;

S. 8021. An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes;

S. R. 108. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Mr. Demetrio Castillo, jr., of Cuba; and S. R. 118. Joint resolution to enable the States of Tennessee and Arkansas to agree upon a boundary line and to determine the jurisdiction of crimes committed on the Mississippi River and adjacent territory.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the con-currence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 24151. An act entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of War to donate two condemned brass or bronze cannon or fieldpieces and cannon balls to the county court of Marshall County, W. Va.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6359) to change the name and jurisdiction of the inferior court of justice of the peace in the District of Columbia, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Gallinger, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. MARTIN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolutions of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below

S. R. 108. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point, Mr. Demetrio Castillo, jr., of Cuba—to the Committee on Military Affairs:

S. 5727. An act to establish an assay office at Los Angeles, State of California—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures;

S. 7472. An act transferring the Indian school at Morris, Minn., to the State of Minnesota for an agricultural school-to the Committee on Indian Affairs; and

S. R. 118. Joint resolution to enable the States of Tennessee and Arkansas to agree upon a boundary line and to determine the jurisdiction of crimes committed on the Mississippi River and adjacent territory-to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same: H. R. 19859. An act to provide for the payment of certain volunteers who rendered service to the Territory of Oregon in the Cayuse Indian war of 1847 and 1848;

H. R. 4166. An act to relieve George W. Black and J. R. Wilson from a certain judgment in favor of the United States, and to relieve George W. Black, J. R. Wilson, and W. M. Newell of a certain judgment in favor of the United States;

H. R. 21129. An act to provide for refunding stamp taxes paid under the act of June 13, 1898, upon foreign bills of exchange drawn between July 1, 1898, and June 30, 1901, against the value of products or merchandise actually exported to foreign countries and authorizing rebate of duties on anthracite coal imported into the United States from October 6, 1902, to Jannuary 15, 1903, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 25405. An act to change and fix the time for holding the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern and middle districts of Tennessee.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESI-DENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following joint resolu-

H. J. Res. 202. Joint resolution authorizing the granting of permits to the committee on inaugural ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on March 4, 1909, etc.: and

H. R. 15452. An act to establish two or more fish-cultural stations on Puget Sound.

WRECK OF BATTLE SHIP MAINE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States (H. Doc. No. 1376), which was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Governor Magoon, on the eve of leaving Cuba, has expressed the hope that the wreck of the battle ship Maine may be removed from the harbor of Habana. I trust the Congress will see the wisdom of this suggestion and will provide for the removal of the Maine. We should not allow the wreck of this historic ship to remain as a possible danger to navigation in Habana Harbor, for this is wise from no standpoint. An appropriation should be made for the removal.

Theodore Roosevelt.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 27, 1909.

VETO MESSAGE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States (H. Doc. No. 1375), which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without approval, for the reasons given in the accompanying documents, H. R. 15098, entitled "An act to correct the military record of John H. Layne."

The bill is highly objectionable because it proposes to alter certain historical records of the War Department which should be kept inviolate, and confers a favor without any warrant upon one special individual not entitled to such favor. It would establish a demoralizing and vicious precedent if enacted into law.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 27, 1909.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the vets message be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.
The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

AFFAIRS IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 21957) relating to affairs in the Territories, and move that the House agree to the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan calls up the following conference report. Does the gentleman desire his statement to be read instead of the report?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Yes. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 21957, entitled "A bill relating to affairs in the Territories," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as fol-

That the Senate recede form its amendments numbered 10, 11, 12, 14, 16, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 42, 43, 44, and 45.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 13, 28, 29, 30, and 46, and agree to the same. Amendment numbered 15: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered fifteen, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out insert the following:

Sec. 11. That no person shall receive a license to practice medicine or surgery, or any of the departments thereof, within the Territory of Alaska until he or she shall have, first, sub-mitted a diploma issued by some legally chartered medical school authorizing the holder thereof to practice medicine or surgery, the requirements for graduation of which medical school shall have been at the time of granting said diploma in no particular less than those prescribed by the Association of American Medical Colleges for that year, or, second, submitted proof of having practiced medicine or surgery, or both, for a period of not less than three successive years continuously prior to the passage of this act, and within the jurisdiction of one of the judicial districts of Alaska.'

And that the Senate agree to the same. Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered seventeen and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken out insert the following:
"Sec. 13. That any applicant for license to practice medicine or surgery within the Territory of Alaska not in possession of the credentials specified in section three of this act may obtain a license at the discretion of the clerk of the district court to whom he applies upon furnishing a properly attested statement, to wit: That he or she is a bona fide resident of Alaska and has been engaged in the practice of medicine exclusively within the Territory of Alaska for a period of not less than three successive years immediately prior to the passage of this act. The application shall be accompanied by the written recommendation of three bona fide residents of the judicial district wherein the applicant desires to practice, one of whom must be a physician holding a license under section three of this act, and shall state in a general way applicant's character and professional ability."

And that the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered fortyone and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out insert the following:

"That the act of the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, entitled 'An act to authorize and provide for the manufacture, maintenance, distribution, and supply of electric light and power within the district of Wailuku, on the island and county of Maui, Territory of Hawaii,' passed by the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii on the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth days of April, anno Domini, nineteen hundred and seven, be, and is hereby, amended, and as so amended is ratified, approved, and confirmed, as follows, to wit:

" 'Act 105.

"'An act to authorize and provide for the manufacture, maintenance, distribution, and supply of electric light and power within the district of Wailuku, on the island and county of Maul, Territory of Hawaii.

Said company shall also have the right to maintain, use, and operate electric meters or other means of measuring electric light, power, or current supplied from time to time, and to locate the same at such places as may be deemed necesand to locate the same at such places as may be deemed necessary for their protection; and also to charge, receive, and collect from all customers of electricity such reasonable prices as may be from time to time fixed and determined by the company: Provided, however, That power is hereby conferred upon the courts of appropriate jurisdiction at all times and upon the petition of any consumer of the company to hear and determine from time to time whether an existing rate or rates is or are unreasonable; and if a rate be unreasonable, to order the same to be decreased, and to enforce such orders by appropriate judgment or decree.

"'SEC. 7. Said company shall also have the right to charge consumers, or applicants for the use of electricity, for one-half of the cost and expense of making connections between the company's nearest line of supply and the premises where the electricity is to be used; such cost and expense to include the price of all wires, poles, insulators, and other materials, and labor necessary to be used in making such connections: Provided, however, That the company shall not be required to make, construct, or maintain said connections as aforesaid for supplying light or power unless the applicants therefor, if required, shall deposit in advance with the company a sum of money, sufficient to pay one-half of the total cost and expense of making and constructing such connections and for current for the period of one month.

Sec. 8. The said company shall have the right to acquire, hold, or take over, either by purchase or lease, property, both real, personal, and mixed, as may be necessary or incidental to the proper conduct of its business; but said company shall not have the right or power to purchase franchises and property of any other company of like nature in said district of Lahaina.

"'SEC. 9. Said company, whenever from time to time it shall be deemed expedient in the furtherance of the objects of the company, shall have the power to borrow money and to secure the payment thereof, with the interest agreed upon, by mort-gage of any or all of its property, franchises, and privileges granted or obtained by virtue of this act, or, if it is deemed ad-visable, bonds may be issued, secured by deed of trust of such property, not to exceed sixty per centum of the actual value thereof, with all future acquired property, as well as the income and receipts of the property from whatever source derived and in such form and under such terms as the company shall deem advisable: Provided, That nothing in this section contained shall operate to prevent said company from obtaining the usual business credits and to make promissory notes without security.

"'SEC. 10. That said company, its representatives, successors, and assigns, shall be responsible for any damages, either to person or property, resulting from any act of negligence on its part, which may occur by reason of the exercise of any of the privileges herein granted.

"'SEC. 11. It is provided that if the company shall fail or refuse to do or perform or comply with any of the provisions of this act or of the laws of the Territory of Hawaii, or of the county of Maui, and continues to refuse and fail to perform or comply therewith after reasonable notice given by the superintendent of public works or any proper county or municipal officer or board, said officer or board may, with the consent of the governor and of the attorney-general, cause proceedings to be instituted before an appropriate tribunal to have the franchise granted hereby and all rights and privileges accruing thereunder forfeited and declared null and void.

"'SEC. 12. It is hereby expressly provided that nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to grant the company an exclusive right to furnish, sell, or supply electric light and power.

" 'Governor of the Territory of Hawaii.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

E. L. HAMILTON, A. B. CAPRON, JAMES T. LLOYD, Managers on the part of the House. ALBERT J. BEVERIDGE, KNUTE NELSON, JAMES P. CLARKE, Managers on the part of the Senate.

The Clerk read the statement as follows: STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 21957) relating to affairs in the Territories, submit the following detailed statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the conference report, namely:

The Senate recedes from its amendments Nos. 10, 11, 12, 14, 16, 18, 19, 20, 21, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 42, 43, 44, and 45.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 13, 28, 29, 30 and 46, and agrees to the same.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate No. 15, 17, and 41, and agrees to the same with Amendments Nos. 1, 2, and 3 relate to the signature of bonds which the town of Valdez, Alaska, is authorized to issue, requiring them to be actually signed by the mayor and clerk instead of having the signatures lithographed or printed, and require that the seal of the town be attached to them.

Amendments Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13 are changes in phraseology in that part of the act relating to the regulation of the liquor traffic in Alaska.

Amendment No. 14 struck out that part of the act relating to the practice of medicine and surgery in Alaska requiring practitioners to obtain licenses. The agreement restores the pro-

Amendment No. 15 struck out the section of that part of the act relating to the practice of medicine and surgery in Alaska. The agreement restores the section, except that the time which the applicant must have practiced in Alaska before he can obtain license is changed from five to three years.

Amendment No. 16 struck out the third section of that part of the act relating to the practice of medicine and surgery in Alaska.

Amendment No. 17 restores the fourth section of that part of the act relating to the practice of medicine and surgery in Alaska, except that the time which the applicant must have practiced is changed from five to three years and the jurisdiction within which he or she must have practiced is changed from "the judicial district in which the application is filed" to "the district of Alaska."

Amendments Nos. 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22, respectively, struck out the fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, and ninth sections of that part of the act relating to the pracice of medicine and surgery in Alaska. The agreement restores these sections without change.

Amendments Nos. 23, 24, 25, 26, and 27 changed the numbering of the sections of the act as it passed the House. The agreement restores the House numbering of the sections.

Amendments Nos. 28, 29, and 30 relate to the signature of bonds which the city of Phoenix, Ariz., is authorized to issue, requiring them to be actually signed by the mayor and recorder instead of having the signatures lithographed or printed, and require that the seal of the city be attached to them.

Amendments Nos. 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, and 40 changed the numbering of the sections of the act as it passed the House. The agreement restores the House numbering of the Amendment No. 41 struck out all of the act relating to the approval of certain acts of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Hawaii authorizing and providing for the manufacture, maintenance, distribution, and supply of electric light and power in the districts of Wailuku and Lahaina, Hawaii. The agreement restores the part stricken out, excepting a clause in each of the territorial acts relating to charges for electric light and power. The act as affected by the agreement of conferees leaves the regulation of rates in the courts, upon petition of consumers.

It should be stated that the provisions covered by amendment No. 41 were stricken out by the Senate so that the subject-matter could be referred to the Senate Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, since which time the Senate committee has favorably reported to the Senate two bills (S. 7697 and S. 7698) covering the subject-matter of the amendment, the Senate Committee on the Territories, to whom the omnibus bill was referred, not having jurisdiction of matters relating to the Territory of Hawaii under the rules of the Senate.

Amendments Nos. 42, 43, 44, and 45 changed the numbering of the sections of the act as it passed the House. The agreement restores the House numbering of the sections.

Amendment No. 46 added a provision that no obligation shall be created against or assumed by the United States on account of any bond or bonds issued in pursuance of the authority granted in this act, and that notice of the provision shall be printed on the face of each bond issued. The House receded from its disagreement to this very proper amendment.

E. L. HAMILTON. A. B. CAPRON. JAMES T. LLOYD, Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask what the point was about the doctors?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Doctors in Alaska? Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; what was it? Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Does the gentleman mean the report of the conferees?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes. Something was said about their being required to do something for three years.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. As a part of this bill, there was a provision as to the practice of medicine and surgery in Alaska. It seems that the natives there have been subjected to the operations of quacks and unskilled men. The House provided for a five-year provision, but in conference in was changed to three years

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Three years for what? Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I can explain it to the gentleman.

Three years in practice.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Physicians who are graduates of institutions are entitled to a license, but those who had prac-of institutions are entitled to a license, but those who had practiced for five years, as provided by the House—

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And are not graduates?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If they have been practicing three years and are not graduates, this law applies to them?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. That is it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is all right.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the conference report is

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the conference report is agreed to.

There was no objection.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Miller Dunaway, Fiftysixth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of C. H. Webb, administrator of estate of David B. Sanders, against The United States (H. Doc. No. 1371)—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation for a building for the Geological Survey (H. Doc. No. 1372)—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIAS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a joint memorial of the legislature of Washington, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as Senate joint memorial 2. By Senator Potts.

To the Honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

and House of Representatives of the United States:

Your memorialists, the senate and house of representatives of the State of Washington, most respectively represent:

That whereas Alaska has no government of its own and must look to the Federal Legislature for all public aid and assistance, and it is of the highest importance that wagon roads be constructed in Alaska to facilitate the transportation of freight and supplies to the various interior mining districts, where transportation charges now run into hundreds and even thousands of dollars per ton; and

Whereas the State of Washington, being nearest in point of distance to Alaska, has more intimate relations of commerce than any other State, and directly receives the greatest harvest of gold flowing from that great district, whence it finds its way throughout the Union, to the great enrichment of the whole United States:

Therefore your memorialists do pray the Congress of the United States that the sum of $1,000,000 be forthwith appropriated, to be used under the direction of the board of road commissioners of Alaska, who have done most valuable work with the limited means at their disposal, for trunk roads in Alaska, which will speedly be followed by railroad construction, to the permanent development of a vast mineral region.

Passed the senate January 11, 1909.

M. E. Huy,

Passed the house January 11, 1909.

M. E. Huy, President of the Senate.

LEO V. MEIGS, . Speaker of the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a joint memorial of the legislature of the State of Washington, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 1. By Senator Minkler. Against the removal of the duty on forest products.

the duty on forest products.

Whereas the lumber industry is the leading one in the State of Washington, giving employment to over 100,000 men, to whom are paid annually in wages the sum of $75,000,000, and has for many years been the mainstay of the Pacific Northwest; and

Whereas owners of Canadian timber lands and others are advocating the removal of the duty on lumber and forest products, with the view of transferring the lumber industry of this country to Canada; and

Whereas the State of Washington had a bitter experience under the free-trade Wilson bill a decade ago, and realizing the effect of a similar measure on wages and general business: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the legislature of the State of Washington, in session assembled, do most earnestly urge upon the Ways and Means Committee and Congress to retain the existing duty on forestry products; and be it further

Mr. TELLER. I present a telegram addressed to the Delegate from Arizona, which I desire to have read to the Senate. It is a memorial of one house of the legislative assembly of Arizona. I have had it copied, so that the Secretary may read it. I ask to have it read and referred to the Committee on Territories

There being no objection, the memorial was read and referred to the Committee on Territories, as follows:

[Copy of telegram.]

PHOENIX, ARIZ., January 25, 1909.

Hon. MARK A. SMITH,

Delegate to Congress from Arizona, Washington, D. C.

House memorial No. 1.

To the honorable the Senate and
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:
Your memorialists, the twenty-fifth legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona, most respectfully represent that Whereas Arizona has long wanted to take its proper place in the Union of States vested with all the rights to which American citizens are entitled under the Constitution our forefathers have handed down to us; and

Whereas Congress has now under consideration the admission of certain Territories, all of which are urging their claims: Be it

Resolved, That this legislature asks that you give our fitness a fair hearing, lay aside legislation less vital, and grant Arizona immediate statehood; and be it further Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house is hereby instructed to transmit this memorial by wire to the Hon. MARK A. SMITH, Arizona Delegate.

BEN R. CLARK, Chief Clerk.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM presented sundry affidavits, to accompany the bill (S. 6755) granting an increase of pension to Wilbert B. Teters, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM presented a memorial of Local Branch, Railway Postal Clerks' Association, of Peoria, Ill., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for the retirement of superannuated employees in the railway postal clerks' classified service, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

ROBERT LANSON

ROBERT LANSDON, Secretary of State.

Mr. McCUMBER. I present a memorial signed by sundry citizens of Page and Fargo, in the State of North Dakota, remonstrating against the repeal of the duty on barley, wheat, and other grains imported from foreign countries. I ask that the body of the memorial be printed in the Record, omitting the names, and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance,

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, omitting the names, as follows:

Whereas it has been called to our attention that efforts are being made to effect a reduction or elimination of import duty on barley, wheat, and other grains. We respectfully call your attention to the fact that the free importation of barley, wheat, and other grains, which would result from the elimination or material reduction of the present import duty, will place the American farmer in competition with the peasant farmer of Russia and the cheap labor from other countries of the world.

The presenting of our Nation is leaved to the present the presenting of the present the countries of the world.

The prosperity of our Nation is largely dependent upon the success of our farming communities, and any attempt to reduce them to the level of foreign competition will prove disastrous to not only the farmers of the country, but also to all branches of industry dependent upon the agricultural masses for their existence and success.

Therefore we respectfully ask that you, as our Representative in Congress, use all possible means to prevent any reduction of the import duties on barley, wheat, or any other grain.

Mr. GALLINGER presented petitions of sundry citizens of Troy, N. H., praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Anacostia Citizens' Association of the District of Columbia, praying for the enactment of legislation for a reduction in price of gas in the District of Columbia, and that the product be free from monoxide, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a memorial of the Anacostia Citizens' Association of the District of Columbia, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to relinquish the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission over the street railway companies of the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. DEPEW presented petitions of sundry citizens of Canandaigua, Vesper, Hoosick, and Rhinebeck, all in the State of New York, praying for the passage of the so-called "rural parcels-post" and "postal savings banks" bills, which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Waterloo, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 4029) to appoint warren C. Beach a captain in the army and place him on the retired list (Report No. 867); and A bill (H. R. 4836) granting to the Norfolk County Water Company the right to lay and maintain a water main through the military reservation on Willoughby Spit, Norfolk County, Va. (Report No. 868).

Mr. WARRIN from the Committee County (M. 1988).

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 4931) to correct the military record of Corwin M. Holt (Report No. 869); and

A bill (H. R. 17572) for the relief of George M. Voorhees (Report No. 870).

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6344) granting an increase of pension to J. M. Crosby, submitted an adverse report (No. 871) thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7879) to correct the military record of Pomeroy Parker, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, which was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7742) to increase the limit of cost for purchase of site and erection of a post-office building at Elwood, Ind., reported it without amendment.

Mr. BOURNE, from the Committee on Fisheries, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. Wetmore on the 18th instant proposing to appropriate $25,000 for the establishment of a fish-cultural station, including purchase of site, etc., at some suitable point in the State of Rhode Island, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, which was agreed to.

UNION RAILROAD SUBSTATION.

Mr. MARTIN. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 26920) to repeal section 12 of an act entitled "An act to provide for a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1903, and to provide for the location and erection of a substation on the parking at the corner formed by the intersection of the east side of Seventh street and the south side of C street SW., in the city of Washington, D. C., by the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company, and to provide for the approval of the same by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BURROWS. That is a very important measure. Either time will have to be taken up now to explain it or it had better go to the calendar.

Mr. MARTIN. I hope the Senator will not object to its consideration. It is a House bill which has been carefully considered, and it is recommended by the commissioners. It is a matter of great concern to people coming in here. It provides for just a little substation, and I hope the Senator will not It has been carefully considered.

Mr. BURROWS. The chairman of the committee—
Mr. MARTIN. The chairman of the committee is in thorough accord with the measure.

Mr. BURROWS. I understand the chairman of the committee says that he thinks it is a proper measure; but unexplained, it would seem to me that it would involve a good

Mr. MARTIN. The chairman of the committee, I am sure, has given it consideration and is in thorough accord with me in the matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, there has been a good deal of controversy over the substation matter. So far as I have examined it I feel that this is the proper solution of the question. The House has passed the bill. I think I am correct in saying that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia have recommended it.

Mr. MARTIN. They have.

Mr. GALLINGER. And no one has appeared to object to it, so far as I know.

Mr. MARTIN. The Commissioners of the District went to the premises with the representatives of the railroad company and the Member of the House from the district adjacent to Washington, and myself, and the matter has been adjusted to the complete satisfaction of everybody.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of all parties?
Mr. MARTIN. Of all parties.
Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to know where it is located.
Mr. MARTIN. It is located at Seventh street. The location at Fourteenth street was a most unfortunate one, and the Commissioners after consenting to it undertook to withdraw their consent because of its unsuitability. It was then taken to the courts and decided that they could not withdraw their consent. This bill gives the right to make the change to Seventh street, which is especially adapted to this purpose.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is not on the Avenue?

Mr. MARTIN. No, sir; it is not on the Avenue, but it is in immediate reach of the street-car service.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE COLUMBIA RIVER, OREGON.

Mr. FRYE. I report favorably from the committee several concurrent resolutions providing for surveys. The House Committee on Rivers and Harbors is now considering the question of surveys. Therefore I ask that these several concurrent resolutions may now be considered.

First, I report the Senate concurrent resolution No. 81.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 81, submitted yesterday by Mr. Fulton, was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimates to be made for a project of improvement of the Columbia River from the mouth of the Willamette River to the ocean, in the States of Oregon and Washington, and of the Willamette River, in the State of Oregon, from the city of Portland to the mouth of the river, with a view to securing and maintaining a uniform depth of not less than 30 feet at the lowest stage of water in said rivers from said city of Portland to the ocean, such survey and estimates to be reported to Congress.

IMPROVEMENT OF APALACHICOLA RIVER AND ST. ANDREW BAY, FLORIDA.

Mr. FRYE. I ask that Senate concurrent resolution No. 76 be next considered.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 76, submitted by Mr. MIL-TON on the 21st instant, was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the most feasible and practical way of connecting the waters of Apalachicola River and St. Andrew Bay, in the State of Florida, with a view to determining the advantage, best location, and probable cost of a canal connecting said waters, and to submit a plan and estimate for such improvement.

IMPROVEMENT OF SOUTH BAY CHANNEL, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. FRYE. I ask that Senate concurrent resolution No. 77 be next considered.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 77, submitted by Mr. FLINT on the 22d instant, was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to cause preliminary examination and survey to be made of the South Bay Channel, Humboldt Harbor, California, with a view to the removal of obstructions to navigation to and from the wharf at Fields Landing.

IMPROVEMENT OF WILLAMETTE AND COLUMBIA RIVERS, OREGON,

Mr. FRYE. I ask that Senate concurrent resolution No. 78 be now considered.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 78, submitted by Mr. Bourne on the 26th instant, was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimates to be made for a project of improvement of the Willamette and Columbia rivers, in the State of Oregon, so as to provide a 30-foot channel from Portland, Oreg., to the Pacific Ocean, and report the same to Congress.

IMPROVEMENT OF POLSON BAY, MONTANA.

Mr. FRYE. I ask that Senate concurrent resolution No. 79 be considered.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 79, submitted by Mr. Carter on the 26th instant, was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to cause preliminary examination and survey to be made of Polson Bay, Flathead Lake, Montana, with a view to dredging the channel and putting in piling on the east side thereof.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5900) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 865) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to amend section 5 of the act in the third paragraph by striking out the word "proprietor" and in-serting in lieu thereof the words "owner in fee," so that the paragraph shall read when amended as follows:

But no person who is the owner in fee of more than 160 acres of land in any State or Territory shall acquire any right under the homestead law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 8905) for the establishment of a probation system for the District of Columbia, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WARREN introduced a bill (S. 8906) to provide for the retirement of certain officers on the active list of the Regular Army who have been passed over in promotion by officers junior to them in length of commissioned service, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PAYNTER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 8907) to authorize the paving of Twenty-third street NW. from S street to Kalorama road, and Kalorama road from Twenty-third street to Connecticut avenue, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 8908) granting a pension to Amanda Green, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 8909) granting an increase of pension to Woodford M. Houchin, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 8915) granting an increase of pension to George W. Mann.

Mr. FLINT introduced a bill (S. 8916) granting an increase of pension to Edward Waltemeyer, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. RAYNER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 8917) for the relief of the widow and heirs of William H. Bell, deceased, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McCUMBER introduced a bill (S. 8918) to provide for the payment to certain Indians of Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, in North Dakota, for certain horses condemned and destroyed by the Bureau of Animal Industry in the years 1906 and 1907, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also (for Mr. Hansbrough) introduced a bill (S. 8919) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Orr, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TALIAFERRO introduced a bill (S. 8920) granting an increase of pension to Hiram A. Wilson, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MARTIN introduced a bill (S. 8921) granting a pension to Horace G. Shull, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill (S. 8922) granting an increase of pension to Henry L. Smith, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KEAN introduced a bill (S. 8923) granting an increase of pension to Catharine J. Carter, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BEVERIDGE introduced a bill (S. 8924) to amend an act entitled "An act granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment," approved May 30, 1908, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to introduce a bill, with an explana-tory paper, and I desire the bill and the paper I submit to be published as a document. It is one of those bills which, I suppose, will not be reached at this session, but I want to lay the foundation for future proceedings. I ask that the bill and the memorandum submitted with it may be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

A bill (S. 8925) to provide for the purchase and erection of a large testing machine and building therefor, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, which was ordered to be printed as a document (S. Doc. No. 686) with the bill, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BAILEY (by request) introduced a bill (S. 8926) granting a pension to Sarah B. Hatch, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NEWLANDS introduced a bill (S. 8927) for the erection of a Lincoln memorial, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Library.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. FLINT submitted an amendment authorizing the Director of the Geological Survey to furnish copies of any photographs or lantern slides in the possession of the United States Geological Survey to any person, concern, or institution in the interest of education and the dissemination of knowledge, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURROWS submitted an amendment relative to salaries of employees of the Railway Mail Service, intended to be proposed by him to the post-office appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RAYNER submitted an amendment proposing to include the pay of draftsmen and inspectors in the annual appropriation for the contingent fund of the Naval Academy, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

EXPLORATIONS IN ALASKA.

Mr. FORAKER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 268), which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 3,000 copies of Explorations in Alaska, 1899, for an all-American Overland Route from Cook Inlet, Pacific Ocean, to the Yu kon, by First Lieut, Joseph S. Herron, Eighth Cavalry, commanding expedition, War Department, Adjutant-General's office, Document No. 138, M. I. D., be printed for the use of the Senate.

WRECK OF THE BATTLE SHIP "MAINE."

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (H. Doc. No. 1376) which was read and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Governor Magoon, on the eve of leaving Cuba, has expressed the hope that the wreck of the battle ship Maine may be removed from the harbor of Habana. I trust the Congress will see the wisdom of this suggestion and will provide for the removal of the Maine. We should not allow the wreck of this historic ship to remain as a possible danger to navigation in Habana Harbor, for this is wise from no standpoint. An appropriation should be made for the removal.

AMERICAN SUGAR REFINING COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 687), which was read and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

To the Senate:

In accordance with my direction, the Attorney-General has forwarded to me the inclosed papers in response to the resolution of the Senate of January 22, 1909, in reference to sending to the Senate "copies of all correspondence in the Department of Justice relating to an alleged violation of the act of July 2, 1890, by the American Sugar Refining Company in connection with an alleged loan by that company to one Segal, in which was pledged as security therefor a majority of the capital stock of the Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Company, with voting power thereon, and under which it is alleged an agreement was entered into that the Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Company should not engage in business," and I herewith transmit them to the Senate.

VETO MESSAGE-COMMISSIONS OF ARMY OFFICERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 688), which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I herewith return, without approval, Senate bill No. 653, entitled "An act to authorize commissions to issue in the cases of officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps and of the Revenue-Cutter Service retired with increased rank," for the reasons contained in the accompanying letter of the Secretary of the Navy and memorandum of the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation. It seems to me that the showing made by these documents warrants the assertion that the proposed legislation would be certainly undesirable and possibly pernicious.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 26073. An act to legalize a bridge across the Indian River North, in the State of Florida, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

H. R. 26305. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

ASSESSMENT AND COLLECTION OF TA

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is no further morning business, the morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over under the rule, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution No. 265, submitted yesterday by Mr. Brown, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from further consideration of the bill (8. 3186) to amend section 3224 of the United States Compiled Statutes so as to prevent the restraining of the assessment or collection of any tax, state, county, municipal, district, or federal, and that the same be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BROWN. I feel, Mr. President, that the Senate understands, as well as the members of the Judiciary Committee, this resolution is not directed against that committee in any spirit of criticism in any sense. For the chairman of that committee and for the membership of that committee I have the greatest respect as to their integrity and their ability. But, Mr. President, the Senate is aware that the committee is flooded with an avalanche of work, including bills that are numberless and resolutions of inquiry that require a vast volume of labor. It is patent from the history of this bill, which I introduced a year and more ago, almost at the beginning of the present Congress, that we would have had some report either for or against the bill if the committee had had an opportunity to give it consideration.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BROWN. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I merely wanted to ask the Senator, for the information of the Senate, so that we may understand more clearly, to state to the Senate the purport of the bill from the consideration of which he asks that the committee be discharged, so that we will have the question in mind.

Mr. BROWN. I expect to do that. I was simply, not in the way of apology, undertaking to have the Senate understand why the resolution is introduced and why I am pressing it. After the committee has had the bill since January 7, 1908, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Fulton] yesterday stated in open Senate that he was the subcommittee appointed to give the bill consideration. He also stated that he did not know whether he was acting by himself or with some other member of the committee.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Oregon? Mr. BROWN, Certainly,

Mr. FULTON. I trust the Senator will not insist that I was the subcommittee. I think I claimed to have been a part of it.

Mr. BROWN. The language of the Senator was—

Mr. FUL/TON. I do not think I claimed to be the whole

Mr. BROWN. The Senator said:

The bill is one that was referred to me as a subcommittee.

I may misunderstand the effect of that language, but I apprehend I have stated the fact.

But said the Senator:

I am not quite certain whether there was more than one on the sub-committee or not.

Mr. FULTON. I think the Senator will admit-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield further to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BROWN. Certainly.
Mr. FULTON. I simply want to remark that I think the Senator will now concede that I was justified in saying that I did not claim to be the whole work.

Mr. BROWN. Undoubtedly; but it illustrates the situation of the bill which I undertook to get the judgment of the committee upon and upon which I do ask the judgment of the Senate. For more than a year the subcommittee, a part of the subcommittee at least, realized that it had a bill before it. This resolution was offered, therefore, more in the spirit of discouragement on the part of the author of the bill as to whether the bill will ever give any evidence of life.

Mr. President, this bill, to my mind, and I do not think I exaggerate, is a very important measure. I think its mere statement will convince the Senate, if I can have its attention a very few minutes, that the bill ought to be reported, and reported favorably. With the indulgence of the Senate, I desire to take just a very few minutes to state what the bill is.

There is an existing statute now, which has been in force ever since 1867, which reads as follows:

No suit for the purpose of restraining the assessment or collection of taxes shall be maintained in any court.

That is the existing law to-day. The Supreme Court of this country has decided that that is a valid statute, and that it is a valid limitation upon the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the country. But the Supreme Court has also decided that the taxes referred to in that section are federal taxes alone.

Now, then, the measure which I have offered proposes to leave the existing statute as it is and to add the words "taxes, state, county, municipal, and district." In other words, I ask Congress to fix the jurisdiction of our federal courts with the same limitation as to state taxes that now exists as to federal taxes. If there can be any valid objection to that proposition from any source, I have not yet heard it.

If it be argued that it is against public policy, I have but to refer the Senate to the language of Justice Miller, of the Supreme Court, who laid down the proposition, in discussing this very federal statute, that it was consistent with good public policy, because in the nature of things the collection of taxes must be made when they are due and not when some court of equity adjudicates that they are due. In order to sustain the life of the Government, taxes are collected summarily necessarily without the intervention of any injunctive writ from our own court.

Let me say in regard to the public policy of having that rule as to our federal revenues, it is much stronger as to state and school district and municipal taxes. We have had illustrations in this country of the operation of the right exercised by our circuit courts under the law as it exists to tie the hands of the tax collector in the States and the school districts and in municipalities of the several States, and that done, Mr. President, in States where there exists to-day a state statue that prohibits a state court from issuing a writ restraining the collection of The same reason exists why the state governstate taxes. ment needs a tax when it is levied and assessed that exists for the Federal Government having its tax collected when it is levied and assessed.

Mr. President, the objection has been made that there are some States in this country where they do not prohibit the citizens of the State from going into a state court and enjoining the collection of taxes, and therefore we ought not to pass a law governing our federal courts which will apply to those

Let me say, when that objection is made, the objector forgets the subject-matter of this bill and the subject-matter of the legislation proposed. The question that I am considering now is the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of this country. Can it be that we should have a different jurisdiction exercised by those courts in the different States? Let the jurisdiction be uniform. If a circuit court has the right to enjoin the collection of taxes in one State, let it have the right to enjoin it in another. It ought to be denied the right to enjoin it in any State, so long as the Government takes care of its own taxes and saves them from a writ of injunction.

Mr. President, I do not think it will be argued that Congress does not have the right to limit the jurisdiction of those courts. The original act of jurisdiction, passed more than a hundred years ago, provided limitations one after another. In some cases the court was given jurisdiction and in others denied.

That was the judgment of Congress then of its power to fix and limit the jurisdiction of the inferior courts. If we are not satisfied with the judgment of Congress as expressed then and many times since, I ask objecting Senators if they will be satisfied with the judgment of our courts who have themselves said that they have such jurisdiction as Congress gives them and none other?

Mr. President, I do not care to express in detail the reasons why this bill should be passed at this moment. But I do confess to you, Senators, that I have a conviction that this is one of the statutes that Congress ought to pass. It provides that when a tax is assessed in one State by the taxing authorities of that State it shall not be subject to collateral attack in the federal courts of equity.

I ask, Mr. President, in connection with the few remarks I have made, to submit a memorandum of authorities on the law questions involved.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Existing law denies to the federal court the power to enjoin the assessment or collection of taxes, as follows:

"No suit for the purpose of restraining the assessment or collection of taxes shall be maintained in any court." (U. S. Comp. Stats., sec. 3224.)

This section has been held by the Supreme Court of the United States to apply alone to federal taxes. (Wels v. Central Vt. R. R. Co., 14 Blatchford, 426.)

The proposed bill amends the above section so as to apply to all taxes, as follows:
"No suit for the purpose of restraining the assessment or collection of taxes, state, county, municipal, district, or federal, shall be maintained in any court."

THE SUMMARY COLLECTION OF TAXES IS NECESSARY TO THE LIFE OF THE GOVERNMENT, STATE AS WELL AS FEDERAL.

The Summary collection of taxes is necessary to the life of the Government for its own existence has the power to levy and collect taxes. They are collectible when due, not when a court of equity shall have investigated and adjudicated their validity.

On this question the Supreme Court said in Cheatham v. United States (92 U. S., 85): "If there existed in the courts, state or national, any general power of impeding or controlling the collection of taxes or relieving the hardship incident to taxation, the very existence of the Government might be placed in the power of a hostile judiciary." Again, in the State Railroad Tax cases (92 U. S., 575), Mr. Justice Miller, speaking for the court, said:

"The Government of the United States has provided, both in the customs and in the internal revenue, a complete system of corrective justice in regard to taxes imposed by the General Government, which in both branches is founded upon the idea of appeals within the executive departments. If the party aggrieved does not obtain satisfaction in this mode, there are provisions for recovering tax after it has been paid by suit against the collecting officer. But there is no place in this system for an application to a court of justice until after the money is paid.

"That there might be no misunderstanding of the universality of this principle, it was expressly enacted, in 1867, that 'no suit for the purpose of restraining the assessment or collection of any tax shall be maintained in any court.' (Rev. Stat., sec. 3224.) And though this was intended to apply alone to taxes levied by the United States, it shows the sense of Congress of the evils to be feared if courts of justice could, in any case, interfere with the process of collecting the taxes on which the Government depends for its continued existence. It is a wise policy. It is founded on the simple philosophy derived from the experience of ages that the payment of taxes has to be enforced by summary and stringent means against a reluctant and often and other modes of pr

BOARDS OF EQUALIZATION AND ASSESSMENT ACT JUDICIALLY AND THEIR JUDGMENTS SHOULD NOT BE SUBJECT TO COLLATERAL ATTACK IN COURTS OF EQUITY.

The rule is well established throughout the several state and federal jurisdictions of the country that an assessment and equalization board acts judicially when it determines the value of property for taxation purposes. Its determination of value is a judicial inding; its judgment stands as the judgment of a court and can not be impeached or set aside except for fraud or want of jurisdiction. Courts have no power to revise an assessment of a legally constituted assessment board because of an alleged error in valuation. The question of value is for determination by the board of assessors and not by the courts. If the judgment of the assessing board is the result of an investigation and a consideration of the subject-matter in good faith, it is final and conclusive upon both the State and the taxpayer, and is not subject to collateral attack. In order to give a court of equity jurisdiction in a collateral proceeding to ascertain the validity of a tax assessment one of two things must clearly appear—either fraud or a want of jurisdiction.

"Courts have no power to revise assessments made by the boards of assessors and approved or revised by the board of review upon the ground that these parties fell into an error of judgment in estimating the value of the property." (Loewenthal v. People, 192 Ill., 222.)

"Though an undervaluation appears, an assessment will be sustained where it can not be said to be so excessive as to warrant a finding that it was not honestly made and was known to be excessive." (Keokuk Bridge Co. v. People, 186 Ill., 267.)

"Decision of the state board of equalization is quasi judicial in its nature, and on application for judgment for unpaid taxes such decision can be assalled only for fraud or want of jurisdiction." (Connecting R. Co. v. People, 119 Ill., 182.)

"The taxing power is legislative and political in its nature, and is not under the judicial power of the State; and the courts can not interfere unless the tax is vold, because levied without power on the general assembly to provide the revenue laws. It devolves upon the general assembly to provide the revenue and the means for its levy and collection, without interference of either of the other departments. As long as officers are acting under the law in imposing and collecting taxes, the courts will not interfere, but when they transcend their powers and act without warrant of law, the courts may give relief. Hence, if the legally constituted board of equalization have acted within the scope of their authority, and if they have reasoned incorrectly and erred in judgment, we have no power to review and correct their actions. They are empowered by law to fix the value." (Ottawa Glass Co. v. McCaleb rueed by the statute, or upon appearance or the taxpayer whose list is called in question, its action or decision in the matter, whether right or wrong, is binding upon him until set aside or vacated by an appeal or some other direct, authorized proceeding, and he will not be permitted to assall the same in a court of equity. Mr. High, in his valuable work on injunctions, has given a greaf dea of space to the discussion of when on injunctions, has given a greaf dea of space to the discussion of when on injunctions, has given a greaf dea of space to the discussion of when on injunctions, has given a greaf dea of space to the discussion of when on injunctions, has given a greaf dea of space to the discussion of when on injunctions, the discussion of which is alleged to be lilegal merely because it is a hardship or is too high. (High on Injunctions, vol. 1, sec. 485; Haywood v. Buffalo, 14 N. Y., 534; Burns v. Mayor, 2 Kans., 454; McPike v. Pew, 48 Mo., 525; Warden v. Supervisors, 14 Wis, 618; Clark v. Ganz, 21 Minn., 387; City Council v. Sayre, 65 Ala., 564.)

"Nor will equity interfere by injunction with the enforcement or collection of taxes because of irregularities, illegalities, or errors in the assessment of the tax, or in the power conferred upon taxing officers; but in smedy at law." (High on Injunctions, vol. 1, sec. 486)

Of the authorities cifed by the author to sustain the rule, the following may be cifed: O'Neal v. Virginia (18 Md., 1); Warden v. Supervisors (14 Wis, 618); Macklot v. Davenport (17 Iowa, 379); Exchange Bank v. Hines (3 Ohio St., 1); Jackson v. Detroit (10 Mich., 248); Hallenbeck v. Han (2 Nebr., 377); Challis v. Commissioners (15 Kans., 49); Supervisors v. Jenks (65 III), 275); Brown v. Herron (59 Ind., 61); Western R. Co. v. Nolan (48 N. X., 518).

"The excessive valuation of property is an irregularity where the assessing officers had jurisdiction and acted in good faith." (Stanley v. Albany Co., 164 Minn., 304; People v. Adams, 125 N. Y., 471; Bratton v. Johnson, 76 Wis, 430.)

"Th

the levy was by the proper officers, for lawful purposes, and at lawful rates. If the assessor, in returning the value of plaintiff's property, or the board of review in confirming it, fixed the same at an excessive or disproportionate value, it is immaterial, for the purpose of this case, whether the error is one of judgment or of gross incompetency or obedience to a void statute; the result is the same—it is nothing more nor less than an irregularity in assessment, for the correction of which, as we have already shown, injunction will not be granted.

"In reviewing the action of taxing officers upon bills to enjoin the enforcement of a tax, courts of equity are inclined to indulge the usual presumption in favor of the regularity and validity of the conduct of public officers until the contrary is shown. They will not therefore enjoin upon mere general averments that the assessment was too high. (High on Injunction, vol. 1, sec. 490.)

"In many of the States of the country different tribunals or boards of equalization are provided by law, whose functions consist in hearing complaints of persons aggrieved, adjusting inequalities among different taxpayers, and equalizing the burdens of taxation among the different persons subject thereto; and questions of such practical importance frequently occur in determining how far the action of such boards or officers may form the foundation for relief by injunction against the enforcement of taxation. The fundamental principle applicable to such cases is that a court of equity is not a court of errors to review the acts of public officers in the assessment and collection of taxes, nor will it revise their decision upon matters within their discretion if they have acted honestly. (High on injunctions, vol. 1, sec. 493; Livingston v. Hollenbeck, 4 Barb., 9; Clinton's Appeal, 56 Pa. St., 315; O'Neal v. Virginia R. Co., 18 Md., 1; Porter v. Rockford, R. I. R. Co., 76 Ill., 561; McIntyre v. Town of White Creek, 43 Wis., 620; Union Trust Co. v. Weder, 96 Ill., 346; Haywood v. B

"To sustain the above rule Judge Cooley cites Union Coal Co. v. Campbell (48 La. An., 1350); New York v. Davenport (92 N. Y., 604); Brown v. Oneida Co. (103 Wis., 149); Grand Rapids v. Welleman (85 Mich., 234)."

The Supreme Court of the United States has by an uninterrupted line of decisions given its sanction to the rule that an assessment board acts judicially, and that its judgment is not open to collateral attack on the ground of overvaluation alone. It is essential that either fraud or want of Jurisdiction must appear before a court of equity will revise the Ralicoad Tax cases, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Miller on this question, said:

"As we do not know on what evidence the board acted in regard to these railroads, or whether they did not act on knowledge which they possessed themselves, and as all valuation of property is more or less matter of opinion, we see no reason why the opinion of this court, or of the circuit court, should be better, or should be substituted for that of the board, whose cpinion the law has declared to be the one to govern in this matter.

 Let us suppose that the complaints made in these cases were well founded; that the mode adopted by the board of equalization to ascertain the value of the franchise and capital stock is not the best mode; that it produces unequal and unjust results in some cases; that the same is true of the mode of ascertaining the basis of assessment for the taxtion of municipalities; that the board of qualization thease. It is estimated the same that in the complaints of the case of the case

"It is sufficient to say that we find nothing in the evidence that was before the two boards which they might not properly consider under the laws of Tennessee, as circumstances to aid them in reaching a conclusion as to the value of that part of the railroad of complainant lying in Tennessee. Nor do we discover anything in the record or affidavits affirmatively showing that the boards have included in their assessments property of the complainant not in Tennessee, and the defendants in their report of the assessment and in their answer expressly deny that any such property was included. The exclusion of certain expert evidence to show how unreliable a standard of value are market reports of stocks and bonds we do not regard as material. Even if this were a direct proceeding to review the action of the defendants, as upon error (which it is not) the ruling could hardly be the subject of criticism; for the matters touched upon in the affidavits were matters of general knowledge, which the defendants and the assessors might be presumed to know. The relevancy of such items of evidence as the market value of bonds and stocks, and the amount of gross earnings and the net earnings, in reaching a conclusion as to the value of a railroad or telegraph line, has been so often recognized by the supreme Court of the United States that we need not discuss it. (Railroad ve Backus, 154 U. S., 424; Henderson Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 166 U. S., 150; Adams Express Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 165 U. S., 194; 166 U. S., 150; Adams Express Co. v. Cohio State Auditor, 165 U. S., 194; 166 U. S., 185.) It is contended that the law of Tennessee, as declared by its supreme court, is that each line of railroad must be valued by itself and not as part of a system, and therefore that the unit theory, upon which the foregoing decisions were based, has no application to Tennessee. If this be true, it only reduces the size of the unit, but it does not destroy every evidential bearing of stock and bond values upon the value of railroad property, that, within the limits of the reasonable discretion and judgment vest

IT IS WITHIN THE POWER OF CONGRESS TO FIX THE JURISDICTION OF FEDERAL, DISTRICT, AND CIRCUIT COURTS.

It will be observed that the amendment simply extends existing law to all taxes. Congress declared in the original section that no court should have jurisdiction to restrain the assessment or collection of federal taxes. It will not be argued that the original section does any injustice to either the Federal Government or the federal taxpayer. And for the same reason it can not be consistently urged that the amendment proposed would be unfair to either the State or the state taxpayer.

But with the justice of the proposed amendment conceded, still its enactment is opposed by some on the ground that the amendment contravenes the Constitution and is beyond the competency of Congress travenes the Constitution and is beyond the competency of the consideration of this question in the light of legislative and judicial precedent eliminates the objection.

The objection involves a single proposition, namely, the power of Congress to limit the jurisdiction of courts which it is authorized by the Constitution to create.

The circuit and district courts of the United States are creatures of the Federal Government. They are Congress-made institutions. From no other source do they obtain either power or jurisdiction. Congress created them. Congress can destroy them. This doctrine is sustained by Congress itself. For a century and more Congress has been engaged, from time to time, in changing the jurisdiction of these courts.

LEGISLATIVE PRECEDENTS

Chapter 7 of the Revised Statutes of the United States contains the law fixing the original jurisdiction of the circuit courts. Section 629, the first section of said chapter, confers upon the circuit courts 629, the first section of said chapter, confers upon the circuit courts jurisdiction as follows:

"The circuit courts shall have original jurisdiction as follows: First, of all suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity where the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, exceeds the sum or value of $500, and an alien is a party, or the suit is between a citizen of the State where it is brought and a citizen of another State: Provided, That no circuit court shall have cognizance of any suit to recover the contents of any promissory note or chose in action in favor of an assignee, unless a suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover the said contents if no assignment had been made, except in cases of foreign bills of exchange."

It will be observed that the paragraph quoted contains in its provisions a limitation of jurisdiction. This law was passed in September, 1789, and has remained the law of the land to the present day—conclusive evidence of the judgment of Congress that it had the power to limit the jurisdiction of inferior courts.

Paragraph 4 of section 629 contains another limitation. The paragraph is as follows:

"Fourth. Of all suits at law or in equity, arising from any act prograph is as follows:

"Fourth. Of all suits at law or in equity, arising from any act providing for revenue from imports or tonnage, except civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, and seizures on land or on waters not within admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, and except suits for penalties for forfeitures; of all causes arising under any law providing internal revenue; and of all causes arising under the postal laws."

Paragraph 13 of said section also contains a limitation, as follows:

"Thirteenth. Of all suits to recover possession of any office, except that of electro of President or Vice-President, Representative or Delegate in Congress, or member of a state legislature, authorized by law to be brought, wherein it appears that the sole question touching the title to such office arises out of the denial of the right to vote to any citizen offering to vote, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude: Provided, That such jurisdiction shall extend only so far as to determine the rights of the parties to such office by reason of the denial of the right guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, and secured by any law to enforce the right of citizens of the United States to vote in all the States."

Likewise paragraph 20 of said section, which reads as follows:

"Twentieth. Exclusive cognizance of all crimes and offenses cognizable under the authority of the United States, except where it is or may be otherwise provided by law, and concurrent jurisdiction with the district courts of crimes and offenses cognizable therein."

Section 630 of said chapter recognizes the power of Congress to control jurisdiction of the inferior courts. This section is as follows:

"Sec. 630. The circuit courts shall have jurisdiction in matters in bankruptcy, to be exercised within the limits and in the manner provided by law."

Section 725 of said chapter deals with the jurisdiction of circuit courts on the subject of contempt and limits the court's jurisdiction to punish this offense. The section is as follows:

"Sec. 725. The said courts shall have power to impose and administer all necessary oaths, and to punish, by fine or imprisonment, at the discretion of the court, contempts of their authority: Provided, That such power to punish contempts shall not be construed to extend to any cases except the misbehavior of any person in their presence, or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice, the misbehavior of any of the officers of said courts in their official transactions and the disobedience or resistance of any such officer, or by any party, juror, witness, or other person, to any lawful writ, process, order, rule, decree, or command of the said courts."

Section 723 of this chapter forbids the institution in equity of any suit in either of the courts of the United States in any case where a plain, adequate, and complete remedy at law exists. The section is as follows:

"Sec. 723. Sui

Whatever power Congress has to fix the jurisdiction of federal courts derived from section 1, article 3, of the Constitution, which reads as wintever power confress has to it. The jurisdiction of rederal courts is derived from section 1, article 3, of the Constitution, which reads as follows:

"The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall, at stated times, receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

In obedience to this provision of the Constitution, Congress passed the judiciary act of 1789 heretofore mentioned. Obviously the power to pass the act implies the power to amend or even repeal it. The question admits of no other logic.

It may be said that the courts themselves have uniformly recognized the power of the legislative branch of the Government to fix their jurisdiction. It has come to be the settled doctrine as announced by the courts themselves that they are created by law for the purpose of enforcing not their own will but the will of the legislative branch of the Government. This doctrine was announced by Mr. Chief Justice Miller in Osborne v. Bank of United States (9 Wheat. R., 866), in the following language:

forcing not their own will but the will of the legislative branch of the Government. This doctrine was announced by Mr. Chief Justice Miller in Osborne v. Bank of United States (9 Wheat. R., 866), in the following language:

"Judicial power, as contradistinguished from the powers of the law, has no existence. Courts are the mere instruments of the law; they can will nothing.

"Judicial power is never exercised for the purpose of giving effect to the will of the judge; but always for the purpose of giving effect to the will of the legislature, or, in other words, to the will of the law."

Mr. Justice Harlan, in R. R. Co. v. Mississippi (102 U. S., 135), said:

"That except in the cases of which the court is given by the Constitution original jurisdiction, the judicial power of the United States is to be exercised in its original or appellate form, or both, as the wisdom of Congress may direct."

This doctrine is further sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States in the following cases:

"The notion has frequently been entertained that the federal courts derive their judicial power immediately from the Constitution; but the political truth is that the disposal of the judicial power, except in a few specified cases, belongs to Congress. If Congress has given the power to this court, we possess it, not otherwise; and if Congress has not given the power to us or to any other court, it still remains at the legislative disposal."

McIntyre v. Wood (7 Cranch, 504); Bank of Columbia v. Oakley (4 Wheaton, 236); McClung v. Silliman (6 Wheaton, 598); Kendall v. United States (12 Peters, 524; United States v. U. P. R. R. Co. (98 U. S., 601).

Also, Cary v. Curtis (3 Howard, 236). In the last-named case the court used the following language:

"That the organization of the judicial power, the definition and distributions of the subjects of jurisdiction in the federal tribunal, and the modes of their action and authority have been and of right must be the work of the legislature. The existence of the judicial exities

Mr. BROWN. Now, Mr. President, in view of the statement of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Fulton] yesterday, who said he had this bill and I was likely to get a report upon it, I will not press at this hour the resolution for a vote, but I ask to have it lie upon the table subject to call.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, in view of what the Senator from Nebraska has said, I think perhaps before the resolution is laid aside I should offer a word in behalf of the committee.

The bill was, as stated, referred to a subcommittee, of which

I was the chairman. Yesterday morning when the subject was mentioned I had forgotten who the other members of the subcommittee were, but the facts in regard to the matter are substantially what I shall state.

The bill was taken under consideration by the subcommittee, as stated by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Brown]. It proposes to amend the existing law which prohibits the issuance of injunctions restraining the collection of taxes. It seemed to me that it applied not only to the taxes of the Federal Government but applied not only to the taxes of the Federal Government but applied to the country and applied taxes. ment, but as well to state, county, and municipal taxes. On the general proposition I was entirely in accord with the Schator from Nebraska; but the statute as he proposes to amend it would prohibit injunctions being issued by the federal courts restraining the collection or assessment of taxes by state authorities in a State which, by its public policy, permitted state courts to issue injunctions in such cases.

I suggested to the Senator that it seemed to me the bill should be amended so that no federal court would be authorized to issue an injunction restraining the collection of a state, county, or municipal tax within a State, where, by the laws of that State, state courts were not permitted to issue such writs.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. FULTON. I will yield in just a second.

The Senate can see that it would be manifestly improper and bad legislation to say that a resident of a State might proceed in a state court and enjoin the collection or assessment of a tax within his State against his property, but that a nonresident owning property within a State could not go to a federal court to have his case tried; in other words—
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—
Mr. FULTON. Just a second.
If a nonresident has a right of action, he should not be compelled to go into the state courts to prosecute it; he should be allowed to go into the federal courts to prosecute the action; but if the State sees fit to establish the policy of prohibiting the issuance of injunctions at all for the restraining of the collection of taxes or the assessment of property, then it would be perfectly proper to prohibit the federal court from entertaining a suit. But if you are going to allow state courts to entertain the suit, then, in my judgment, you must allow the federal court sitting within the State to try the cases where one party is a nonresident of the State.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.
Mr. BROWN. I want to ask the Senator from Oregon if it is not true that Oregon is one of the few States which does not have a statute prohibiting writs of injunction of this nature in state courts?

Mr. FULTON. I have not looked over the laws of the different States on the subject, but I know that in Oregon it is competent for a court to issue an injunction, on proper showing, restraining the collection of taxes. It is the same, also, in the State of Washington.

Mr. BROWN. Does the Senator— Mr. FULTON. I will yield to the Senator in a moment. As am advised by other Senators, it is so in different States. have not looked over the different statutes to ascertain the policy prevailing in the respective States; but that there are States where it is permissible under the local law for the local courts to issue injunctions in such cases, it seems to me, is a sufficient answer to the proposition of the Senator to exclude jurisdiction entirely from the United States courts.

Mr. BROWN. Does the Senator think that it would be an injury to the people of his State to have legislation which would compel nonresident taxpayers to resort to the same remedy as the people of Oregon?

Mr. FULTON. It is not a question as to the same remedy. Of course they have the same remedy, and only the same remedy; but the court is one thing and the remedy is another. am not talking about the remedy.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, that brings us to the suggestion of who of the taxpayers are interested in this legislation.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I am not yielding the floor. Unless the Senator wants to ask me a question, I wish to proceed with my reasons.

Mr. BROWN. Very well.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, the framers of the Constitution realized that a nonresident of a State going into a state or local court might not be on an equal footing with a resident; and therefore it was provided in the Constitution itself that in controversies between citizens of different States the federal courts should have jurisdiction to try and determine such controversies.

I suggested to the Senator from Nebraska that he amend his bill so as to provide that in those States where the policy of the state law did not permit the issuance of injunctions by state courts, the United States courts within that jurisdiction should not issue an injunction. The Senator at first suggested-

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President— Mr. FULTON. Just a moment.

The Senator at first suggested that he thought he might be satisfied with an amendment of that kind. I suggested that he prepare it.

The matter went on for a few days, when he told me that he thought he would prefer to come before the committee and explain it. I told him I hoped he would. So I supposed that the Senator was to appear before the committee at its last meeting, but he did not appear. He told me afterwards-a few days ago and since the last meeting of the committee-that he could not appear; that he had decided that he wanted the bill as originally introduced, and did not care for an amendment. I then said to the Senator, "Very well," and added that I would bring it up before the entire committee, and the committee would determine what character of report should be made.

I have only explained the nature and character of the bill in order to explain my own attitude in regard to it. There has been no disposition on the part of the committee to prevent a report on the bill. As I said yesterday, I feel responsible for whatever of criticism the committee is subjected to because I did bring the bill back in rather an informal way to the committee one morning; but as we did not know the character of the amend-ment the Senator from Nebraska would want or would agree to, I was to see him, and I saw him. Our little conference went along for a few days. It was only, I think, the day before yesterday that the Senator advised me that he would not consent to any amendment. I think I am stating all the facts.

Mr. BROWN. I wish, however, to call the attention of the Senator from Oregon to the fact that, in pursuance of his invitation to meet the committee, I tried to get into the committee room the other day, but I was informed by the man in attendance that they were busy, and from the nature of their business would be occupied most of the day.

The Senator understands that I filed an argument with the committee. I have done all I could. I have made myself personally obnoxious, I fear, to members of that committee by importuning them day after day. I have met with the sweetest smiles, but no results.

Mr. President, just a word about this exception and this amendment which the Senator proposes, which, on its face, would commend itself perhaps to some Senators. It must be remembered that the taxpayers who invoke this remedy in the federal courts are nonresident taxpayers, and yet their property is in the State where the tax is levied and assessed. The state government gives that property its protection. The state government makes that property secure and valuable. Those taxpayers, though they live outside of the state boundary, ought to be bound by the same rule that the man is who lives within the State, so long as the property of both parties is within the State and enjoys the blessings of the same government.

Not only that, but it raises the objection I mentioned, to which the Senator did not reply, that you destroy the uniformity of jurisdiction in our circuit courts. Take the eighth circuit, for instance. There are three States in that circuit, where we have statutes prohibiting injunctions in state courts. Now, under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon, the circuit court of that circuit would have a different jurisdiction in the different States composing the circuit—a most ridiculous proposition. You might just as well suggest that the State should pass a law giving its district courts different jurisdictions in the different counties. We are legislating with respect to the jurisdiction of federal courts. Where? In a federal district, and not in a part of it; and there can be no justification, it seems to me, of the proposition to destroy the uniformity of jurisdiction in the States composing the circuit.

Mr. FULTON. Does not the Senator himself propose to destroy uniformity? I do not think the question of uniformity is a very serious one, or argues much. The question is, giving a party a forum for relief if he has a cause of action. In those cases where under the statute of a State there is no cause of action in a state court, I think very properly we might say that there shall be no cause of action in a federal court; that we shall not interfere with the policy of that State by allowing a party to go into a federal court to secure an injunction where it is contrary to the policy of the State to permit an injunction to issue out of its own courts in that character of cases; but, as I said before, if the State sees fit to permit injunctions to issue at the prayer of its own citizens in its own courts, it strikes me that it would be a remarkable piece of legislation that would say to a nonresident, "You can not take that cause of action which the State itself gives you into the federal court and have your case tried there." I do not think we ought to do it.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield further?

Mr. BROWN. Just a word, Mr. President. Mr. FULTON. I yield the floor, Mr. President. I think I have concluded.

Mr. BROWN. Just a word in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon that if the State leaves its own courts open to these writs of injunction we ought to leave the federal court open.

Mr. President, there is every reason why the rule should not prevail and be the same as to both courts. The Senator, as a lawyer, knows, and this Senate knows, that in a state court an action may be brought and determined within a reasonable time. Under the practice of the federal courts in these equity cases the testimony never is presented in some of the jurisdictions first hand to the trial judge. The whole matter is referred to a master or referee to take testimony, but this referee or master does not have power even to make a finding of fact nor a finding of law. He has one function, and that is to take the testimony of witnesses who answer the questions of the lawyer.

That takes time, and the history, as told in the court reports of this country, will show that taxes have been enjoined and hung up in the air and kept out of the public treasuries by injunction suits that have been pending-not one, not two, but more than three years before a final judgment was obtained.

Not only that, Mr. President, but the disposition of the state courts is not to take jurisdiction. I had occasion, after talking with my friend from Oregon, to investigate the question in connection with the supreme court of his State, and I do not think that he will tell the Senate that 1 per cent of the cases where that court did take jurisdiction were ever sustained. The state courts have a fashion of denying the writ, in the first place, unless fraud or want of jurisdiction to levy the tax appears. The federal courts have a fashion, under the law, when a petition is filed and verified alleging a state of facts to issue a temporary writ. Mr. President, when the temporary writ is once issued, it does not avail the government of that State anything if the trial court dissolves the writ, because the complainant immediately supersedes by bond the order of dissolution and the case continues to pursue its pathway-a tedious one-to the appellate court. That is the reason the state government might be willing to allow its citizens in state courts to enjoin taxes, but it is no reason why the Government of this country should have one rule as to government taxes and another rule as to state taxes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, it is not my desire to consider for a moment the merits of the bill introduced by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Brown]. I only rise for the purpose of removing, if I can, any impression that the Committee on the Judiciary has been negligent in this or any other matters that have been committed to its care.

The Senator from Nebraska has been especially efficient and desirous for action upon this bill, not only by conversation with the several members of the committee and with its chairman, but by taking the careful course, which is not always observed, of filing his views in a written brief with the committee.

Before submitting, however, to the imputation of negligence, I would remind the Senator that the Committee on the Judiciary has before it a vast amount of business; and it is a sad fact that very much of the business that is brought before that committee is dead before it gets there, and no sort of galvanism could put life into many of the bills that are sent to that committee

Furthermore, that committee seems to be the receptacle of resolutions of all sorts and upon all kinds of subjects upon which they are required by the Senate to report. I do not believe there is a committee in this body that more faithfully attempts to perform its duties. There is seldom a day during the session of Congress when, either as a committee in full or by subcommittee, it is not engaged in actual work. It has not been because of any negligence that the bill of the Senator from Nebraska has not been reported. It has been for the same reason that other bills have not been reported.

It must be further remembered that the work of that committee is a work that can not be taken up, carried on, and finished in a day. Many of the questions that are referred to the committee are most intricate, such questions as a court would take under advisement for weeks, and perhaps months. It can not be expected that a matter involving grave questions of constitutional and statute law shall be reported from that committee on the spur of the moment.

I do not care, as I have said, to discuss the bill of the Senator from Nebraska. I simply want to assure that Senator and assure the Senate that, notwithstanding the mild tone of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Fulton], neither the Senator from Oregon nor the subcommittee of which he is chairman, nor the Judiciary Committee, have a sense of having been at all negligent in their duty as to the bill presented by the Senator from Nebraska.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table subject to call.

ACCIDENTS TO RAILROAD EMPLOYEES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Clarke], coming over from a previous day. The resolution will

The Secretary read Senate resolution 267, submitted yesterday by Mr. Clarke, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and it hereby is, directed to send to the Senate a statement showing the number of railroad employees killed and injured each year since June 30, 1901, from the following causes:

1. Lack of, insecure, and improperly applied, sill steps;
2. Inefficient and improperly applied hand brakes;
3. Insecure and improperly applied ladders;
4. Lack of, insecure, and improperly applied, roof hand holds or grab irons; and
5. Lack of, insecure, and improperly applied, running boards.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest that as the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Clarke] is not now in his seat the resolution had better go

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina the resolution will lie over.

CENTENARY OF THE BIRTH OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Mr. WETMORE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 247. In so doing I wish to state that it is the joint resolution providing for the observance of the centennial of the birth of Abraham Lincoln. The joint resolution has been amended by the Library Committee by substituting the action of the Senate some days since looking to the same purpose, and also including a provision for a survey of the proposed "Lincoln Way" to Gettysburg. As the action of the Senate the other day on this matter was so decided, it seems to me that the Senate joint resolution previously adopted ought now to be passed again as a substitute for the House joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution, the title of which will be stated.

The Secretary. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 247) relating to the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln and making the 12th day of February, 1909, a legal holiday, and for other purposes.

Mr. FULTON. I inquire if the morning business has closed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Morning business has closed.

Mr. FULTON. Then I ask that there be laid before the Senate the special order.

Mr. WETMORE. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the Senator. Mr. WETMORE. Will not the Senator forbear for a few

Mr. FULTON. I will yield in a moment; I simply want to get the special order before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 15372) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the "Bowman" and the "Tucker" acts.

Mr. WETMORE. I now renew my request for unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Do I understand this to be a request for the present consideration of the joint resolution?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is a request for unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Then, of course, the joint resolution will be subject to amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution, if consent is given, will be subject to amendment.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I do not wish to object; I only wish to reserve the right to object in case the joint resolution should lead to extended debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent, with the limitation suggested by the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. GALLINGER. I object to that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What is the request?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That objection may be later made in the progress of the consideration of the joint resolution if it should lead to unusual debate. Is there objection to unanimous consent with that limitation?

Mr. GALLINGER. I object to any agreement with a limitation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PENSACOLA, FLA.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. FULTON. I understand the Senator from Florida has a very short measure, which will not involve any discussion, and I yield to him.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7276) providing for the improvement, repair, and an addition to the public building at Pensacola, Fla.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to cause the court-house, post-office, and custom-house building in the city of Pensacola, State of Florida, to be improved, repaired, and an addition constructed thereto at a total cost not to exceed $100,000; and proposes to amend the act of Congress approved March 3, 1883, providing for the erection of a public building at Pensacola, Fla., so as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to disregard that provision in the act which requires an open space of not less than 40 feet on each side of the building.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH F. RITCHERDSON.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask the Senator from Oregon to yield to me for a moment so that I may ask for the present consideration of Senate bill 4116. It will not take over three minutes.

Mr. FULTON. I announce now, Mr. President, that I agree to yield to the Senator from Kentucky, the Senator from Washington, and the Senator from Ohio, but I can not yield beyond that.

I hope the Senator from Oregon will include me. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest to Senators that Senators are entitled to the floor by recognition from the Chair. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4116) authorizing the Secretary of War to place the name of Joseph F. Ritcherdson on the rolls of Company C, One hundred and twenty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and issue him an honorable discharge. A similar bill was passed by the Senate in the Fifty-ninth Congress, and this bill has been reported unanimously from the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, and read the preamble, as follows

Whereas Joseph F. Ritcherdson did serve as a musician in Company C, One hundred and twenty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, war of the rebellion, from the 15th day of August, 1862, to about the 1st day of June, A. D. 1863, when he was taken out of the service by his uncle because he was under 18 years of age, and was never borne on the rolls of said company, but served in the place of Christopher E. Berry, who was to have been a musician, but served as a private in said company, and the said Ritcherdson did the drumming while he was in service for the said company and regiment; and this said Ritcherdson has never received any discharge from the said service.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, is that in the bill?

Mr. McCREARY. That is the preamble. Mr. KEAN. Then I trust it will be stricken from the bill.

Mr. McCREARY. I did not draw the bill. It was drawn by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Cullom].

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to add, after the word "soldier," in line 10, the following proviso:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Joseph F. Ritcherdson on the rolls of Company C, One hundred and twenty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, as a musician, and that he issue to him a certificate of honorable discharge from the service of the United States as such musician, to the end that he may have the benefit of all legal rights pertaining to such service of said soldier: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KEAN. I move to strike out the preamble.

The motion was agreed to.

CANAL FROM PUGET SOUND TO LAKE WASHINGTON.

Mr. PILES. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 8695) extending the time for the construction by James A. Moore, or his assigns, of a canal along the government right of way connecting the waters of Puget Sound with Lake Washington, to report it without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 872) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to extend the time limitation for the completion of the canal until June 11,

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONDEMNED FIELDPIECE FOR ORANGE COUNTY, N. Y.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 24492) to authorize the Secretary of War to donate one condemned bronze fieldpiece and cannon balls to the county of Orange, State of New York. It is only a few lines in length.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15372) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the "Bowman" and "Tucker" acts.

Mr. FULTON. When the bill was last before the Senate we had reached, I think, line 14, on page 56. I ask if that is in accordance with the notes of the clerk?

The NICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary had reached the subhead "Louisiana," on page 56, line 14.

Mr. FULTON. I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. McCREARY. Had we finished Kentucky?

Mr. FULTON. I trust the Senator will allow me to have the amendment adopted. Then I will yield.

amendment adopted. Then I will yield.

Mr. McCREARY. Certainly. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. Under the heading "Kentucky," on page 56, after line 13, it is proposed to insert:

To Lucy C. Lee, administratrix of the estate of Jane T. Lee, deceased, of Mason County, $915.

To Adelaide B. Lindenberger, in her own right and as the sole heir of Elizabeth Tunstall, deceased, late of Louisville, Ky., $1,100.

To A. W. Richards, administrator of the estate of Kinchen Bell, deceased, of Union County, $1,420.

To Thomas R. Hill, of Bath County, $495.

To Daniel Mans, of Maysville, Ky., late of Goochland County, Va., $250.

To T. P. Salyer, of Lawrence County, $350.
To St. Andrew's Lodge, No. 18, Free and Accepted Masons, of Cynthiana, Ky., $600.
To James N. Hall, of Montgomery County, $750.

Mr. KEAN. Do I understand this to be a committee amendment?

Mr. FULTON. It is.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a mistake which was made inadvertently when the bill was formerly before the Senate. I have already called the attention of the Senator from Oregon to it, and he has kindly consented that I myself shall bring it to the attention of the Senate, as it is a matter which I voluntarily brought to his attention. It is in the item for Albion W. Knight and others, rector, wardens, and vestrymen of St. Philip's Church, of Atlanta, Ga. There were two bills, as the Senator probably remembers. One of them was so inaccurate in the last session of Congress that it was withdrawn and another bill substituted in place of it, and when the matter was before the Senate a few days since by inadvertence the wrong bill was in my hand, and I asked the Senator to recognize the propriety of an amendment, which he did, being misled, as I was, by having a bill which was filled with errors.

Mr. FULTON. If the Senator will allow me—

Mr. BACON. I want to state that instead of the item being

$2,700, it ought to be only $800.

Mr. FULITON. Eight hundred dollars.
Mr. BACON. I do not know whether it should be corrected by reconsideration or simply by unanimous consent.

By reconsideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the paragraph will be regarded as still open.

Mr. FULTON. I wish to state in connection with the item that it was correctly inserted in the bill at $800.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. FULTON. During the last session the Senator directed my attention to the fact that the findings of the court did provide for an additional amount, nineteen hundred dollars more, and at that time I discovered that this nineteen hundred dollars had been paid and called his attention to it.

Mr. BACON. Yes. Mr. FULTON. An And he forgot it, and when he suggested it on the floor as stated I had forgotten it. Simply looking at the finding, at appears that there should be this nineteen hundred dollars additional.

I merely emphasize this matter in order to call to the attention of Senators how dangerous it is to accept amendments on the floor. Each one of these items requires careful investigation, because so many of these claims have been paid. Each one must be carefully investigated before it can be ascertained whether there is a legitimate demand.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator has the bill before him and can indicate the page and line, I will ask that it may be reconsidered. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The Secretary. On page 46, beginning in line 24, the item as amended now reads:

To Albion W. Knight and others, wardens and vestrymen of St. Philip's Episcopal Church, of Atlanta, Ga., $2,700.

It is proposed to strike out "twenty-seven hundred" and insert "eight hundred," the amount the committee originally reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to, and the amendment as amended is agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. On page 54, line 16, an amendment has been adopted, but I discover that the names of the surviving executors were omitted. I ask that they may be inserted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be regarded as still open to amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 54, line 16, after the word "to," the first word in the line, it is proposed to insert the names "E. S. Holloway and W. S. Holloway."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. McCREARY. While we are on Kentucky claims, I desire to offer an amendment:

To the trustees of the Madison Female Institute, located at Richmond, Ky., $6,500.

There is a favorable finding on this claim.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is it an amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. McCREARY. If it is intended to finish the consideration of the committee amendments before we take up other amendments, then I will withhold the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the order.

Mr. McCREARY. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning in line 14, on

The next amendment of the Committee on Claims was on page 56, after line 24, to insert:

To Victorie C. Avet, of Catahoula Parish, administratrix of the estate of Vincent Avet, deceased, of Iberville Parish, $2,425.

To Eugene Barrow, of St. Francisville, $12,625.

To Stephen D. Clark, of Catahoula Parish, for himself and as heir of Emily C. Lovelace, deceased, and Charles L. Clark, deceased, $4,240.

To Antoine Decuir, Joseph Auguste Decuir, and Rose Decuir Macias, $4,115.

Mr. WARREN. I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to line 9, page 57, where there should be inserted, after the name "Macias," the words "heirs of Antoine Decuir, deceased, late of Pointe Coupee Parish."

Mr. FULTON. I think those changes are correct, as the Senator has stated them, and I hope the amendment will be Brown, deceased, $1,725.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. On page 60, after line 25, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

To Elizabeth White, administratrix of Samuel N. White, deceased, late West Feliciana Parish, $27,800.

Mr. FRYE. Has the Senator in charge of the bill any objection to my offering an amendment at this point?

Mr. FULTON. No; I will consent to it, as I know the Senator wishes to go away.

Mr. FRYE. I offer an amendment, to follow the last item under the heading "Louisiana."

The Secretary. Following the amendment just agreed to, at the bottom of page 60, it is proposed to insert:

Thomas J. Woodward, surviving receiver of the New Orleans Towboat Association, $95,382.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Claims was, on page 61, after line 7, to insert:

To Edward W. Larrabee, administrator of Stephen Larrabee, deceased, late of Bath, Me., and Charles H. Greenleaf, administrator of Amos I. Allen, deceased, late of Bath, Me., $11,708.97.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. Now, I want to ask one more favor. I desire to offer another amendment.

Mr. FULTON. What is it?

Mr. FRYE. It is exactly like the last item under the heading "Maine," and Maine is exceedingly modest in this bill. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

Mr. FULTON. I will not object to its being offered, but I reserve the right to object to the amendment. Mr. FRYE. Undoubtedly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent to offer, out of order, an amendment. Without objection, it will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 61, under the heading "Maine," after line 12, it is proposed to insert:

To the Portland Company, of Portland, Me., the sum of $16,173.49, being the amount remaining unpaid of the sum awarded to said Portland Company for work done and material furnished in the construction of the U. S. double-ender gunboats Agawan and Pontcosue, as per report of Thomas O. Selfridge, commodore and president of board, Senate executive document No. 18, first session of the Thirty-ninth Congress

Mr. FRYE. It has been found by the Selfridge board and by the court

Mr. FULTON. The trouble in matters of this kind is that the committee has not had an opportunity to investigate them, and there is danger of accepting something that has already been paid or that is erroneous and improper in some respects.

I know nothing about this item. I may have seen it before in the records of the committee, but I can not recall it.

Mr. FRYE. It is entirely familiar to me, and the case is exactly on all fours with the item for Larrabee. The amount has been found by the Selfridge board and the court and has never been paid. The claim has been pending ever since I was in the House of Representatives.

Mr. FULTON. I have great confidence in the Senator from Maine; but I desire to look into the item a little more carefully, and later on I may move to strike it out.

Mr. FRYE. I think the Senator will not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McENERY. I offer the amendment I send to the desk. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana desires to offer an amendment.

Mr. FULTON. I ask that it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state it.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add to the Louisiana items, at the bottom of page 60:

To Florine A. Albright the sum of $14,640.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the amendment? It is not in order under the

Mr. FULTON. I object to it. Mr. McENERY. I should like to say something with respect

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that, under the rule, committee amendments are now being considered, and unless there is unanimous consent individual amendments can not now be proposed. The Senator can offer his amendment after the committee amendments shall have been disposed of.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, in the items under "Maryland," after line 15, on page 62, to insert:

To Edward Anderson, administrator of the estate of Mary Anderson, deceased, daughter and devisee under the last will of Col. George Minor, deceased, $7,450.

To Elizabeth V. Belt, administratrix of the estate of Alfred C. Belt, deceased, late of Loudoun County, Va., $2,970.

To Christ Reformed Congregation, of Middletown, Md., $450.

To corporation of Methodist Episcopal Church, Hancock, Md., $550.

To Cornelia Jones, administratrix of the estate of John S. T. Jones, deceased, late of Montgomery County, $240.

To La Grange Lodge, No. 36, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Boonesboro, Md., $370.

To S. Sollers Maynard, executor of the last will of Augustine D. O'Leary, deceased, late of Frederick County, $1,450.

To trustees of Evangelical Lutheran Church, Burkittsville, Md., $225.

To trustees of the United Brethren Church, of Boonesboro, Md., $170.

To trustees of Frederick Presbyterian Church, of Frederick, Md., $200.

Mr. WARREN. On page 62, line 24, after "Christ Reformed Congregation, of Middletown, Md.," there should be inserted the words "successor to the German Reformed Church."

Mr. FULTON. Very well; I have no objection to that amend-

Mr. WARREN. I will say that the word "Maryland" need not be there, as that is the heading of the items.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated. The Secretary. At the bottom of page 62, where the item

"To Christ Reformed Congregation, of Middletown, Md., $450," strike-out "Maryland" and insert the words "successor to the German Re-formed Church," so as to read: "To Christ Reformed Congregation, of Middletown, successor to the German Reformed Church, $450."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. In the Maryland items, on page 63, after line 17, I move to insert:

To Sarah C. Harsch, of Washington County, $655.
To the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Oldtown, Md., $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in the items under the heading "Massachusetts," on page 64, after line 2, to insert:

Was, in the items under the heading "Massachusetts," on page 64, after line 2, to insert:

To George T. Sampson, of Boston, surviving partner of the firm of George T. Sampson and Augustus Sampson, deceased, $4,015.38.

To Velma C. Williams, administratrix of the estate of Paul Curtis, deceased, of Boston, $4,128.39.

The following-named 25 persons, the following sums, respectively, as found by the Court of Claims, in the case of Alfred D. Bullock and 24 others against the United States:

To Alfred D. Bullock, $232.11.

To Joseph F. Baker, $210.77.

To John Clark, $142.64.

To William M. Carr, $79.67.

To Winslow L. Crafts, $371.87.

To Charles H. Crocker, $330.83.

To Samuel Dwight, $786.62.

To John F. Gilmore, $275.44.

To Henry G. Hichborn, $349.93.

To Patrick Marrow, $171.40.

To Jennie A. Sawyer, widow of Jefferson Sawyer, deceased, $281.87.

To Chester R. Streeter, $488.10.

To George D. Sawyer, $315.43.

To Albert Sawyer, $473.15.

To Samuel J. Cochran, $445.83.

To William D. Balley, $112.29.

To William N. Balley, $112.29.

To William N. Balley, $112.29.

To William N. Winter, $166.66.

To John Ward S7.75.

To George H. Young, $92.81.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to line 10 on page 64. I think he ought to reserve the privilege of offering as an amendment there the addresses of those 25 persons.

Mr. FULTON. That is impossible. We can not find them. Mr. WARREN. I thought, perhaps, on a re-search of the papers they might be found, and they could be put in if they could be found. Mr. FULTON. They are not in the findings, and it is impracticable to find them. On page 66, after line 14, in the Massachusetts items, I move to insert:

To Frederick L. Greene, administrator of Thomas B. Flower, deceased, $5,538.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Mississippi," on page 69, to insert, after line 5, the following:

To Mrs. J. H. T. Jackson, of Marshall County, administratrix of the estate of Elizabeth H. Welford, deceased, $3,650.

To Belle O. Coward (née Johnston) and Mary Julia Quick (née Johnston), daughters and heirs at law of Vernon H. Johnston, deceased, late of Hinds County, and his wife, Fannie J. Johnston, deceased, $3,960, and to John Anderson, widower and sole heir at law of Jennie Anderson (née Falkner), deceased, daughter of said Fannie J. Johnston, deceased, $360

To Robert M. Lay, administrator of Nancy Lay, deceased, late of Scott County, $2,804.
To Margaret Raiford Loftin (née Margaret Raiford), administratrix of the estate of Robert Raiford, deceased, late of Marshall County, $2,578.
To James M. Price, of Walker County, Ala., $665.
To William T. Ratliff, administrator of the estate of Sarah G. Clark, deceased, late of Hinds County, $1,355.
To W. T. Smith, of Benton County, administrator of the estate of Maria A. Reinhardt, deceased, $3,395.
To Charles O. Spencer, of Tippah County, $2,031.
To Harriett Miles, of Warren County, $1,795.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McLAURIN. I was absent a few moments ago. I will ask the Senator in charge of the bill if the item putting in the claim of John M. Bass was restored to the bill. I understood it was left out, and it is the only one in the former bill that is left out.

Mr. FULTON. I had just risen to offer an amendment to insert the item.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 70, after line 10, insert:

To the Christian Church of Corinth, Miss., $1,250. To John M. Bass, administrator of the estate of William O. Moseley, deceased, late of Hinds County, $4,285.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, beginning on line 1, page 72, to insert under the heading "Missouri:"

To C. A. Jarred, administrator of the estate of Leroy Noble, deceased, late of Ebenezer, $740.

To trustees of Christian Church, Marshall, Mo., $1,240.
To trustees of Methodist Episcopal Church South, Harrisonville, Mo., $779.75.

To trustees of the First Baptist Church, of Jefferson City, Mo., $1.380.
To the University of Missouri, $5.075.
To Karoline Mulhaupt, of Kansas City, $1,395.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. At the end of the Missouri items, on page 72, after line 22, I move to insert:

To the trustees of the Christian Church of Pleasant Hill, Mo., $5,000. To Nannie, Oscar W., John R., and Emma Cogswell, heirs of O. H. Cogswell, deceased, late of Jackson County, $1,600. To the county of St. Genevieve, Mo., the sum of $1,200. To the First Christian Church of Mexico, Mo., the sum of $550. To the county of Phelps, Mo., the sum of $890.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment was, on page 73, after line 8, in the items under the head "New Hampshire," to insert:

Was, on page 75, after line 8, in the items under the head New Hampshire," to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understood that the Senator from Oregon would offer as an amendment the bill I left with the Senator.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator did. There is an amendment that the committee intended to offer there. I have been looking through the papers on my desk for it, but I have not yet discovered it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARTER. I inquire of the Senator from Oregon as to the length of time he contemplates consuming in completing the bill now under consideration.

Mr. FULTON. I think, if we are permitted to go on this afternoon, we will complete the bill in probably a couple of hours more

Mr. CARTER. I do not observe the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] in the Chamber. Inasmuch as his amendment is the one that is under consideration, I will ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, hoping that the Senator from Oregon may get through with the pending bill this afternoon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Ser from Oregon proposes an amendment which will be stated.

Mr. FULTON. At the foot of page 78—
Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—

The Servetor from Oregon proposes an amendment which will be stated. The Senator

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. FULTON. In just a moment. I wish to offer an amendment. I move to insert:

To the Union Baptist Association of the State of North Carolina-Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Oregon to

To Bushrod W. Nash, trustee of Union Baptist Association of North Carolina, successor in interest to the Hood Swamp Baptist Church, of Wayne County, N. C., $650.

Mr. FULTON. Very well; I offer the amendment in that form.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to hear the report accompanying that amendment.

Mr. FULTON. It is a court finding for the use of materials in the construction of quarters, $650. The federal troops tore down the building and took the material for the construction of quarters, and the court finds the value to be $650.

Mr. KEAN. I do not think that is a proper amendment, Mr.

President.

Mr. FULTON. It is an amendment the committee agreed to offer, and I offer it as a committee amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. KEAN. I trust the amendment will not be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to inquire whether amendments other than committee amendments are now in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They are not in order under the rule governing the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. They will be in order when the committee amendments are completed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. After the committee amendments are disposed of they will be in order. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Pennsylvania," page 80, after line 22, to insert:

To Thomas R. Walters, $247.69.

To George A. Zirnberg, $455.15.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator 1

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Oregon, I think, has overlooked the spelling of the name in line 5, on page 81. should be changed by omitting the "i" and changing the second "a" to "o."

"a" to "o."

Mr. FULTON. That is correct.

Mr. WARREN. Make it "Archbold" in line 5, page 81.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 81, line 5, strike out the "i" in the name of "Archbold" and change the second "a" to "o," so as to read "Archbold."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, under the heading "South Carolina," after line 8, to insert:

To Mount Zino Society of Fairfield County, $6,000.
To trustees of Baptist Church of Beaufort, S. C., $2,200.
To vestry of Trinity Protestant Episcopal Church, Edisto Island, S. C., $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I ask leave to offer an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is it an amendment to an amendment?

Mr. TILLMAN. It is a Court of Claims finding. Mr. FULTON. All these are committee amendments which we are considering.

Mr. TILLMAN. Are only committee amendments now in

Mr. FULTON. I understand that only committee amendments are now in order.

Mr. TILLMAN. I had supposed from what I had seen around me from different Senators that other amendments are now in order. Of course, I will wait until the Senator says it is time to offer individual amendments.

Mr. WARREN. That is the better way.

Mr. FULTON. I think we had better proceed in the regular

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Tennessee," on page 90, after line 11, to insert:

Mr. WARREN. An item on page 90 is duplicated on page 93, and I think there is one other that is duplicated. I move to strike out lines 5 and 6 on page 93.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 93 strike out the item in lines 5 and 6, in the following words:

To Boiling Fork Baptist Church, Cowan, Tenn., $1,310.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to. Mr. WARREN. The same is true as to the item for the First Baptist Church of Memphis, which is in line 21, page 90, and also on page 93, line 3.

Mr. FRAZIER. Let the item on page 90 be stricken out. Mr. WARREN. I move that amendment to the amendment. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 90, line 21, strike out the words:

To First Baptist Church, Memphis, Tenn., $1,200.

Mr. FULTON. I ask that the item on page 93 be stricken out. Mr. FRAZIER. No; the item on page 90 should be stricken out, because the item on page 93 reads:

To the board of deacons of the First Baptist Church, etc.

Mr. FULTON. Very well; I will consent to that. The amendment to the amendment was agreed to. The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to line 18, page 88. The name "Moro" should be stricken out and "Mora" inserted, so as to read "Mora B. Ferriss." I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 93, after line 13, insert:

To Patrick G. Meath, of Shelby County, $27,280.
To the trustees of the Christian Church of Union City, Tenn., $850.
To the trustees of the Lynn Creek Baptist Church, of Giles County, $600.

Mr. KEAN. What is the first item?

The SECRETARY. To Patrick G. Meath, of Shelby County, $27,280.

Mr. KEAN. Is there a report accompanying that item? Mr. FULTON. It is based on the Court of Claims' finding. Mr. KEAN. I should like to know what are the items of the claim. The Senator has the report before him.

Mr. FULTON. The items enumerated aggregate $74,618.80.

The court finds in the sum stated, namely, $27,280.

Brick residence on Tennessee street, $10,800. Cubbins residence, on Shelby street, $3,000.

Mr. KEAN. Will the Senator tell me on what page he is reading?

Mr. FULTON. On page 230 of the first report.

Rents of cotton shed, $15,000.
Damage to same, $1,200.

Mr. KEAN. For rent of cotton shed, $15,000. Mr. FULTON. The Senator must remember that the court has not found any such amount as that; that while the claim is stated at $74,618, the amount allowed by the committee is $27,280, and it is based on the following statement of the court:

II. During said war for the suppression of the rebellion the military forces of the United States, for their use, took possession of and occupied and used the property described in the petition herein for about two and one-half years, which real estate so used and occupied, together with the material of the character and kind described in said petition taken and used by the United States Army, including the use of and damage to the steamboat Le Grand, was then reasonably worth the sum of $27,280, no part of which appears to have been paid.

So the Senator will see that it is simply for the use and rental of the property and damage to the steamboat. That is one of those items, Mr. President, which I explained some days ago. It was stricken from the bill by the second report, but, as I have explained, because of the fact that it was included in the first report and it had been reported as being favorably recommended and provided for in the bill, and because of the embarrassment under which it placed Senators in representing their constituents, the committee agreed to offer amendments including such items. This would seem to be a very proper item in any event, for, I repeat, it is for rent and for the use of the property and the damage to the steamboat. I think that that portion of the claim ought to be paid. I do not think there can be any real sound objection urged to it.

Mr. KEAN. I do not think it ought to be paid. We differ as to that.

Mr. FULTON. Well, the Senator, of course, has a right to ask for a vote on the item. I ask that the question may be submitted to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. KEAN. The first item.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will put the question on the first item as a separate amendment.

The first item of the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on the remaining items of the proposed amendment.

The remainder of the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the additional items proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Ful-

The Secretary. It is proposed to insert, on page 93, after the items just inserted, the following:

To the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Cleveland, $3,000.

To William H. Sandrum, of Gibson County, $257.

Mr. KEAN. These claims, as I understand, are all from the State of Tennesse

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the heading "Tennessee." Mr. KEAN. Now, I should like to ascertain, if I can, what is the total amount of the appropriations for the payment of claims from the State of Tennessee as the bill now stands?

Mr. FULTON. Perhaps the Senator from Tennessee [Mr.

Frazier] can answer that question.

Mr. FRAZIER. I have not had the items footed up since new items have been added.

Mr. FULTON. Before these items were added, the total for the State of Tennessee was $134,275.33.

Mr. KEAN. How much has been since added?
Mr. FULTON. On the first report before these items were eliminated, the total was $174,219. So that must be what these items will amount to when footed up.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. FULITON. I yield to the Senator. Mr. FRAZIER. I only desire to ask the Senator from Oregon whether he has included in the amendment which he has just -I did not catch it, if he did-the item for the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Triune, Williamson County, Tenn.? Mr. FULTON. Yes; that item was included to the amount of

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Claims was, on page 93, after line 13, to insert:

To Mary A. Shaw, of Nueces County, $700.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. On page 93, after line 16, I move to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 93, after line 16, under the heading "Texas," it is proposed to insert:

To the trustees of Four Mile Creek Baptist Church, of Henrico County, $800.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. On page 95, line 17, before the name "Bowden," the name "Mary" should be stricken out and the name "Martha" inserted.

Mr. WARREN. That is correct.

Mr. FULTON. I move that amendment to the amendment. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 95, line 17, before the name "Bowden," it is proposed to strike out "Mary" and insert "Martha," so as to read:

To Rosa M. Bowden, Zenobia Porter, Mary E. Bowden, and Martha Bowden Gustin, heirs of Lemuel J. Bowden, deceased, late of Williamsburg, $3,540.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. In the item at the top of page 102, for the Lambs Creek Protestant Episcopal Church, the word "vestry" should be stricken out and the words "the trustees" inserted.

I move that amendment to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 102, line 1, after the word "To," it is proposed to strike out "vestry," and insert "the trustees," so as to read:

To the trustees of Lambs Creek Protestant Episcopal Church, King George County, Va., $800.

Mr. KEAN. If that amendment is made, then it will be necessary to make similar changes in the other items.

Mr. FULTON. No.
Mr. KEAN. I do not know what the rule is in that State, but in other States the Protestant Episcopal Church is generally incorporated by the warden and vestry of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

Mr. FULTON. These items are made as nearly as possible to follow the findings of the court. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. I offer the amendment to the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 106, after line 22, it is proposed to insert the following:

To the trustees of the Protestant Church of French Creek, W. Va., $1,100.

To Warwick Hutton, administrator of the estate of Samuel Morrison, deceased, late of Randolph County, $1,340.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question. I have some additional amendments. age speaks for them. They are very ancient. Does the Senator desire that I shall offer them now or wait until the committee amendments are disposed of?

Mr. FULTON. I hope the Senator will not ask to have them considered now. We should first consider and dispose of the committee amendments.

Mr. SCOTT. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

Mr. FULTON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on line 2, page 107. The claimant mentioned in the item has died since the bill was reported, and as a consequence an amendment is necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. Under the subhead "Wisconsin," on page 107, line 2, after the word "To," it is proposed to insert "Charlotte Lyke and John B. Lyke, executors of the estate of," and in the same line, after the name "Lyke," to insert "deceased," so as to read:

To Charlotte Lyke and John B. Lyke, executors of the estate of Hiram F. Lyke, deceased, of Waukesha County, $188.56.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. I ask to recur to the item, on page 69, line 17, as I desire to move an amendment to the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the amendment will be considered as pending. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 69, line 17, after the word "To," it is proposed to strike out "Robert M. Lay, administrator" and insert "John R. Owen, in trust for the estate," so as to read:

To John R. Owen, in trust for the estate of Nancy Lay, deceased, late of Scott County, $2,804.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Claims was, on page 107, after line 5, to insert:

MISCELLANEOUS CASES.

FOR DIRECT APPROPRIATIONS AND OTHER PURPOSES.

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the several parties named in Senate Document No. 216. Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, and Senate Document No. 158, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, and Senate Document No. 158, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, or their legal representatives, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amounts set opposite each of their names, respectively, aggregating $282,943.88, representing services actually performed by them as letter carriers in excess of eight hours per day and reported by the commissioners of the Court of Claims as being the amounts due them under the provisions of the act of May 24, 1888, entitled "An act to limit the hours that letter carriers in cities shall be employed per day," but which have been excluded or excepted from judgment for the sole reason that the same were barred by the statute of limitations.

That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, given to the Court of Claims (notwithstanding any statutory bar of limitations) over the claims of the Compañía de los Ferrocarriles de Puerto Rico, with power to find the facts and to enter judgment against the United States for the reasonable value of the services performed by said company in the island of Porto Rico for transporting the municipal police and guardia civil between the 12th day of August, 1898, and the like and the reasonable value of said services for the same period, together with the expense of repair and maintenance of telegraph lines of the Signal Corps, all of said services having been performed during the military occupation of said services having been performed during the military occupation of said sialand.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 194, after line 2, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the owners of the Norwegian steamship Nicaragua the sum of $4,926.67, in full for compensation for damage to said owners by reason of the rescue of an American citizen, John McCafferty, and the consequent quarantine of said ship at Mobile, Ala., in the year 1894.

Mr. NELSON. This amendment should be rejected. Mr. FULTON. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Secretary. On page 194, strike out lines 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11, and in lieu thereof, insert:

Provided, That section 23 of the act of July 31, 1894, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, is hereby amended by adding thereto the words "except where necessary," in order to make a settlement conform to a decision of the Court of Claims: And provided further, That the Court of Claims is hereby authorized to consider and act upon those claims arising under the decision of the Supreme Court of March 11, 1889, in the case of United States v. Watson, which had been disallowed prior to July 31, 1894. And the bar of any statute of limitations is hereby removed in respect to such claims

Mr. KEAN. I think we need some explanation of the amendment.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator from Minnesota will explain it. Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the amendment is proposed to be rejected because it involves a claim that was included in the general deficiency bill at the last session, having been put into that bill after this bill was reported, and the claim has been allowed and paid; so the amendment should go out.

The amendment offered as a substitute relates to a few military claims under the law of 1838, under which officers were given longevity pay amounting to 1 ration per day for every five years' service—that is, an increase amounting to a daily ration after serving five years, for each period of reenlistment. The law was afterwards extended so as to apply to the service of enlisted men. The Auditor for the Treasury Department refused to allow some of the early longevity claims, because he held it should not include service in the ranks prior to the time they became officers, and held that nobody but regularly commissioned officers could be allowed the longevity pay.

A case went to the Supreme Court involving cadets at West Point, and the Supreme Court held that those cadets, and also enlisted men, were entitled to have their period counted; that their service in the army began from that date, and that the five years' period should be counted from that date. Before that decision was made by the Supreme Court the auditor had disallowed those claims. After that decision the Auditor for the Treasury Department allowed all those claims, but he refuses to reopen a few claims that had been adjudicated under the old rule.

That is all there is in the amendment. There is a very full report on this matter to the House. The amendment simply submits it to the Court of Claims. There are a few claims which were disallowed under the old rule, and it is the purpose to put them on a par with those allowed after the decision of the Supreme Court.
Mr. KEAN. May I ask the Senator from Minnesota a question?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. KEAN. Is there any estimate as to the amount of money that will be required? I see no amount stated.

Mr. NELSON. There is no amount appropriated. The claims are submitted to the Court of Claims, and that court Mr. NELSON. must first act upon them, and then they will have to come back to Congress.

Mr. KEAN. Then this is merely sending these claims to the Mr. Kraan.
Court of Claims?
NELSON. To adjudicate; that is all.

Mr. NELSON. To adjudicate; that is all.
Mr. KEAN. Without any suggestion—
Mr. WARREN. To find the facts, I suppose?
Mr. NELSON. To find the facts.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.
The next amendment of the Committee on Claims was, on page 194, after line 11, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cancel proceedings instituted by the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the recovery of the sum of $6,276, alleged to be due the United States by the Minnesota and Ontario Bridge Company on account of timber used in the construction of the Minnesota and Ontario bridge across Rainy River at Baudette, in the State of Minnesota, the said Minnesota and Ontario Bridge Company having been five years previously to the institution of said proceedings a bona fide and innocent purchaser of said timber from parties then doing business at Baudette, Minn, but whose whereabouts are now unknown. And the said Minnesota and Ontario Bridge Company is hereby relieved of any obligation to pay to the United States Government the amount hereinbefore set forth.

That there be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal representatives of the estate of Samuel Lee, deceased, to wit, Samuel Lee, Anna Lee Andrews, Clarence Lee, Robert Lee, Harry A. Lee, and Phillip Lee, heirs at law, the sum of $10,482.80, the same being in full for any claim for pay and allowances made by reason of the election of said Lee to the Forty-seventh Congress and his services therein.

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,015.58 to H. R. King, of Grand Rapids, Minn., to reimburse the said King for moneys collected from him on contracts for the cutting of timber in the Indian reservation in Minnesota in excess of the value of the timber.

That in accordance with the findings of fact and the suggestions of the court in the case of the Washington Loan and Trust Company and others against the United States, being case No. 23.193, in the Court of Claims, the disbursing officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the legal representatives of the estate of Aaron Van Camp, of the District of Columbia, the sum of $38,750, and to the legal representatives of the estate of Virginius P. Chapin, of West Virginia, the sum of $21,350, the same being the amounts unlawfully taken from claimants, respectively, by the consular agent of the United States at Navigators Islands, as set forth by said Court of Claims in their thirteenth finding of fact.

That jurisdiction in equity is hereby conferred upon the circuit court of the United States for the ninth circuit to examine and determine the rights of American citizens under the award of the Paris arbitration concerning the jurisdiction of Bering Sea.

That all American citizens whose rights were affected by said award may submit to the court their claims thereunder, and the court shall enter judgment thereon. Claims not submitted within two years from the passage of this act shall thereafter be forever barred.

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any

Mr. CARTER. If there is no amendment now pending, I move to insert in lieu of the amendment stricken out on page

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill has not yet been concluded.

Mr. CARTER. The bill is not open for general amendment at this time?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading has not been concluded. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, on page 199, after line 15, to

Insert:

That the Treasurer of the United States, as ex officio sinking-fund commissioner of the District of Columbia, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to sell the bonds authorized to be issued under the provisions of the sixth section of the act of the Congress of the United States entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes," approved June 16, 1880, and out of the proceeds of the sale of said bonds pay and satisfy the claim of Joseph T. H. Hall, of Washington, D. C., now deceased, against the District of Columbia, for $8.664.19, without interest, being the amount found due him by the judgment of the Court of Claims under date of June 22, 1895, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 13, 1895, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes, approved June 16, 1880," and to pay said amount to Mrs. Julia L. Hall, his widow, of Washington, D. C.

Mr. KEAN. Is there a report on that item?

Mr. KEAN. Is there a report on that item?
Mr. FULTON. The Senator will find the report in regard to that item beginning on page 960. I do not remember the facts myself at this time. Does the Senator desire to make any motion in regard to it?

Mr. KEAN. I was trying to find out what the payment is for.
Mr. WARREN. While that is pending, I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to a misspelling on page 116,

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I have looked at the report on the claim of Mrs. Julia L. Hall, and it seems to be a payment on account of the discount on bonds of the District of Columbia.

It is rather a queer claim. I ask to have the report read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey asks for the reading of the report. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (8. 679) for the relief of Mrs. Julia L. Hall, having had the same under careful consideration, beg to report it back to the Senate and to recommend its passage without amendment.

A similar bill was favorably reported by both Houses of Congress in the Fifty-seventh Congress, was passed by the Senate, and held an early place on the calendar of the House when the session closed. The number of the report was House Report No. 801. It contains the facts in the case so far as then known, and is adopted by your committee and made a part of their report, as follows:

"The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1727) for the relief of Mrs. Julia L. Hall, beg leave to submit the following report and recommend that said bill do pass without amendment.

"The claimant is the widow of the late Capt. Joseph T. H. Hall, who for many years was a resident of the city of Washington, D. C., and who died at Denver, Colo., on the 18th day of April, 1839, leaving no children surviving him, the widow being sole surviving heir.

"The claimant and said Hall were married May 10, 1865, and lived together as husband and wife from that time until his death, most of the time in the city of Washington, D. C.

"Claimant was born and reared in said city, where her father, I. C. Lewis, was a prominent citizen of means and did much to improve the city, and much of the money used by her husband in executing the work which is the basis of this claim was furnished by her, having been received in property from her father.

"Captain Itial left little or no property or money, and none that is the source of any income or means of support to the claimant. He was a soldier in the war of the rebellion, serving throughout the war and having an honorable record, and claimant has been granted a pension at $8 per month under the act of June 27, 1890, as his dependent widow, and this pension is her dependence for future permanent s

"Her said husband left a few accounts and claims for work he had done. The principal one, and all she expects to realize anything from, is the claim for work done by him in the city of Washington, for the District of Columbia, which she now asks the Congress to pay in the present bill for her relief.

"In his lifetime the late said Joseph T. H. Hall did work as a contractor for the District of Columbia, in the city of Washington; that he furnished, spread, and broke 'macadam,' according to the specifications of his contract, to the amount of 5,160,50 cuble yards, or 15,481.50 square yards; that what are known and designated as the 'board rates' for said work was $1.50 per square yard, and at these rates his work amounted to $23,222.25; that he was paid $12,461.06, leaving a balance of $10,761.19; but of this amount of cubic yards furnished by said Hall there were 940.40 cubic yards he did not furnish the stone for, and the District paid for same $2.23 per cubic yard, amounting to $2,097. This amount should be deducted from the total of the balance, leaving $8,664.19 due Mr. Hall.

"Under the act of Congress of February 13, 1895, providing for the adjudication of claims against the District in the Court of Claims at the said 'board rates' for the work done as aforesaid, Mr. Hall brought an action in the Court of Claims and secured a judgment for said balance of $8,664.19 June 22, 1896, and also for interest on same at 3.65 per cent from the time of the completion of the work under the contract, which was January 1, 1877. The opinion of the Court of Claims Reports, at page 376. The District took exception to said judgment as to the allowance of interest and appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and by decision of February 15, 1897, the judgment of the Court of Claims was reversed, the court holding in favor of the contention of the District, that interest should not have been allowed. "Before further proceedings could be had in the Court of Claims the act of Congress of February 13, 1895, above refe

Mr. TELLER. I understand there has been some question raised about this claim and some one has asked that the committee's report might be read. While I was connected with the Committee on Claims I passed upon this question and made a report on it, and the facts are within my knowledge.

Captain Hall had a quarry not far from here and he furnished to the Government a large amount of material. This claim went into the Court of Claims. First, the Committee on Claims reported it favorably.

Mr. KEAN. I would be glad if the Senator from Colorado would let the balance of the report be read. The concluding paragraph of the report has not been read.

Mr. TELLER. Very well, let it be read, if the Senator de-

Mr. KEAN. It relates to the discount on the warrants of the District of Columbia which he took.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the report.

The Secretary read as follows:

This amount, $8,664.19, is the principal sum of the balance found due January 1, 1877, and the Court of Claims allowed interest on the same from said date.

Had it not been for the allowance of the interest this amount would have been paid by the District.

We recommend the passage of the bill and the payment of said principal sum found due, as the balance unpaid for the work done, without interest, according to the decision of the Supreme Court above referred to.

principal sum found due, as the balance unpaid for the work done, without interest, according to the decision of the Supreme Court above referred to.

Since the above report was made, the original contract between Mr. Hall and the District of Columbia, and other papers in the case which were for a time lost, have been restored to their proper place in the office of the clerk of the United States Court of Claims.

It appears that Mr. Hall's contract was dated May 31, 1872, and called specifically for payment "In lawful money of the United States," and required him to pay his workmen "in cash current."

In contracts made with other parties a little later it was expressly stipulated that payments be made in "bonds issued by the sinking fund commissioners of the District of Columbia, which bonds shall be received and accepted at their par value." With the exception of a small sum, Mr. Hall, in violation of the terms of his contract, was obliged to accept in payment certificates of indebtedness payable in these bonds instead of "lawful money of the United States."

On account of the uncertain legality of their issue, these bonds were worth at the time of delivery about 50 cents on the dollar, and it appears from sworn testimony that for $11,900 worth of these bonds, which Mr. Hall accepted under protest, he realized the sum of $5,950. However, the equity in this claim does not rest simply in the fact that Mr. Hall was obliged to accept bonds of uncertain value contrary to the terms of his contract, and that the unpaid balance at interest would amount to far more than the claim of his bill; it is also evident that Mr. Hall was obliged by his contract to pay his workmen "in cash current," and did so pay them, and in consequence he had to mortgage and ultimately lose one plece of property after another, including his home.

Mr. RAYNER. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether we can offer amendments after the committee amendments are disposed of.

Mr. FULTON. I do not expect to conclude the consideration of the bill this evening.

Mr. RAYNER. If you do, I ask that the Maryland items be passed over.

Mr. FULTON. Even if we should conclude the consideration of it so far as the committee amendments are concerned, I will ask that it be laid over and there will be opportunity at a later time to offer amendments.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate, but this is a just and proper claim, and was so found by the court for services rendered. Captain Hall had a larger claim which was not allowed. This amount was allowed him, but he did not live to collect it. His widow is now in a condition where she needs it very much, and I see no reason why it should not be paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 200, after line 15, to insert: LIMITATION.

In case of the death of any claimant, or death or discharge of any executor or administrator of any claimant herein named, then payment of such claim shall be made to the legal representatives: Provided. That where a claimant is dead the administrator, executor, or legal representative shall file a certified copy of his bond, which bond must be at least equal in amount of the sum hereby appropriated: And provided further, That in all cases where the original claimants were adjudicated bankrupts the payments shall be made to the next of kin instead of to assignees in bankruptcy; but these provisions shall not apply to payments in the cases of the French spoilation claims, which shall be made as heretofore prescribed in this act: And provided further, That wherever under this bill it is provided that a payment be made to an executor or an administrator, whether original or no longer holds his office, the payment shall be made to the successor therein, his title to hold such office being established to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury; and whenever under this bill it is provided that a payment shall be made to a corporation and such corporation has been merged in or consolidated with another corporation, payment shall be made to the corporation payment shall be made to acroporation and such corporation, payment shall be made to the corporation with which the consolidation or merger has been made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. On page 197, after line 16, I move to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50 per month, for sixty months, to Bernard W. Murray: Provided, That should the said Bernard W. Murray die before the expiration of sixty months, leaving no minor children, said payments shall thereupon cease; should the said Bernard W. Murray die before the expiration of sixty months, leaving minor children, said payments shall cease upon the majority of the youngest of said children.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Has the Senator from Oregon con-The VICE-PRESIDENT. Has the Senator from Oregon concluded the presentation of the committee amendments?

Mr. FULTON. No; I have an amendment on the table to repeal certain sections of the Tucker Act.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon

yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FULTON. I yield. Mr. CULBERSON. I understood, in some general way, that the amendment to which the Senator refers would await the disposition of the other amendments to the bill.

Mr. FULTON. I will state that the committee has about concluded the amendments which it has to offer. Possibly it may offer some to-morrow; but my desire was that this amendment should be read and placed before the Senate, and then that Senators shall consider it and be ready to suggest any modifications

Mr. CULBERSON. I think that course is entirely satisfactory.
Mr. FULTON.

I desire simply that it shall be pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add to the bill the following:

That section 14 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Tucker Act, be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided, That all bills and claims hereto referred to the Court of Claims under and pursuant to the provisions of said section may be prosecuted in, and shall be heard, determined, and reported by, said court in all respects as if said section were continued in force.

That section 4 of the act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the executive departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, be, and said section 4 is hereby, repealed, and section 3 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 3. The jurisdiction of said court shall not extend to or include any claim against the United States growing out of the destruction of or damage to property by the army or navy during the war for the suppression of the rebellion, or for the use and occupation of real estate by, or for stores, subsistence, or supplies taken by or furnished to any part of the military or naval forces of the United States in the operations of said forces during the said war; nor shall the said court have jurisdiction of any claim against the United States which is now barred by virtue of the provisions of any law of the United States: Provided, That all claims for supplies or stores taken by or furnished to any part of the military or naval forces of the United States for their use during the war for the suppression of the rebellion, heretofore referred or transmitted to the Court of Claims by virtue of and pursuant to the provisions of said act of March 3, 1883, may be prosecuted in and shall be heard, determined, and reported by said court in all respects as fully and completely as if said section 4 of said act of March 3, 1883, had not been repealed or said section 3 thereof had not been amended by this act."

Mr. FULTON. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that it is only section 14 of the Tucker Act which it is proposed to repeal by this amendment, under which practically all of what are known as "war claims" are sent to the Court of Claims. Section 14 provides:

That whenever any bill, except for a pension, shall be pending in either House of Congress providing for the payment of a claim against the United States, legal or equitable, or for a grant, gift, or bounty to any person, the House in which such bill is pending may refer the same to the Court of Claims, who shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the executive departments in the investigations of claims and demands against the Government," etc.

It provides for the court making findings and certifying them back to Congress. The Tucker Act provides for giving jurisdiction to the Court of Claims in many other matters. It is not desired to repeal, of course, the entire act, but that section which permits this character of claims to go to the Court of

It has been suggested to me that the taking effect of the amendment should be postponed to some future time. own judgment would be that bills which are now pending before Congress might properly be referred to the Court of Claims, but that thereafter none of this character of claims should go there. I believe that all such claims with any possible merit have been already brought to the attention of Congress, and that no injustice will be done by providing that after the present session, say after the 15th of March next, this proposed amendment shall take effect; that from and after that date the repeal shall be effective. That will enable the sending down of all matters that are pending before the Senate at the present time, and it will prevent those gentlemen who are living by working up claims from digging up any more claims of that character be-tween adjournment and the time of the taking effect of the repeal. If we postpone the time for the taking effect of this repeal, say for a year or two years, it will only stimulate the industry of persons who are engaged in hunting up and presenting to Congress this character of claims.

When I say presenting to Congress, of course, I know no one will understand me to mean a Member of Congress, because these claims are brought to his attention and he is appealed to by citizens of his State to present them, and, of course, he can not avoid doing it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.
Mr. TILLMAN. Has it occurred to the Senator that there may be many meritorious claims which have never been presented, but which could be prepared and presented for adjudication by the Court of Claims after a fair notice of twelve months or two years? Not that that would increase the number of industrious lawyers, perhaps, who are working around the country looking for plausible causes of making a claim, but there are really just and honest claims which have never been presented simply because it has appeared so difficult heretofore to get any recognition of the justice of such claims in Congress that people have felt that it was a hopeless task to undertake it; but they would do so if they were given an opportunity. You may hedge the matter about with any reasonable restrictions you see fit, still not barring out absolutely the adjudication by the Court of Claims after a limited time. I think southern Representatives here would—I surely would—be glad to be relieved of the burden of endeavoring to press claims which they believe to be just, but which they know are hopeless under certain restrictions and regulations here. A large part of my correspondence has been in answering inquiries of this person, that person, and the other person who think they have a claim against the Government, but which I, upon investigation, report to them "there is no chance in the world for you to get anything." Still I have to answer them, look up the law, and point out the whys and the wherefores. I wish I could simply say, once for all, "Congress has fixed a limit within which time you must prepare your claim, present it, and let the Court of Claims sift it; and after that," I could say, "there is no use for you to bother me with any such correspondence as that." I believe every Senator on this side of the Chamber would be you should repeal the law which allows opportunities for anybody to present a claim.

Mr. FULTON. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the Tucker Act, so called, was passed in 1887. that time there certainly has been very little difficulty in getting matters presented to the Court of Claims for a finding. Bowman Act was passed in 1883. Under it claims of this character might go to the court; but, of course, if they were barred by the statute of limitations, that was a perfect defense under the Bowman Act. I can not, however, believe that there are any claims still not brought to the attention of Congress or Members of Congress that have any real merit in them. It would be extraordinary that during all this period of years the people should hold legitimate and meritorious claims, knowing that they could send them to a Member of Congress and have a bill introduced for their payment; and if the bill was not enacted, the claim could be sent to the Court of Claims without costing the claimant anything, and yet they have refrained from doing so.

Mr. TILLMAN. And yet the Senator has in this very bill, or knows that there are in this very bill, claims over a hundred years old which are no more meritorious than a great many which would go to the Court of Claims if notice was given that beyond a certain period they would be barred.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator, I suppose, refers

Mr. TILLMAN. Many of the claims in the bill are a hundred years old.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator refers to the French spoliation claims, I suppose?
Mr. TILLMAN.

Yes.

Mr. FULITON. But those have been pending all along, Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me, the French spoliation claims are different in this: The French Government has settled with our Government, and it is a mere matter between our Government and the claimants.

Mr. FULTON. Yes. During all these years—over a hundred years, as has been said—this Government has held the money which belongs to these claimants.

Mr. TILLMAN. Why has it taken a hundred years to settle an honest and just claim?

Mr. FULTON. The Senator has had some experience in Congress

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes. I have got some claims here that the Court of Claims has adjudicated, and yet the committee has refused to put them into the bill when it has put in similar claims right on the floor to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes.
Mr. SMOOT. I should like to suggest to the Senator that even if section 14 of the Tucker Act should be repealed, as suggested by the chairman of the committee, that will not preclude any meritorious claims from being considered by Claims Committee, or being passed upon by the Senate or the other House

Mr. TILLMAN. The difficulty is in determining what is a From my experience with what few claims meritorious claim. I have undertaken to prosecute here to a successful legislative passage, I know that the burden on Senators is very great, and the indifference and disinclination of committees to investigate, under the labors which we have to perform, make it practically useless to undertake to bring claims in here, and when we send them to the Court of Claims—a court constituted for the express purpose of investigating and adjudicating and determining what is just and right—I do not see why it would not be reasonable and just to have a limit fixed, after which all claims should be barred; and I should be glad to vote for such a thing, but I do not think we ought to have the thing killed off by ipse dixit right straight ahead in two minutes and a half.

Mr. FULTON. That was not my proposition-within two minutes and a half, but in two months and a half.

Mr. TILLMAN. But you said "those which are already pending."

Mr. FULTON. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Why not give those to whom I refer an opportunity?

Mr. FULTON. I think I can explain the matter so that the Senator will understand it. My suggestion was that the limit as to the time when this amendment will take effect should not go beyond the middle of March.

Mr. WARREN. I want to ask the Senator from Oregon if it is his plan to have all cases now pending in the Senate or that thankful to you and to Congress if, after giving due notice, may be pending in this session until its close sent to the Court of Claims, and that his amendment will not cut out those bills that might be introduced to-morrow or next day or next week?

Mr. FULTON. That was the idea. Mr. WARREN. Nor does he prop Nor does he propose to cut out any claims now pending in the Court of Claims.

Mr. FULTON. Certainly not. Mr. WARREN. I agree with the Senator. I think that March 5 gives time enough, then. The time certainly ought not to be extended beyond January 1, 1910, in any event.

Mr. FULTON. But if you allow it to go beyond that, if you extend the time a year, it will be simply starting out a great industrial army enlisted for the purpose of working up this character of claims and presenting them before the law takes effect. I think it would be bad public policy to extend the time of the taking effect of the repealing provision for that length of time or during that period.

I am about to retire from Congress, and it is not a matter of great concern to me, except simply as a citizen; but were I remaining here, if the present system were continued in force, I should positively decline to serve on the Committee on Claims, Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator a question right

there?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.
Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator if it would be the intention of his committee, if this provision passes, to clean up all the bills pending before his committee by sending them to the Court of Claims at the end, or near the end, of this session?

Mr. FULTON. It would be my judgment to send all pending bills of that character to the Court of Claims, or practically all, There might be some that I would not so send. at least.

Mr. SMOOT. In further answer to the Senator, I should like to say that there are nearly a thousand cases already before the committee which have been pending here for years and years.

Mr. WARREN. There are more than a thousand.

Mr. SMOOT. At least that. Mr. TILLMAN. That shows how utterly hopeless it is The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. FULTON. For a question. Mr. TILLMAN. I say the statement just made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMoot] shows how utterly hopeless it is for us to get the Committee on Claims of the Senate to investigate the merits of any claim which is presented.

Mr. FULTON. No.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President-Mr. FULTON. Let me answ Let me answer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

TILLMAN. I do not charge the committee with any

Mr. FULTON. No; I do not yield any further, Mr. President. Instead of showing how hopeless it is to get a committee that will earnestly examine these claims, it simply shows that there is a limitation

Mr. TILLMAN. On your ability. Mr. FULTON. On the possibility of men having time to perform the work.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am not charging the committee with any dereliction of duty or unwillingness; but it is an impossible

Mr. FULTON. It is an impossible thing, it is true, to examine all of these claims; but the truth is, that the very great majority of the claims are fraudulent and are not founded on any honest, legitimate evidence.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President-The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FULITON. Certainly. Mr. SMOOT. I should like to say further that, so far as I am concerned as a member of the Committee on Claims, I have spent hours and hours and days and days going over testimony in these cases, and there are very few claims that I have gone into that I consider just. I have always been perfectly willing to report a claim if there was a particle of merit in it, and I feel that way now.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, the great trouble about sending claims to the Court of Claims is that it frequently places Congress in a false position. People are invited to go before They employ lawyers to prosecute their cases. secure findings that are called favorable, and, in truth, are favorable; but, as a matter of fact, it is because the Government | and considered. So, it seems to me that the chairman's plan is practically helpless to meet the evidence which is produced. For instance, where there is a question of loyalty the claimant brings in some witness who testifies that he knew the claimant or the claimant's intestate during his lifetime, and that he was loyal. The Government can not secure any testimony to meet that, because of the long time that has elapsed since the date of the occurrence. So the question of loyalty is adjusted and the finding is probably in favor of the claimant. The probability, Mr. President, in my judgment, is that at least 75 per cent of those findings are untrue in fact, and based on testimony that was not true. I do not criticise the court for it. The court, like the committee, is practically helpless in the matter.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FULTON. I do. Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator if he does not think it would be better for Congress to stand between these claims and the Court of Claims; in other words, instead of dumping all of these claims on the Court of Claims, and, as the Senator says, inviting people to go there, ought not Congress, in the first instance, examine them and refer to the court only such claims as on their face appear to have merit? In that view, ought there not be far more time than that suggested in connection with the repeal of this law, if the people who have not prosecuted their claims are to have an opportunity to present them to Congress for examination and reference to the Court of Claims—say several years, two, three, or four years?

Mr. FULTON. I will say to the Senator that any committee of the Senate or of the other House that shall undertake to examine these claims will find itself in exactly the same position in which the court is. Parties will present affidavits in support of a claim, and there will be no way by which the committee can secure any evidence to meet that produced by the claimant. So the committee would be helpless, so far as I can see.

Mr. CULBERSON. As a matter of fact, I will ask the chairman of the committee, is it not frequently the case that the committee, after examination, refuse to refer cases to the Court of Claims?

Mr. FULTON. Oh, yes. Mr. WARREN. The committee asks for proof before referring a claim to the court?

Mr. FULTON. Oh, yes; quite frequently the committee has refused to recommend the reference of a case to the Court of Claims.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President— Mr. FULTON. Just a second. I want to say that while of course it is possible that by pursuing the course I suggest some claim that is founded in justice may be rejected, it is very improbable that any considerable number of claims will meet that fate, because, in the first place, none of these claims are claims that the Government is under any real obligation to pay. The payment of them is a mere gratuity; and so long a time has now elapsed since the occurrence that it seems to me the period has arrived when we should cease paying these war claims at all. Now, I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, referring to the inquiry made by the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson], my observation and experience about these claims have been that it is an easy matter for a constituent to ask a Member of the Senate to introduce a claims bill, and it is a hard matter to refuse to introduce it. As a consequence, hundreds of these claims come here. Very many of those who ask for the introduction of such bills do not follow them up by depositing with the committee any affidavits or proof to enable the committee to ascertain whether or not there may be just ground for their consideration. When these claims go down to the court, a very large number of them are never taken up, because the attorneys representing them do not take them up in the court, having no evidence upon which to take them up. Two years ago or so, I think, some 5,000 of them were stricken from the files.

No committee of this Senate has the time to investigate the number of claims that come in here. Neither the Committee on Claims nor any other committee can do it. If that committee should sit every day during the entire session on claims work alone, it would not then probably have time to take up all the bills—some 3,000 in number—that each session go to them.

Now, if we were cleaning up as a whole, and they should all be sent down to the court, there would be this state of affairs: A large number would never enter an appearance by attorneys, so that they would finally be stricken from the files because of lack of support. The others would be tried out in the court, where all the evidence that could be adduced would be presented is a good one, in that it gives an opportunity to take up the claims now pending in his committee or those that may be introduced, send them to the Court of Claims, and put that court to work on them. That does not debar the committee from taking up as a committee such few remaining claims as may come in afterwards, and I should hope that each claim might be considered promptly thereafter, each upon its merits, and reported, either favorably or unfavorably, and disposed of, so as to keep the files clear.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I do not care to pursue this subject further at the present time. So far as I am personally concerned, I do not intend to ask for a vote on this amendment to-night. I have simply called it up in order to explain my views, so that those who are interested in the question may take it under consideration and present such suggestions to-morrow, or when the bill shall be taken up again, as seem to them proper.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FULITON. Certainly, I yield to the Senator. Mr. GALLINGER. I would ask the Senator, Mr. President, if he can state approximately how many bills have been before the Committee on Claims during the present Congress?

Mr. FULTON. Over 2,500, I am told.

Mr. WARREN. Nearer 3,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. One thing has attracted my attention in connection with the Committee on Claims. I know that it is utterly impossible, physically impossible, for that committee to give consideration to all these claims; but it has seemed to me a strange circumstance that the committee does not report some of these claims adversely. I served in the House of Representatives on the Claims Committee, and I made some adverse reports. I served as chairman of the Committee on Pensions of this body, and I found it very helpful to report adversely a bill that carried a line of bills with it, so that we would not be bothered in the future with similar bills. It has seemed to me that if adverse reports were made on bills that do not merit consideration by the Committee on Claims, the committee would unload a good deal of their work in that way. This is no criticism on the committee, except that I have not noticed that adverse reports have been made,

Mr. FULTON. Not many. That is quite true, Mr. President. Occasionally adverse reports have been made; but I think the Senator will understand why that is.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think I understand it. Parties interested beg the committee not to report their claims adversely, but to pigeonhole them; and they are constantly with you.

Mr. FULTON. Yes.
Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I have had some experience on the Committee on Claims. I was chairman of that committee for a good many years, and I know while I was chairman we reported adversely a great many claims.

Mr. WARREN. But they usually came up again; they were reintroduced regularly.

Mr. TELLER. Frequently, as the Senator from Wyoming says, they were again introduced. There is no legal obstacle against that, and, of course, they would come again and, very likely, be again reported adversely. They were cases that were within what, perhaps, the President would call the "twilight zone." It was a little difficult to tell whether they were meritorious or not. The claimant would say: "I have not all the evidence I can get. I will get some more." Such bills would probably go over a session, and perhaps two or three sessions.

I want to say just a word in reply to the chairman of the committee as to there being no attention given to these cases in the court. Whose fault is it, Mr. President, that that is so? It is the Government's own fault. The Government of the United States has ample opportunity

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. TELLER. In a moment.

The Senator does not correctly quote me.

The Government of the United States has Mr. TELLER. ample opportunity, Mr. President, to find out the truth as to these claims; and I believe they have found out very largely. I myself doubt very much whether the court has reported a great many claims that were not founded in justice and right.

I want to say another word. The Senator from Oregon says the payment of these claims is a gratuity. Mr. President, anything that we provide for by law as an obligation of the Government can hardly be called a gratuity. The Government undertook at the close of the war to say that certain acts of the army had been contrary to law and that where the claimant was a loyal citizen of the United States the army could not take his property without compensation. The army might take the property of an alien; it might take the property of an enemy; but not the property of a loyal citizen of the United States

Mr. President, I became a member of the Committee on Claims when Senator Cockrell, long known in this body, was its chairman; and, while he had been a confederate general, I want to say to his credit that he exacted of every claimant who came before that committee the utmost proof of loyalty. No man could have done it better than he did; and that rule, so far as I know, was followed while I had any connection with the committee. The first question was whether the claimant was loyal to the Government. That being proved, we examined as to the merits of his claim—how much property had been taken and what it was worth.

There were, perhaps, some claims allowed that, under the law of nations and the laws of war, would not have been allowed. For instance, suppose there was a battle and in that battle a church was destroyed, according to the law of nations the Government would not be liable for that. For a long time the committee held to the strict rule of law. The claimant must show that his claim was within the law of nations and that his property was destroyed contrary to that law. tle a church, a private house, a public house, or anything else may be destroyed and, under the law of nations, there is no obligations on the Government destroying it to pay for it.

But here in the Senate, and ultimately in the other House, we settled the proposition that where educational institutions, schools, charitable institutions, and churches were destroyed we would pay for them. The most noted case was, of course, the case of William and Mary College. If anybody will take the pains to read the argument which the late Senator Hoar made in this Chamber on that subject, he will see that the Senate proceeded to pay for that class of claims, not because it was an obligation on the Government, but because it was a proper thing for a great Government like ours to do for the cause of education and for the cause of humanity. It might be the case of a hospital, for instance, which had been destroyed.

So, Mr. President, there may be some of these claims that are unworthy, and undoubtedly there are; but there are very many claims that I have seen rejected here that I know were honest and just claims which the Government ought to have paid. I will venture to say, after an experience of a good many years, that there have been more claims rejected that ought to have been paid than there ever have been claims paid that ought not to have been paid.

Mr. McENERY. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Has the Senator from Oregon concluded offering the committee amendments?

Mr. FULTON. There is one other committee amendment to e proposed. I now send it to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. be proposed.

The Secretary. On page 200, after line 15, it is proposed to insert:

That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $110.50, and that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Gen. C. C. Andrews the said sum of $110.50.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. There will probably be a few additional committee amendments later on, but for the present I have no further committee amendments.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to reserve the right for the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose] or the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox], who are away to-day, to offer an amendment known as the "insurance-company amendment.

Mr. FULTON. I will say to the Senator that I am not going to ask that the bill be finally acted upon to-night.

Mr. McENERY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The SECRETARY. At the end of the items under the heading "Louisiana," it is proposed to insert the following:

To Florine A. Albright the sum of $14,640.

Mr. FULTON. My recollection is that there has been paid on this claim already quite a large sum. The committee went very carefully over this matter, and I trust that the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. McENERY. Mr. President, this claim was before the House of Representatives in the Forty-seventh Congress. The facts appearing before the House were just about as they are now. The question of loyalty was involved, and that is the only question affecting this claim. There is no dispute as to the amount. After a short discussion the claim was referred to the Court of Claims by the unanimous vote of the House of Representatives, the late Mr. Dingley participating in the discussion, and, after a few inquiries, supporting the bill. came to the Senate, and the facts in the case enlisted the sympathies of Senator Hoar and impressed him with the justice of the claim. Mr. Hoar, in the Forty-seventh Congress, first ses-

I desire to ask the consent of the Senate to take up a bill which will occupy a very few minutes, and which I am sure every person named in every bill on the calendar would consent to give precedence to. It is a bill permitting the representatives of Sterling T. Austin to go to the Court of Claims with a claim which is described in the bill. They are two most estimable young ladies, whose father and brother were both shot on the same day in midday some time ago, under circumstances which are well known. I do not think it is necessary to enter into any discussion of that matter, but I merely ask my friend from Alabama to permit that bill to be taken up. The report is a very brief one, and it will take a very few minutes to dispose of the bill.

It was unanimously referred to the Court of Claims. The claimants presented an itemized account, embracing cotton and other personal property. The claim for this personal propertyhorses, mules, corn, and so forth-was held back in order that it should not complicate the claim for cotton. The claim went to the Court of Claims, and that court sent the claim back with a finding as follows:

But the court is satisfied that the surviving representatives did not give any aid and comfort to the late rebellion, but were throughout the war loyal to the Government of the United States.

As to the loyalty of Sterling T. Austin, the court found, in substance, that he was constructively disloyal, because he lived in the Confederacy, but they found the beneficiaries of this bill strictly loyal.

There was evidence before the Court of Claims, which is very voluminous, by the most respectable citizens, army officers, federal civil officials, all of whom testified to the loyalty of Austin, to that extent that many of them stated that they had heard him during the war express the most loyal sentiments for the Union. Whenever he had an opportunity, and could do so with prudence to himself, he uttered the strongest sentiments of loyalty to the Government of the United States. He was ostracised by his people. He was under continued observation because of his suspected loyalty. He transferred his slaves to various points in order that they should not be put to work on confederate works. It is needless to make any extended argument upon this matter. From the able report of the Committee on Claims, referring to the summary, I quote:

referring to the summary, I quote:

The substance of this case, therefore, is substantially this:

"Austin was a planter in Georgia and Alabama. Prior to the breaking out of the rebellion he sold his property in those States and moved to the Three Bayou plantation, in Louisiana. The Government has now in its possession $59,287, the net proceeds of property of Austin taken by the Government. No act of disloyalty has been discovered after the most searching investigation, nor is there any pretense that he did any disloyal act excepting this matter of the removal of his slaves from one point to another. As to the removal from the Three Bayou place, in Louisiana, that is conclusively shown to have been done in his absence and against his direction. It is equally conclusively shown that the removal of the slaves from Shreeveport into Texas was done by him because those slaves were being impressed to work for the confederacy. So far, therefore, as the removal of slaves is concerned, it can not be imputed to him as an act of disloyalty, for both of these removals are under such circumstances as indicate quite the contrary of disloyalty. In the first instance he instructs that they should not be removed on the approach of the federal forces, and in the second instance he removed them himself to prevent their being used in aid of the confederacy."

This is the only fact cited to show his disloyalty—the removal of his slaves—which was construed by the court to mean that he intended to place them beyond the jurisdiction of the Gov-ernment of the United States after it had got possession of the territory in which he lived. But the evidence is that he took them back at the first opportunity and placed them under the protection of the federal troops.

There is a finding of the court as to the value of the property. There is no dispute about that. They have never received any thing except for the cotton. This is a claim for the other personal property. The itemized account amounts to $55,860. Only $14,600 is asked for, less than one-third of the sum. As I have said, they received only the value of the cotton, and this is a claim for the other personal property.

The itemized account is as follows:

- $18,000 - 2,200 11 horses
20,000 bushels of corn
100 cattle
300 hogs
8 yoke work cattle 11 horses 20, 000 4, 000 4, 500 960 wagons_ orn meal, fodder, carpenter and blacksmith tools, household and kitchen furniture, and other property_____ 1, 200 5,000

We now ask that there be placed on this bill provision for the property referred to in the third paragraph of the finding:

III. There was taken from claimant's decedent during the year 1863, from his plantation in Lake Providence, Carroll Parish, La., during his absence therefrom, by the military forces of the United States, by proper authority, for the use of the army, stores and supplies as above described which, at the time and place of taking, were reasonably worth the sum of $14,640, no part of which appears to have been paid.

The claimants have never received anything under this second bill. The only amount they have received was for the value of the cotton, these items never entering into the first claim which was made before the Congress. I quote the concluding paragraph of the report made by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] when he was chairman of the Committee on

It is submitted, therefore, that a finding of constructive disloyalty, found by the court after Colonel Austin was dead, and had no opportunity himself to testify or explain his motives, ought not to operate with greater force than an attaint and conviction of treason; and he being dead, and his heirs being loyal, the Government has no longer any excuse for withholding its payment.

Your committee, in view of all the foregoing, report back the bill and recommend its passage.

Mr. FULTON. I merely wish to say that this case went to the Court of Claims. The court found that the claimants' decedent had been disloyal. The committee rejected it for that reason. The same party has been paid a large claim for other matters.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCREARY. I offer the amendment I send to the desk. The Secretary. It is proposed to add at the end of the Kentucky items the following:

To the trustees of the Madison Female Institute, located at Richmond, Ky., $6,500.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, the Madison Female Institute is a college for the education of females, located at Richmond, Ky., and is regularly incorporated.

Mr. FULTON. Is there a Court of Claims finding?

Mr. McCREARY. Yes; a Court of Claims finding.

Mr. MCCREARY. 1es; a court of Claims inding.
Mr. FULTON. Read it.
Mr. McCREARY. I will read it in a moment.
Prior to the year 1862 the claimant was, and now is, the owner of a large tract of land situated in the county of Madison, State of Kentucky, and near the city of Richmond. In the year 1862 the real estate was improved, and a large and handsome building was erected, used for the education of females. On August 30, 1862, the battle of Richmond was fought-the confederates under Gen. Kirby Smith and the Federals under General Thomas. Twenty thousand soldiers engaged in that battle. It was one of the bloodiest battles fought in Kentucky. There were a good many killed and a great many wounded, and immediately this large college building was seized and was used as a hospital, and was occupied for some time.

The case went to the Court of Claims, and the Court of Claims made a favorable finding. The court said:

III. On August 30, 1862, the battle of Richmond, Ky., was fought, and said above-described property was selzed and taken possession of by the Federal troops and converted into a hospital, and was continuously used as such from August 30, 1862, to June 25, 1863, when possession thereof was surrendered to its lawful owners. For the time during which said occupancy continued—to wit, for the period of nine months and twenty-five days—the Quartermaster-General allowed and Congress appropriated and paid to the claimant the sum of $4,097.22 as rental for said property.

IV. During the period of said occupancy the military forces of the United States, by proper authority, took possession of and used for military purposes the outhouses, fences, trees, shrubbery, and porches belonging to the said Madison Female Institute, which property was then and there worth the sum of $6,500, no part of which appears to have been paid.

I want to say also that it has been proved in this case that it required $5,086.20 to repair the building after the soldiers left The Court of Claims made a favorable report, and justice being certainly on the side of the trustees of the Madison Female College I ask that the claim be allowed.

Mr. FULTON obtained the floor.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.
Mr. KEAN. I was merely going to ask the Senator from Oregon if he would not let the bill be laid aside at the present time.

Mr. FULTON. Let us first dispose of this item. Mr. McCREARY. Yes. Mr. KEAN. Then we will have an executive session.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Montana? Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. I desire to present an amendment which I think will not lead to any discussion.

Mr. FULTON. Very well.

Mr. President, I merely want to say a word in regard to the amendment which the Senator from Kentucky has offered. could not hear all of the findings as he read them, and it is impossible for the chairman of the committee to remember all of these court findings. I have gone over them all; I recollect going over this one, but I submit that after the committee has passed on them they ought not to be attached to the pending bill under the circumstances.

Many of these claims-I do not say so of this case-have already been paid, and when you come to look them up you discover that they have been paid. But one can not tell on the spur of the moment when an amendment is offered.

For instance, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon], the other day when the bill was pending, called my attention to the fact that in a certain case the court's finding provided for $2,700 where we had allowed only $800. I said it was correct, and the item should be corrected, and I had it changed to $2,700. I remembered subsequently that $1,900 had been paid once before on that very same claim.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest that this item go over until the morning, in view-

Mr. FULTON. No; I am not going to argue the matter. am simply going to ask the Senate to reject the amendment. I submit that it ought not to be included in the bill.

Mr. McCREARY. What do we have a Court of Claims for, Mr. President? I have no evidence that the Committee on Claims of the Senate ever examined this item, but the Court of Claims, after a thorough examination, made a favorable finding, that there should be paid $6,500. There is no doubt that the battle of Richmond was fought. It is not denied that the building was used as a hospital, and that the fences and outhouses were greatly damaged. It is a just claim. I shall not take up the time of the Senate further. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. I offer the amendment I send to the desk, to come in after line 17, on page 198.

Mr. KEAN. I understood the chairman of the committee had agreed to allow the bill to be laid aside for the day, and I was about to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator from Oregon suggested that he would first receive this amendment.

Mr. KEAN. I will withhold the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 198, after line 7, it is proposed to

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to S. W. Langhorne and H. S. Howell, of Helena, Mont., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,568, being the amount paid by them for rent of the building used by the United States for a land office at Helena, Mont., from November, 1885, up to and including June, 1900, a period of fifty-six months, at $14 per month, and the further sum of $280, being the amount paid by them for janitor service for the same period at $5 per month, in all $1,848.

Mr. KEAN. This seems to be a claim for rent.

Mr. CARTER. It has been approved by the Committee on Claims, favorably reported, and is on the calendar in the shape

Mr. KEAN. That may be.

Mr. KEAN. That may be.
Mr. CARTER. Almost every kind of conceivable claim seems to be in the bill now, and a little rent will not hurt it.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I offer the amendment I send to the desk. The Secretary. On page 51, after line 4, insert:

To Florence Lambert, who was permanently disabled while engaged in the employment of the United States Government at Frankfort Arsenal, in the State of Pennsylvania, on about September 3, 1898, $2,500.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I will say a bill embodying this claim has passed the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to explain my position in relation to the amendments that have been offered to this

I understood it was tacitly agreed that no amendments outside of those that had been reported to the Senate and those that were left off of the original House bill should be considered on this bill; and with that understanding I have written at least two or three hundred letters, notifying claimants that their bills or claims could not go on this bill. If we are now going to throw it open, and all amendments are to be put upon this omnibus claims bill that Senators desire placed there, I want a little time, so that the people to whom I have said their claims could not be put on this bill may have a chance to present their amendments.

Mr. McCREARY. I merely want to say that, so far as I am concerned, I made no such agreement.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I should like to say simply that this is a very pitiable case, in which a woman employed in the arsenal at Frankfort, Pa., was injured by an accidental explosion in the cartridge factory-her eye blown out, her face disfigured, and both arms blown off.

Mr. FULTON. I will say to the Senator that I know about the case. I agree with him. I do not think it is an unreasonable allowance for the injury.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say that I know the case thoroughly; I examined it two years ago; and if any personal-injury case ever presented to the Senate should be paid, this particular case should be paid.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dolliver].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. I ask that the pending measure may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is so ordered.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, if the bill has gone over, I want to give notice that to-morrow morning immediately after the routine morning business I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 5729) to correct the records and authorize the reenlistment of certain noncommissioned officers and enlisted men belonging to Companies B, C, and D of the Twenty-fifth U. S. Infantry who were discharged without honor under Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, November 9, 1906, and the restoration to them of all rights of which they have been deprived on account thereof.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 29, 1909, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

JURISDICTION OF CRIMES ON THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up Senate joint resolution 118 from the Speaker's table and ask for its present

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to consider at the present time the Senate joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution 118 to enable the States of Tennessee and Arkansas to agree upon a boundary line and to determine the jurisdiction of crimes committed on the Mississippi River and adjacent territory.

Resolved, etc., That the consent of the Congress of the United States is hereby given to the States of Tennessee and Arkansas to enter into such agreement or compact as they may deem desirable or necessary, not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, or any law thereof, to fix the boundary line between said States, where the Mississippi River now, or formerly, formed the said boundary line, and to cede respectively each to the other such tracts or parcels of the territory of each State as may have become separated from the main body thereof by changes in the course or channel of the Mississippi River, and also to adjudge and settle the jurisdiction to be exercised by said States, respectively, over offenses arising out of the violation of the laws of said States upon the waters of the Mississippi River.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I ask the gentleman from Arkansas if this is exactly similar to the bill which passed the other day about the other State?

Mr. MACON. Yes, sir; exactly. The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. There are four or five little matters for unanimous consent, some of them of importance to the House generally and some important to the Members; and the Chair is of the impression they can be disposed of in a very few minutes. The gentleman from West Virginia has a privileged matter, and so has the gentleman from Indiana, and if gentlemen are willing until the regular order is demanded, the Chair would be glad to recognize the gentleman from West Virginia.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 8540. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tennessee River in Marion County, Tenn.," approved May 20, 1902, as amended by an act approved February 1, 1905, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tennessee River in Marion County, Tenn."

The message also appropried that the Sepate had passed

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 26709. An act to amend an act to provide for the re-organization of the consular service of the United States; H. R. 26606. An act to authorize the Lewis Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Missouri River; and

H. R. 26920. An act to repeal section 12 of an act entitled "An act to provide for a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1903, and to provide for the location and erection of a substation on the parking at the corner formed by the intersection of the east side of Seventh street and the south side of C street SW., in the city of Washington, D. C., by the Philadelphia, Balti-more and Washington Railroad Company, and to provide for the approval of the same by the Commissioners of the District

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolutions, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives is requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 81.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimates to be made for a project of improvement of the Columbia River from the mouth of the Willamette River to the ocean, in the States of Oregon and Washington, and of the Willamette River, in the State of Oregon, from the city of Portland to the mouth of the river, with a view to securing and maintaining a uniform depth of not less than 30 feet at the lowest stage of water in said rivers from said city of Portland to the ocean. Such survey and estimates to be reported to Congress.

Senate concurrent resolution 79.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to cause preliminary examination and survey to be made of Polson Bay, Flathead Lake, Montana, with a view to dredging the channel and putting in piling on the east side thereof.

Senate concurrent resolution 78.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimates to be made for a project of improvement of the Williamette and Columbia rivers, in the State of Oregon, so as to provide a 30-foot channel from Portland, Oreg., to the Pacific Ocean, and report the same to Congress.

Senate concurrent resolution 77.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to cause preliminary examination and survey to be made of the South Bay Channel, Humboldt Harbor, California, with a view to the removal of obstructions to navigation to and from the wharf at Fields Landing.

Senate concurrent resolution 76.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the most feasible and practical way of connecting the waters of Apalachicola River and St. Andrew Bay, in the State of Florida, with a view to determining the advantage, best location, and probable cost of a canal connecting said waters, and to submit a plan and estimate for such improvement.

ELECTORAL COUNT.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate concurrent resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 57.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 10th day of February, 1909, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, pursuant to the requirements of the Constitution and laws relating to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States, and the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer; that two tellers shall be previously appointed on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed, as they are opened by the President of the Senate, all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes, which certificates and papers shall be opened, presented, and acted upon in the alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the letter A; and said tellers, having then read the same in the presence and hearing of the two Houses, shall make a list of the votes as they shall appear from the said certificates; and the votes having been ascertained and counted in the manner and according to the rules by law provided, the result of the same shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote, which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons. If any, elected President and Vice-President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

ADMISSION TO GALLERIES DURING ELECTORAL COUNT.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk. The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 520.

House resolution 520.

Resolved, That on Wednesday, the 10th day of February, 1909, the whole of the gallery, except that which is designated as executive, diplomatic, and reporters' galleries, and one section of the southern end of the public gallery, shall be reserved for the use of the families of Senators, Members of the House of Representatives, Delegates, and their visitors. The Doorkeeper shall strictly enforce this order. The Speaker shall issue to each Senator, Member of the House of Representatives, and Delegate two cards of admission, and only persons holding these cards shall be admitted.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolu-

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from West Virginia does that resolution include the Resident Commissioners of Porto Rico and the Philippines.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. It does not include them. Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does not the gentleman believe that these three Resident Commissioners ought themselves to have seats in the galleries?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Wisconsin, I move to amend by adding the words "and Resident Commissioners of Porto Rico and the Philippines."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman modifies the resolution? Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I do. Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolution as modified may be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on Wednesday, the 10th day of February, 1909, the whole of the gallery except that which is designated as executive, diplomatic, and reporters' galleries, and one section of the southern end of the public gallery, shall be reserved for the use of the families of Senators, Members of the House of Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners from Porto Rico and the Philippines and their visitors.

The Doorkeeper shall strictly enforce this order.

The Speaker shall issue to each Senator, Member of the House of Representatives and Delegate and Resident Commissioners from Porto Rico and the Philippines two cards of admission, and only persons holding these cards shall be admitted.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Does that mean that Members

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I can not hear the gentleman. Mr. HAMLIN. If this resolution is adopted, does that mean that Senators and Members will only be permitted two cards of admission to the galleries from the Speaker, regardless of the number of his family? Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. That is the meaning of the resolution. I may as well state, in this connection, that the number to be accommodated with tickets is 490, which, with two tickets to each one, makes 986, and really more than exceeds the capacity of the galleries, if all the galleries were reserved; but by letting a few have seats upon the steps and standing in the doorways, the whole number getting tickets will be accommodated, and by reserving one section, under this resolution, more than was reserved formerly, the crowding will not be so great as heretofore.

Mr. HAMLIN. Do I understand that the cards of admission to Members and Senators will fill the galleries?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Practically that is true, and we have reserved one section in the south end of the gallery not reserved for cards of admission. This, with the reservations which are made now, will fairly well accommodate those who will secure tickets through Senators and Members. It might be well, Mr. Speaker, in this connection to call the attention of Members to the fact that there has heretofore been much complaint on the part of Members that they did not get their tickets. It seems that tickets that have been mailed to Members sometimes have failed to reach the Members, in which case the Member becomes strongly suspicious that those tickets have not been sent to him. I suggest to the Members it would be well if they would cooperate with the officer designated to distribute the tickets, and the result may be more satisfactory.

Mr. SHERMAN. Would it not be advisable for them to call for the tickets personally instead of having them sent by mail?

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. That would be sure to lead to trouble, and I think the officer in charge of the distribution can work out a plan which will be better than the one that has heretofore been designated.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I suggest that the tickets could be delivered to Members at their desks.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. The difficulty is in finding the Members at their desks.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is their own fault, then.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I think the plan suggested is the most practical one for the distribution of the tickets, and, with the cooperation of the Members of the House, I think will be a satisfactory plan.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the reso-

The resolution was agreed to.

TELLERS ON THE PART OF THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER announced as tellers on the part of the House at the counting of the electoral vote the chairman of the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress, Mr. Gaines of West Virginia, and the ranking Member of the minority upon that committee, Mr. RUCKER.

MINERAL SURVEYS.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the 'Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 25396) for relief of applicants for mineral surveys, and that the bill be now considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the following bill, and that the same be considered at this The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the moneys covered into the Treasury from deposits made by individuals to cover covered into the Treasury from deposits made by individuals to cover covered into the Treasury from deposits made by individuals to cover covered into the Treasury from deposits made by individuals to cover covered into the performed and to be performed in the offices of the United States surveyors-general in connection with the survey of mineral lands, any excess in the amount deposited over and above the actual cost of the work performed, including all expenses incident thereto for which the deposits were severally made. Such repayments shall be made to the person or persons who made the several deposits, or to his or their legal representatives, after the completion or abandonment of the work for which the deposits were made, and upon an account certified by the surveyor-general of the district in which the mineral land surveyed, or sought to be surveyed, is situated and approved by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The amendments recommended by the Committee on Mines and Mining were read, as follows:

Page 1, after the word "moneys," in line 4, add the words "heretofore or hereafter."

Page 1, after the words "were severally made," in line 11, add the words "or the whole of any unused deposit; and such sums, as the several cases may be, shall be deemed to be annually and permanently appropriated for that purpose."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman for an explanation of this bill. I see that provides for a payment from a certain fund.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. The moneys that this bill refers to are deposits that are made by private individuals with the United States Surveyor-General to cover work done in that office. As the law now stands the parties are entitled to the refund of any of this money that is not used for that purpose, but the department have held that they have no authority to pay it back. The money is not available in the regular fund of the United States: it belongs to the individuals, and they should get it

Mr. PAYNE. This bill only allows the Government to pay it back after the purpose for which the deposit was made has been accomplished.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Only the surplus.
Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Only the surplus; certainly.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from California whether this bill is retroactive in its

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. It is retroactive to the extent of the money now held there. There are a large number of small deposits that are encumbering the department records. partment can not pay the money back, and there is nothing for which the money can be used.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, for the present I shall object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Subsequently,

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. Engle-BRIGHT] informs the Chair that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] withdraws his objection to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 25396) for the relief of applicants for mineral

Mr. TAWNEY. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What is the bill?
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asked unani->mous consent for the present consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The CLERK. House bill 25396, for the relief of applicants for mineral surveys

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ARMY TENTS FOR NORTH AMERICAN GYMNASTIC UNION.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 226, authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for use at the festival encampment of the North American Gymnastic Union, to be held at Cincinnati, Ohio, in June, 1909. The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to loan, at his discretion, to the executive committee of the North American Gymnastic Union, at Cincinnati, Ohio, having in charge the arrangements for the Thirtieth National Gymnastic Festival of the North American Gymnastic Union, to be held in Cincinnati, Ohio, in June, 1909, 250 tents, with poles, ridges, and pins for each: Provided, That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of such property, the same to be delivered to said committee designated at such time prior to the date of said convention as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and August Herrmann, chairman of said executive committee: And provided further, That the Secretary of War shall, before delivering such property, take from said August Herrmann a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property in good order and condition, and the whole without expense to the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman what is the character of the organization, and what precedents there are for this action—loaning tents to a private organization?

Mr. LONGWORTH. This association is the German Turners' Society of the United States, and the resolution is precisely similar to one introduced last year by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Beall], which passed the House, except that that resolution

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That was for the Elks, Mr. LONGWORTH. That was for the Elks, and it provided for the loan of 2,500 tents. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that since the report of the Committee on Military Affairs I have been advised by gentlemen interested in this convention that the number authorized by this resolution will not be sufficient, and I ask unanimous consent to amend the resolution by striking out the word "two," in line 9, and inserting the word "three;" so that the number of tents will be 350, instead of 250.

Mr. MANN. I simply wish to say this to the gentleman: I member the precedent that the gentleman cites. It was an exremember the precedent that the gentleman cites. remember the precedent that the gentleman cites. It was an ex-ceedingly bad precedent. It is proposed now to follow that with another very bad precedent, loaning a number of tents for pri-vate purposes. While I shall not object to this bill, so long as I am in the House and have the opportunity I shall hereafter object to unanimous consent for the consideration of any like proposition.

Mr. MACON. Unless you change your mind. [Laughter.]
Mr. MANN. And that is something I do not intend to do with reference to this subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio will be considered as agreed to. There was no objection.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

LAND DISTRICT IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 26062) authorizing the creation of a land district in the State of South Dakota, to be known as the Bellefourche land district.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman, Did not Congress, at the last session, provide for a new land district in South Dakota?

Mr. MARTIN. It did.
Mr. MANN. And this is a proposition to provide for an additional land district?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That is going a little rapid, is it not?
Mr. MARTIN. We are making pretty rapid progress out West. Mr. Speaker, I can easily satisfy the gentleman from Illinois that we need this additional land district.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman had better let the bill go over, for it will take some time.

Mr. MARTIN. It ought not to take much time.

Mr. MANN. It will take a pretty full explanation to convince the "gentleman from Illinois" that it is necessary to pass a bill now creating a land office when we have already passed one bill for that purpose within a year. For the present, Mr. Speaker, I object.

JOSIAH H. SHINN.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I call up the resolution, in lieu of House resolution 508, from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 523.

Resolved, That Josiah H. Shinn is hereby appointed as successor to the person named in the resolution adopted by the House February 7, 1900, as special messenger, pursuant to the act approved May 22, 1908.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve a point of order to that reso-

The SPEAKER. It occurs to the Chair that it is a privileged resolution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It may occur to the Chair, but I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this employee is not provided for by law.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. He is provided for by law by resolution passed in 1908.

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds in the report of the committee the following:

The same law also provides that a successor to said employee may be made by the House of Representatives at any time.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. That is in the act of 1908. That law was passed and concurred in by the present Congress.

Mr. FITZERALD. While the Chair has been looking up the question raised, I have received the information which I desired, and I therefore withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

DESERTERS FROM THE NAVAL SERVICE.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, I call up conference report on the bill S. 5473, to authorize the Secretary of the Navy in certain cases to mitigate or remit the loss of rights of citizenship imposed by law from the naval service.

The Clerk read the report and statement as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5473) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy in certain cases to mitigate or remit the loss of rights of citizenship imafter full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House and agree to the same.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Reserving the right to object, I desire to inquire if there is anything in it subject to a point of order? Have the conferees incorporated any new matter?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not answer that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am asking the gentleman from Indiana, chairman of the committee.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; they have not. The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COX of Indiana. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question, whether or not the bill as amended by the Senate does not provide for the purchase of real estate?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; but that amendment of the Senate was not agreed to. It is still open.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The Clerk will read the statement.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16054) to provide for the Thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 21. That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 22, 23, 25; and agree to the same. Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"Strike out the proposed amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "And for the enumeration of institutions, shall include pauers, prisoners, juvenile delinquents, insane, feeble-minded, blind, deaf and dumb, and inmates of benevolent institutions."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 7, lines 11 and 12 of the bill, strike out the words, "and had a product valued at five hundred dollars or more;" and in the Senate amendment strike out the words, "one thousand;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "feeble-minded," in the proposed amendment, insert the following: ", blind, deaf and dumb;" and the Senate agree to the same.

On amendments numbered 24, 26, and 27, the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

EDGAR D. CRUMPACKER, EDWIN C. BURLEIGH, JAMES HAY

Managers on the part of the House of Representatives.

CHESTER I. LONG, EUGENE HALE, S. D. McEnery, Managers on the part of the Senate.

The Clerk read the statement as follows:

The Senate recedes from its amendments Nos. 4 and 21. Amendment No. 4 was the insertion of the word "race" amendment No. 21 was the words "A false test schedule."

Amendment No. 1, from which the House receded, is the inclusion of a geographer in section 3 of the bill. There has been a geographer in the permanent Census Office for some years, but that officer is not provided for in the act creating that office or in any other supplemental statute, but it is provided for in the annual appropriations. It was therefore thought wise to make provision in this law for the geographer.

Amendment No. 2, from which the House conferees recede, requires the appointment of the Assistant Director of the Census to be made by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. This office is of sufficient importance and dignity to justify the regular constitutional method of appointment.

Amendment No. 3, to which the House conferees agreed, raises the salary of the geographer from $2,750 to $3,000. This was done upon the advice of the Director of the Census, who said the geographer was one of the most important officers in the bureau, and during the temporary period the work of that officer was exceptionally arduous.

Amendment No. 5, which the House conferees agreed to, provides that in the population schedule an inquiry shall be made as to whether the inhabitant is an employer or an employee.

Amendment No. 6 is the changing of "and" to "or.

Amendments Nos. 8, 9, and 10 are changes in the phrase-ology, but do not affect the import or effect of the text.

Amendments Nos. 12 and 13 are mere matters of phraseology that do not affect the substance of the bill.

Amendment No. 14 requires the investigation and report respecting the production of turpentine and rosin. This amendment was put in the bill with the consent of the Director of the Census, who said the investigation could be made with but little additional expense; that in former censuses inquiries as to the production of turpentine and rosin had been made.

Amendment No. 15, to which the House conferees agreed, provides for the striking out of the words "one year" and inserting the words "six months." This was made necessary because of the date of the probable passage of the bill. It would be impossible to designate the supervisors for the next census within at least one year of the time fixed for the date of the commencement of the enumeration.

Amendment No. 16, to which the House conferees agreed, provides that the Director of the Census need not designate supervisors for Alaska and the Hawaiian Islands, but in lieu thereof may employ special agents to take the census of those territories, in his discretion.

Amendment No. 17, to which the House conferees agreed, provides for a change of the basis of the pay of supervisors. The bill as it passed the House contained somewhat of a complicated scheme for fixing the pay of supervisors, and it provided for a minimum compensation of twelve hundred dollars. The Senate amendment strikes out the House provision and substitutes a provision to the effect that the pay of supervisors shall be fif-teen hundred dollars and, in addition, one dollar for each thousand population in their respective districts. According to the scheme contained in the House provision, it was estimated that not more than four or five supervisors in the entire country would receive the minimum compensation, and the change made by the Senate amendment will add little or nothing to the aggregate expense of the supervisors. It is a simpler and, perhaps, a juster method of fixing the pay of those officers.

Amendment No. 18, agreed to by the House conferees, provides for striking out a provision in the bill limiting enumerators' districts so as to include not to exceed 2,000 inhabitants. The Twelfth Census bill fixed a limitation of 4,000. It was thought better to leave the question of convenient districts to the discretion of the Director of the Census.

Amendment No. 19, to which the House conferees agreed, provides that the Director of the Census may fix a mixed rate of pay for the enumerators, consisting of an allowance of fees and also an additional per diem allowance of not more than $2 a day where conditions justify it. The House provision fixed a scheme of pay on the fee basis and then provided that where the Director of the Census deemed such compensation insufficient he might authorize a per diem allowance. The amendment gives him authority to fix a mixed compensation of fees and per diem.

Amendment No. 22, which was agreed to by the House conferees, is a mere elaboration of the House provision, so as to make its purpose more clear.

Amendment No. 23, which was agreed to by the House conferees, adds the word "manuscripts" to the list of newspapers and periodicals that the Director of the Census is authorized to purchase.

Amendment No. 25, which was agreed to by the House conferees, is the addition of the words "or agriculture" after the word "population." The effect of this amendment is to authorize the Director of the Census to give out certain information respecting agricultural returns as well as population returns upon the written request of the governor of any State or Territory or of any court of record.

Senate amendment No. 7 provided for the separate enumeration of persons under 18 years of age who are ruptured, crippled, or deformed; also the enumeration of cases of intermarriage between white persons and persons of either whole or of partial negro blood, specifying whether the husband or wife is of negro blood; also that the enumeration of institutions shall include paupers, prisoners, juvenile delinquents, insane, feeble-minded, and inmates of benevolent institutions. This amendment was agreed to with an amendment providing for striking out the entire Senate amendment and substituting therefor the following language: "and for the enumeration of institutions shall include paupers, prisoners, juvenile delinquents, insane, feeble-minded, blind, deaf and dumb, and inmates of benevolent institutions."

Amendment No. 11 was agreed to by the House conferees with the following amendment: Strike out the words "and had a product valued at $500 or more," and also strike out "one thousand," the words inserted by the Senate. The amendment has no material significance.

Senate amendment No. 20 was agreed to with the following amendment: Add, after the word "feeble-minded," "blind, deaf and dumb."

The committee on conference were unable to agree on amendments Nos. 24, 26, and 27. Amendment 24 gives authority to the Director of the Census to contract for printing and binding for the Census Office under certain conditions with private establishments on the principle of competition.

Amendment No. 26 authorizes the Director of the Census, under the supervision of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, to purchase or acquire by condemnation the real estate and building now occupied by the Census Office and the lot adjoining the same. The amendment also authorizes the Director of the Census, under the supervision of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, to construct a building upon the additional land purchased for the use of the Census Office.

Amendment No. 27 has reference simply to the renumbering of the sections of the bill.

EDGAR D. CRUMPACKER, EDWIN C. BURLEIGH, JAMES HAY.

Managers on the part of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the conference report be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that the conference report be agreed to.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana what will become of amendments 24, 26, and 27?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will say that agreeing to the conference report leaves these amendments still open, subject to be disposed of by the House.

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio for a question.

Mr. KEIFER. I notice in amendment 5, on page 6, these words, following the word "occupation": "

Whether or not employer or employee.

I understand that that is inserted there in lieu of the parts agreed to be struck out, viz, amendment 8, on the same page, which reads thus:

All persons engaged in agricultural pursuits.

I also understand that this substitute was made because it is proper to put it in under the schedule of population. I have no objection to the change, but I would like to know whether those in charge of the bill believe that they will accomplish the object of the provision struck out, No. 8, the object being by it to get in the next census a report showing the number of people engaged in agricultural pursuits in the United States.

engaged in agricultural pursuits in the United States.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, it was the belief of the conferees that the amendments would accomplish the same purpose, and the Director of the Census attended the first meeting of the conferees and said he thought the language was better; that the Twelfth Census already had material, if it had been tabulated, to accomplish the purpose the gentleman desired; and he said under this provision the reports would show the percentage of population engaged in agricultural pursuits as distinguished from the population engaged in other pursuits or in no pursuits at all.

in no pursuits at all.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I understand the purpose of making this amendment. I do not understand that it will accomplish the purpose intended at all, except to get a report in the next census of those engaged in the pursuit of agriculture in the capacity of "employer or employee," and those who own cultivated lands who might have other occupations, but who would be, through their ownership, interested in agriculture, are not to be reported under the provision at all.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. They have always been reported; they were in the schedules of the Twelfth Census, but they have not been tabulated separately.

Mr. KEIFER. I beg the gentleman's pardon, unless it be, as he stated a moment ago, that they had such statistics in the Census Bureau, but have never been able in the history of the United States to work them out and answer the question that I desire to have answered.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Begging the gentleman's pardon, no such statement was made. It is not a question of ability. There might be numerous classifications of population made from the schedules that have not been tabulated. These classifications have not been made, but can be from the schedules already in the office; but the Director of the Census announced this language was sufficient, and that the Census Office would make that classification, because the importance of it was impressed upon him in the conference and in the debate in the House before. He understood and read over carefully the debates, and had in mind his correspondence with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer], and I think appreciates the importance of making that kind of a classification, and said this language would cover the subject fully. Therefore we agreed to the report.

Mr. KEIFER. I only desire to say, in justice to the Director of the Census, that he has said the same thing to me. My fear is that the language used, "employer and employee," is not broad enough to cover all persons engaged in agriculture. I only want to add that for years, extending back nearly forty, I have been inquiring of the Census Bureau of this country to get an answer to the question as to what per cent of the people of the United States were engaged in agriculture in this country, but for some reason or other they have never been able to accurately answer it—only by an estimate—and whether the data is in the Census Bureau or not it has never been worked out

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice in amendment No. 17 the conferees agree to the change of the basis of computation for salaries of the supervisors.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to inquire whether the arrangement as agreed upon is for an annual salary or for his total salary while engaged in that special work?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is compensation for the entire service.

Mr. STAFFORD. How long is it expected that the supervisor will be engaged in the performance of this work?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, perhaps from five to ten months, off and on.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the superior advantage of the plan as accepted by the conferees over that which was contained in the House bill?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, it is not so involved. The gentle-man doubtless has read the House bill scheme, and will notice that it is rather complex and a little difficult to work out, and the results are substantially the same. The Senate plan raises the minimum pay, and the Director of the Census made an estimate, from which he reached the conclusion that it would not increase the pay of more than five or six at the outside of the supervisors, because there were not more than that many who would receive the minimum pay under the House plan, and the result would be substantially the same.

Mr. STAFFORD. What will be the population of the district over which the supervisor will have charge, generally speaking?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, throughout the country, as a general rule, there will be a supervisor for each congressional The district which I have the honor to represent,

I think, has about 260,000 population—
Mr. STAFFORD. Is it intended to follow absolutely the boundary lines of the congressional district in the appointment of supervisors of the census?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The law says that the director shall appoint a supervisor for each congressional district as far as it is practicable to do so. There are 330 supervisors provided for, but it has been the custom in the State of Massachusetts to appoint only one supervisor for that entire State, one for the State of Connecticut, one for the city of New York, one for the city of Brooklyn, and one for each of the other great cities, so that outside of the great cities there will be one supervisor for each congressional district.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman, Are the conferees still considering amendment numbered 24?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; that was disagreed to. The House will have that amendment up for discussion when we dispose of the conference report.

Mr. COLE. Was there any provision for the expenses of travel of these supervisors while away from home?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; for the supervisors.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; I yield for a question. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I could not hear over here what the gentleman from Indiana was saying. Did the gentleman from Indiana say that there was to be one supervisor for every congressional district throughout the country?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I did not. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. How are the supervisors apportioned in the bill?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. As I said, but one supervisor will be appointed for the entire city of New York, one for the State of Massachusetts, and only one for the State of Connecticut, one for the city of Brooklyn, one each for the large cities containing more than one congressional district. has been the plan for a number of years. I now ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Will the gentleman inform us why there should be one supervisor in Massachusetts, and one in Connecticut, and two for States like Rhode Island, Vermont, New Hampshire, Maine, and other small States?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, that has been the custom from time immemorial. Massachusetts has a superintendent of census, who has always acted as supervisor, and has conducted the taking of the federal census, and he has the mechanism to do it, and it has been found the best results come from that practice.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DAWSON. Does the adoption of the motion of the gentleman from Indiana carry with it a further disagreement to those items which have not been agreed to?

The SPEAKER. There will be items not agreed to which will be subject to the action of the House.

The question was taken, and the conference report was

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to amendment numbered 24.
Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, let us have the amendment reported, so we can understand what it is.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House do insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 24, and the Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in Senate amendment numbered 24.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the House do recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 24 and concur therein, which motion takes precedence over the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, and the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, line 12, after the word "reports," insert:
"Provided, That whenever in the opinion of the Director of the Census the Public Printer does not produce the printing and binding required under the provisions of this act with sufficient promptness, or whenever said printing and binding are not produced by the Public Printer in a manner satisfactory to the Director of the Census in quality or price, said Director is hereby authorized to contract with private parties for printing and binding after due competition."

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I presume I am entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. While the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Tawney] takes precedence of the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Crumpacker], yet the control of the floor remains with the gentleman having charge of the bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, this is nothing more nor less than a plain, practical business proposition. The bill as it passed the House required the printing of the Thirteenth Census reports to be done in the Government Printing Office. Now, the Senate has amended the House provision in this respect, giving to the Director of the Census, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, the authority to contract for this printing with outside concerns, if in his judgment it would expedite the printing, or if the printing was unsatisfactory for any reason, including the cost, in the Government Printing Office.

In the consideration of the estimates of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriations bill this question of the cost of the printing of the next census was considered. The committee at that time was informed by the Director of the Census that the Cuban census which we have taken is now being printed—and one of the volumes I hold in my hand—by a private concern in the State of Vermont.

This Cuban census report could not have been printed in the Government Printing Office for the reason that the law does not authorize any printing in the Government Printing Office unless it is done for the Government of the United States. It therefore afforded the Director of the Census an opportunity to ascertain the difference between the cost of printing our next census in the Printing Office and the cost of doing that work with some outside company. And when before the committee in the Senate in the consideration of this bill the Director of the Census, in a letter addressed to a Senator on this subject, pointed out the advantage it would be to the Government of the United States if this discretion were vested in him by law, giving-him the discretionary power of having this work done in the Government Printing Office or having it done by outside printing companies. In this letter he says:

companies. In this letter he says:

JANUARY 8, 1909.

Dear Senator Long: In response to your letter, I am glad to define the attitude of the Census Office toward the amendment of the Senate committee to the pending Thirteenth Census bill with reference to the printing (sec. 28).

This question was raised before the committee purely as a business matter, and not in any antagonism or hostility to the Government Printing Office, with which official relations of the pleasantest character, based upon mutual aid, have always been maintained. It was the purpose when this bill was originally framed a year ago to make exclusive use of the printing facilities of the government office. At the suggestion of the director, the section which authorized an independent census printing plant at the Eleventh and Twelfth censuses was omitted from the bill. The task of organizing and conducting a printing office ought not to be superimposed upon that of taking a decennial census. Moreover, in view of the satisfactory service of the Government Printing Office at the Twelfth Census, it did not seem to be recessary.

On the basis of the printing costs of that census, I estimated a year ago an expenditure of $500,000 for the printing of the Thirteenth Census, $20,000 less than its cost at the Twelfth. This estimate was based upon the price for tabular matter then charged at the Government Printing Office, which was regarded as reasonably satisfactory. Shortly after the estimate was submitted to Congress, rapid and unforseen changes took place in the Printing Office. With the change in the Government Printer, the price schedules have also been changed, and the scale prevailing when the estimate was made was withdrawn without notice or explanation to the Census Office. The net advance in charges for tabular matter approximates 50 per cent; and, moreover, an opinion has been sought from the Comptroller of the Treasury, under which it is practically impossible to return to the former prices. The difference between the printing costs of the Census in a most unfortunate position, and it becomes his duty to call the attention of Congress to the fact that those in charge of the next census can not justly be held responsible for this large increase in an expenditure over which they can exercise no control whatever.

These were the circumstances under which there was suggested, for the consideration of the Census Committee, the alternative proposition which now appears in the bill. It was suggested in the belief that it will afford a safe and businesslike method by which this particular item of expense can be held in check, and as preferable to the establishment of an independent census-printing plant. It is wholly a business proposition, the responsibility for determining which must rest with Congress.

If the provision should receive the approval of Congress, it should be properly safeguarded; and the determination of the question whether an exigency had arisen requiring resort to outside printing facilities might well be left to the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, which has general jurisdiction over the government printing.

In addition to the question of cost, there is also the very important question of expedition. The pending bill requires that the Thirteenth Census shall be compiled and published within two years from the date of the enumeration. Here, again, the matter is entirely beyond the control of the director, unless some latitude is given. The copy for the current Census report upon the annual mortality statistics, almost entirely tabular matter, consisting of over 500 pages, was sent to the Public Printer more than one month ago, and the office is still awaiting the proofs for some of this report. It has been explained, in response to frequent inquiry, that the Printing Office is much crowded with tabular matter, and that the Census Office must take its turn with the rest, and that delays, especially when Congress is in session, are inequirally publication within two years. Recessarily the printing of the final volumes must be

MEMORANDUM.

JANUARY 26, 1909.

In a letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee on the Census of the Senate, dated January 8, 1909, the Director of the Census stated that the net advance in charges for tabular printed matter approximates 50 per cent. The explanation of this statement is as follows:

stated that the net advance in charges for tabular printed matter approximates 50 per cent. The explanation of this statement is as follows:

During the Twelfth Census the scale which had been in force for years in the Printing Office, of 70 cents per hour or 70 cents per thousand ems, was applied to the Census Office. The tabular matter produced by the Printing Office was set on time—that is, the men who set it were paid by the hour—but when the Printing Office charged the census they measured it up with a type measure so that a census page area contained exactly 20,000 ems, double price, 6-point matter, which at 70 cents amounted to $14 a page uniformly for all census tabular matter. As many of these pages take but little time to set, and few of them more than ten or twelve hours, it is obvious that even at 70 cents an hour, the regular price for time work, there was a great margin of what is known as "fat," which probably approximated $50,000 of really improper charge, which was secured by the Printing Office by this method of charge. The injustice of performing work in one way and charging for it in another way, resulting in a heavy surplus charge, was emphatically stated several times to Mr. Stillings during his incumbency of the Public Printership. He admitted the injustice of it, and made a careful investigation and found that the Printing Office was overcharging the census to the extent of at least $3 a page. Accordingly, toward the close of the fiscal year 1907, he reduced the price to $11 a page and gave the census a rebate amounting to approximately $8,000 for that fiscal year. This rate remained in force until Mr. Stillings's resignation. While it was in force the estimate to which the director refers was made up.

Toward the close of Mr. Stillings' administration he changed his cost accounting and established a new system, which readjusted and in effect demoralized the scale charged to the various departments, so that none of them knew where they stood, most of the items being advanced. When the ch

Upon the appointment of Mr. Leech, he almost immediately took up the question of the scale and made the 80-cent rate permanent, with minor adjustments of the other items in the scale—presswork, binding, etc.—which he declined to make public to the departments.

This is the explanation of the director's statement of a 50 per cent increase in tabular composition, since by the scale now in force the Census Office pays $16 a page for tabular composition as compared with a rate of $11 a page granted the census by the previous Public Printer. The tabular pages required at the Twelfth Census were not less than 8,000, consequently the difference in cost in this item alone, if the number of tabular pages were the same at the Thirteenth Census as at the Twelfth, would amount to $40,000. It must be remembered, however, that the Twelfth Census tabular matter was set entirely by hand. Since that time machines have been introduced in the Printing Office, which, if they have any value at all, should mean material reduction in cost, and the price of tabular matter, instead of advancing to $16, ought not to exceed $10 a page at most liberal figure.

It is the opinion of some experts, and even of some persons connected with the Printing Office, that the cost of machine tabular composition contained in a census page should not exceed $8 a page. Probably any private contractor would be glad to produce the work at that price, and would make a good margin of profit.

The cost of folding and binding of books in the Government Printing Office is in general from 50 to 100 per cent higher than the price for similar work charged by private concerns.

Attention is called to the fact that in making the rate of 80 cents permanent, Public Printer Leech submitted the question of the propriety of making special prices, such as the $11 rate to the census, granted by Public Printer Stillings, to the comptroller for consideration and decision. The comptroller ruled in effect that no special price could be made, but that the departments should be charged upon a uniform basis.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. OLMSTED]. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask for five minutes more.
Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota five minutes additional time.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is upon the ground, Mr. Speaker, of the decreased cost to the Government of the United States of printing the census, and also in the interest of greater expedition and more certainty as to the time when this work can be completed, that the Director of the Census asks that this discretion be granted to him. I think Congress ought to give it, in view of the fact that the difference between the cost of printing the report of the Cuban census in the Government Printing Office and the cost of printing the same census report by a private corporation aggregates 55 per cent. It seems to me authority should be given the Director of the Census as proposed in the Senate amendment so that he may, if he can, save this amount to the Government.

Mr. BONYNGE. Fifty-five per cent less? Mr. TAWNEY. Fifty-five per cent less, on account of the work being done outside, than it would have cost if that work had been done in the Government Printing Office. I have a copy of a letter from the chief clerk of the Census Bureau, addressed to the chairman of the Committee on the Census in the Senate, Senator Long, which is as follows:

JANUARY 21, 1909.

Hon. Chester I. Long.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Senatore Long: The Washington Post of yesterday morning contained an attack upon the statements which I made before the Senate Committee on the Census concerning the cost of the Cuban census report. The substance of this attack was that the report had cost about $20,000; that it had required the detail of two men from Washington to Vermont for a considerable period, at an expense of $1,300; and that the whole operation was much more expensive than if the work had been performed in the Government Printing Office.

The facts as testified to before your committee are not altered by the attack above mentioned. The accounts, which have been received since my testimony, vary a few dollars from the estimated cost of the report. All the bills for this report are now paid except for the binding, which is in progress in New York; hence the final cost can vary little, if at all, from the following figure:

"Twenty thousand copies, 710 pages, 42 inserts (illustrations and maps), cover stamped in two colors, $11,752.57."

Concerning the detail of two men to Vermont, it is a fact that two men were detailed to Vermont to read proof. The services of these two employees, paid by the Cuban Government, would have been absolutely necessary in Washington had the book been made even inside of the Census Office. Therefore this item of clerical assistance is not included either in the cost of the work as produced by private contractors or in the estimated cost if produced by the Government Printing Office. It is a fact that the traveling expenses and the per diem allowance, amounting to approximately $500, might be regarded as an extra charge. There are also some extra freight charges, for which I have not received the bills, amounting perhaps to $100, a total to be added to the cost of perhaps $600.

In my testimony before the committee I referred only to the Cuban census report. There is, in addition, an abstract of this census now of perhaps $600.

In my testimony before the committee I referred only to the Cuban census report. There is, in addition, an abstract of this census now in process of production. The composition and presswork upon this book are being produced by the Lyons Printing Company, of Lyons, N. Y., and the binding will be done by the J. F. Tapley Company, of New York City, who bound the report. As this volume is in English, the proof reading simple, and the number of pages but 280, no detail was required to the producing office. The work is proceeding rapidly and smoothly.

The cost, according to the estimates made and approved by the Cuban Government, will be $2,787.57 for an edition of 10,000 copies, consisting of 280 pages, 22 illustrations, with cloth binding, stamped in brown ink from an original design. The cost of this book if produced in the Government Printing Office, according to the informal estimates obtained, would be $4,904.27.

For these two publications the actual cost and the charge if produced in the Government Printing Office may be stated as follows:

	Actual cost, private con- tractors.	Estimated cost, Government Printing Office.
Cuban Census Report	$11,752.57 -2,787.57	$17,750.52 4,904.27
Total	14,540.14	22,654.79

From this you will perceive that a total expenditure of $14,540.14 to private contractors has produced work of an entirely satisfactory, and, indeed, excellent character, which would have cost $22,654.79 if produced in the Government Printing Office, an excess of 55 per cent.

I respectfully refer you again to my statement made before the committee, that I was not conducting an attack, in any sense, on the Government Printing Office, but that as these facts had developed it seemed to be the duty of the Census Office to call them to your attention as a matter of proper administration. The Director of the Census has already expressed to you his views upon this subject, and his desire to avoid controversy in connection with the subject of census printing.

Very truly, yours, Very truly, yours,

W. S. ROSSITER, Chief Clerk.

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to ask you a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield to the gentleman on my left.
Mr. BARNHART. Do I understand the gentleman to state that the expense at the Printing Office had increased 50 per

Mr. TAWNEY. Cost; not expense. The cost of printing tabular work has been increased 50 per cent.

Mr. BARNHART. Since when? Mr. TAWNEY. Within the last six months.

Mr. BARNHART. On what basis do they get that?

TAWNEY. Simply, when Mr. Leech came into the Printing Office as Public Printer he advanced this cost, and up to this time the Committee on Appropriations have not been able to ascertain, as the Public Printer has not been before the Committee, but heads of the several departments have been before the committee asking for deficiency appropriations in their printing appropriations on account of this advance in the cost of tabular work, and also in the cost of other printing.

Mr. BARNHART. Why has not the Public Printer been called over?

Mr. TAWNEY. The cost of the other printing has been increased 20 per cent.

Mr. BARNHART. I am a printer, and I know there has not been such general increase in wages in this country during that Mr. TAWNEY. The rate, or cost of printing, for the departments is fixed arbitrarily by the Public Printer. The Secretary of the Interior, who had a deficiency estimate for public printing, stated to the committee that this advance was made by the Public Printer, and as a result of that advance their printing appropriation was insufficient to meet the requirements of the service for the remainder of the fiscal year. In the letter sent to Senator Lodge by the Director of the Census he directly states that there was no explanation given of this increase in the cost. The matter of the cost of printing for the departments in the Government Printing Office is absolutely under the control of the Public Printer.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman permit me a moment?

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.
Mr. LIVINGSTON. When the bill referred to by the gentleman [Mr. Tawney] came before the Appropriations Committee, Mr. Leech had resigned and the present incumbent knew nothing about this increase nor the scale; and your committee did not get it, and therefore can not answer the question of the gentleman on my right.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question ?

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand from the statement you have recently read, you have estimates of the cost of printing tabular statements such as issued by the Ceusus Bureau. Now, I want to know who made that estimate?

Mr. TAWNEY. The Director of the Census made that estimate a year ago upon estimates made to him by the then Public Printer, Mr. Stillings. Since then the cost was increased by his successor to such an extent that it would require the ap propriation of a great deal more money for the printing of the census reports than the amount originally estimated.

Let me call attention to the fact that this provision of the Senate does not take out of the Government Printing Office the printing of the Thirteenth Census reports. It leaves it entirely within the discretion of the Director of the Census, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor; and if this provision is not inserted in this bill, he will be compelled to have the census reports printed at the Government Printing Office regardless of cost and regardless of time or anything else.

Mr. BARNHART. You say this will leave it entirely to the discretion of the Director of the Census?

Mr. TAWNEY. Subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. BARNHART. Will he have the same power to increase the price for this work that the Public Printer has?

Mr. TAWNEY. No. It is to be done by competition. If it is done by outside parties, it is after due competition.

Mr. DAWSON. About these comparative figures for the printing of the Cuban census, may I ask the gentleman whether they are on the theory of completed work in the Government Printing Office, or simply as the bid of a private concern; and that after the private concern has set up this Cuban census, it comes in with a large additional charge for correction?

Mr. TAWNEY. No, sir; it is not. The Cuban census is being printed by a private concern after the Director of the Census invited bids or proposals for that printing. A contract was let after competitive bids had been submitted, and it includes every item of expense, except the mere matter of proof reading, which the Census Office was required to do in any event.

The only additional expense is the cost of the transportation of the two proof readers from Washington to the place where the work is being done, and that expense will not exceed $500.

[The time of Mr. Tawney having expired, Mr. Chumpacker yielded to him five minutes more.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if in the estimate of cost at the Government Printing Office any account has been taken of the fact that rents are not paid? And is there any regard paid to the losses by depreciation of machinery?

Mr. TAWNEY. The fact that the Government Printing Office pays no rent or insurance or that there is depreciation in the plant as well as in the equipment is not considered in the estimate submitted by the Public Printer.

Mr. HEPBURN. If it were, then the disparity of cost in the government establishment and in the private establishment would be still greater.

Mr. TAWNEY. Still greater.
Mr. HEPBURN. Now I want to ask the gentleman if he does not know that the reason why this extraordinary cost in the Government Printing Office is necessary is because the Government Printing Office is run by a labor union establishment?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, I do not know that the Government Printing Office is run by a labor union, but I believe from testimony that has been presented to the Committee on Appropriations with respect to appropriations for public printing that there are organizations that attempt to control arbitrarily the price paid for the services rendered to the Government in that institution; and I want to say further that it is due to these demands, coming from whatever source they may, as I am informed, that the Public Printer, in order to do the work of the departments, was obliged to advance the cost of tabular printing 50 per cent, and also advance the cost of other printing 20 per cent, as I am informed.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Supposing this Senate amendment is adopted, can the gentleman from Minnesota inform the House as to how much that would save the Government in the printing for the Thirteenth Census?

Mr. TAWNEY. The estimate originally submitted by the Director of the Census, based upon the estimate of Mr. Stillings a year ago for the printing of the Thirteenth Census, was $800,-000. Of course you can not determine with certainty the exact cost of printing the reports of our next census; but based upon the difference between the cost of printing the Cuban census in the Government Printing Office and the cost of doing that same work in a private printing office, being 55 per cent, the gentleman can himself arrive at what the saving would be to the Government to have this work done by a private concern, if it becomes necessary, by reason of the cost, or for any other reason.

I want to say, further, Mr. Speaker, that under normal conditions, we are now told by the Director of the Census, that the cost of printing will be nearer $1,000,000 than $800,000, because there will be so much more tabular work done, there are so many more investigations covered by the coming census than there have been in the past.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I understand the gentleman from Minnesota to assert, or at least to intimate, that employees in the Government Printing Office are responsible for the exorbitant price demanded for the printing of the census, or for printing in the Government Printing Office.

Mr. TAWNEY. I did not so state.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, that was the intimation.

Now, how could any employee of that office be benefited by this exorbitant price, they being paid, as I understand it, under an appropriation which expressly provides what each shall receive?

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no; the appropriation for that entire service up to the present time is in a lump sum. We hope at this session of Congress to segregate the administrative force from that lump-sum appropriation and provide specifically for their compensation, but the operative force is paid entirely out of a large lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is not there an amount specified in the law somewhere which these people shall be paid?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is entirely within the discretion of the Public Printer, under the law. His limitation is the amount of money appropriated for the service.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. He can pay wages to employees at his discretion in any sum?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes. Mr. LANDIS. I wish to say to the gentleman that the compensation per hour is fixed by law.

Mr. TAWNEY. While the compensation fixed by law is by the hour, it does not control the compensation for piecework; that can be increased.

Mr. LANDIS. I will say to the gentleman that there is no piecework done in connection with this work in the Government Printing Office.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize this fact: Members of the House need not be frightened on account of the Government Printing Office not having work enough to do during the time we are preparing and printing reports of the next census. That office will have all the work it can do, and every man now employed there will be employed there hereafter whether this provision goes through or not. There is therefore no excuse for any man voting against this proposition on the ground that labor organizations are in any way concerned. Because if this work goes to outside concerns, then the laboring men outside of the employment of the Government Printing Office will get the benefit of it, and the laboring men who are in the Government Printing Office will continue their employment at the higher rate of wages they are now receiving. It is purely a matter of practical business common sense.

Here is a special service. This is not an annual service, but a special service, involving the expenditure of large sums of money. By authorizing the Director of the Census to have this work done by an outside concern, if in his discretion it is wise to have it done thus, we will save to the Government of the United States half the amount otherwise expended. can not see why any Member of Congress should hesitate in giving this discretion to the Director of the Census. The government interest is the only interest concerned. Labor in any event will get the benefit whether inside or outside the government service.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I feel it my duty now to explain to the House the attitude of the House conferees on this question. Amendment No. 24 was not discussed in conference at all; no attempt was made to agree upon it because, in asking and obtaining unanimous consent from the House to disagree to the Senate amendment and put the bill into conference, I stated to the House that no agreement would be made upon amendment No. 24 or amendment No. 26, this one and the building proposition. The Senate conferees knew of the statement I had made, having read it in the RECORD, and agreed that these two propositions could not be considered in conference.

Therefore the House conferees, in their parliamentary atti-tude, I presume, are against the Senate amendment; but perhaps only in their parliamentary attitude do they occupy that position. My position is absolutely neutral. I want the House to determine this question upon its merits.

The Director of the Census asked the Senate to incorporate this provision in the bill. He did not ask for it when the bill was being prepared by the House Census Committee, because the scale of prices the Census Office had from the Public Printer's office was entirely satisfactory; that for ten or twelve years the Census Office had obtained reasonable and satisfactory rates from the Printing Office; that all the reports and, in fact, all the printing for the Twelfth Census, except what was done in the office itself, and all of the special reports of the Bureau of Census had been done by the Public Printer at reasonable rates; and making his estimate for the cost of the Thirteenth Census, the director estimated the cost of printing to be sume, has now entirely passed away.

$800,000, based upon the rates theretofore given. After the House bill had been reported to the House and a couple of days had been devoted to its consideration, the then Public Printer increased the rates of tabular matter about 50 per cent, and the director said if he was required to pay the higher rates the expense for printing the reports of the Thirteenth Census would be $1,200,000 instead of $800,000.

Mr. BARNHART. I understood my colleague [Mr. Landis] to say that these prices in the Printing Office are fixed by law. Then, by what authority was the expense in printing increased 50 per cent?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The price that the Public Printer charges other departments is not fixed by law. He bases his charges upon such estimates as he makes, and may do it in an arbitrary way, and the law does not provide any basis for the estimates. He did not consult the Director of the Census at all, but simply withdrew the former standing scale of prices and substituted another that increased tabular work 50 per cent.

Mr. BARNHART. Now, the report is current among the printers all over the country that the wages have been increased to printers who do tabular work so that they are able to earn from $5 to $12 per day. I am trying to learn whether or not it is authorized by law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know; the law fixes the rate per hour, and if they have a piecework system in the Public Printing Office it may be changed. We do not charge that the Public Printer has been paying undue prices to the employees of that office.

He may have fixed the price unduly high in order that his office may make some profit out of it, and thereby increase his appropriations, the annual fund for the benefit of the office. The attitude of the Director of the Census is this: Having made his estimate to Congress, based on his former scale of prices, he wants Congress to know the change in the situation, and if Congress decides that he must still have the reports of the Thirteenth Census printed by the Public Printer without regard to the question of price, then let Congress take the responsibility, and when appropriations come in in the future of largely increased amounts for public printing, Congress will understand the reason for it. The Director of the Census has no personal interest to serve, and no official interest except to be placed in the right attitude before Congress. Mr. Donnelly, the present Public Printer, has recently submitted prices to the Director of the Census which the Director says are entirely reasonable and fair, and if that scale of prices continues he will not think of going outside of the Public Printer's office to have a page of printing done; but these prices are subject to change at the arbitrary will or caprice, if you will, of the Public Printer, and the Census Office may be held up at any time in the future by a new scale of prices.

Mr. DAWSON. I would like to ask the gentleman a ques-Is it not a matter of fact that the foundation for this amendment, which was put in by the Senate, was the unsettled condition of affairs in the Public Printing Office by reason of the rapid changes in Public Printers?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; it was on account of the arbitrary, and the Director of the Census believes, unreasonable advance in the rate charged for printing tabular matter. That was the reason for it, and the object of incorporating this provision in the bill was to give the Director of the Census a sort of leverage that he might use in order to secure a reasonable rate from the Public Printer's office. If Mr. Donnelly continues in the service, I have no doubt that the rates will be entirely reasonable, and I have no sort of doubt that every bit of printing will be done in the Government Printing Office.

Mr. DAWSON. If the gentleman will permit me, in the hearings before the Senate committee, Mr. Rossiter, in his testimony, stated as a reason for this amendment, "the troubles which had come on in such rapid succession in the Printing Office early last winter." Then he goes on to state that—

Office early last winter." Then he goes on to state that—The director planned, as we approached the Thirteenth Census, to avoid asking for the independent office which had been allowed in the two previous acts, and to continue to depend entirely upon the Government Printing Office for census printing and binding. This was because, as suggested, the service had been excellent at the Twelfth Census, and also because the prices which were being quoted at that time by a special arrangement with the then Public Printer, Mr. Stillings, were fairly reasonable. This was at the time we were preparing the first draft of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Of this bill?
Mr. ROSSITER. Yes, sir; of this bill, prior to the troubles which came on in such rapid succession in the Printing Office early last winter. In consequence this bill has come to you placing the Census Office in a position having less control over its printing than it had at either of the two previous censuses.

two previous censuse

It seems to me that the testimony of Mr. Rossiter clearly indicates that the reason for this provision in the bill was the unsettled condition of affairs in the Printing Office, which, I asMr. TAWNEY. How does the gentleman know that it has entirely passed away? Mr. CRUMPACKER. The rapid changes would not make any difference to the Director of the Census, even if they have a new Public Printer every week, provided he gets a reasonable price. It was the arbitrary increase in the rates-about 50 per centthat inspired this amendment.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from

Kentucky

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Dawson] suggests that the recent troubles in the Printing Office and the change of Public Printers was the source of this controversy about excessive rates for census printing. These excessive charges were made against the census printing fund long before the troubles arose to which the gentleman from Iowa refers. recall one instance, something like two years ago, in which the Public Printer gave the Census Office a rebate amounting, approximately, to $8,000, reimbursing the census printing fund for excessive charges against it in the fiscal year 1907.

Gentlemen do not seem to understand the source of these excessive charges to which reference has been made in this debate. It was not due to an increase in the rates paid the employees, but to the method of cost accounting in the Government Print-

The census tabular matter was set on a time basis—that is, the men who did the setting were paid by the hour—but the charge against the census printing fund was made at so much per thousand ems, which amounted to $14 a page, and they measured each page with a type measure and estimated it on that basis regardless of the number of hours it took to set each page, which, of course, varied according to the material. When the attention of the Public Printer was called to this he allowed the rebate to which I have referred and reduced the price to $11 a page. This was changed again, however, later on, and a scale was adopted as a result of which the Census Office is now paying $16 a page for tabular matter instead of $11, which it was paying when the director made his estimate of $800,000 for the Thirteenth Census printing.

They now have machines for the setting of tabular matter, and it is estimated that instead of costing $16 a page it should not now exceed more than $10 a page, and some experts even estimate it as low as $8 a page.

The Government Printing Office rates are undeniably much higher now for such work than is charged by private parties, and I think the Senate amendment ought to be adopted, even though the director does not go outside for the printing, so that the alternative which the amendment gives him will enable him to get the work done expeditiously and at reasonable rates in the Government Printing Office, which he might not be able to do if he had no alternative.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I shall retain the floor. I want to say that the law ought to require the Public Printer to print matter for other branches of the service here at actual cost, and then there would be some basis for computation. It does not now, and it enables the Public Printer, if he sees fit, to add 10 or 20 or even 50 per cent above actual cost, and have that much more money to spend in the administration of his bureau without that control and scrutiny which Congress puts upon appropriations that it makes directly. There is one of the vices in the business.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Speaker, I simply want to add that in my capacity as a member of the Committee on the Census I took the trouble to inquire about this printing from the Public Printer, and he informs me that he will be in a position to do all of this work for the census as cheap as any first-class onice in the country.

Mr. TAWNEY. In that case he will have the opportunity of doing it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to Mr. Chemfacker. Air. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Landis].

Mr. Landis. Mr. Speaker, I shall not oppose this amendment for the reason that I feel that, as the Census Committee has stated, the Director of the Census should have a certain leeway in view of the experience he has recently had. The Public Printer has absolute jurisdiction in fixing the scale of charges in the Government Printing Office.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield to a question right there?

Mr. LANDIS. And that scale has been changed three times within the past eighteen months.

The old scale which had been in operation fully fifteen years was changed when the audit system came in in November, 1907, in accordance with their theories, and increased the apparent cost of the public printing to such an extent that the departments and independent bureaus protested and the President ordered an investigation. The result was a restoration of the old scale. In the meantime another Public Printer was appointed. I would say that we have had during the past eighteen months three changes of scales and four Public Printers. new Public Printer was appointed and came from the Philippines in June, and he brought a scale with him. I was notified at my home in Indiana about the 20th of June that he was going to put into effect in the Government Printing Office a new scale of charges which had been tried successfully in the Philippines. The office was just recovering from the confusion wrought by the audit-system scale. I immediately telegraphed him that I regarded the matter as one of such importance that I had referred the papers to the secretary of the Printing Investigation Commission, who had authority under resolution of the commission to represent them in such matters in the absence of the commission from Washington, and that he would be in Washington not later than July 1, the date that it was proposed to put the new scale into effect, to confer with him in this matter.

The secretary of the commission arrived here on the 1st day of July and found that that scale, notwithstanding my telegram, had been put into effect the day before, and all the departments had been notified. The result was that the appropriations and the allotments of the appropriations to the various departments had been made on one scale by Congress, based by Congress and the departments on one scale, and the charges against the departments were to be made on another scale. In other words, the putting into effect of this new scale absolutely destroyed the integrity of every appropriation and every allotment made. The effect upon the work of the Census Bureau was this: About eighteen months ago the Director of the Census was paying at the rate of $14 a page for tabular matter. He took the matter up with the Public Printer, and a rate of $11 per page was agreed upon as fair, and under that rate he was proceeding. When this new Public Printer came in he put into effect his new scale, which put the price per page to about $16, and the Director of the Census discussed this matter with me and stated these conditions, and I told him that, under the circumstances, in order that he might have something substantial from which and upon which to calculate, I should not oppose the amendment which has come here from the Senate.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print with my remarks certain letters—one from the Director of the Census to Senator Long, chairman on the Census in the Senate; a letter from the Public Printer; a letter from Mr.

Rossiter bearing upon this question.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If the gentleman will-The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD for the purpose indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

JANUARY 8, 1909. DEAR SENATOR LONG: In response to your letter I am glad to define the attitude of the Census Office toward the amendment of the Senate Committee to the pending Thirteenth Census bill with reference to the printing (sec. 28).

DEAR SENATOR LONG: In response to your letter I am glad to define the attitude of the Census Office toward the amendment of the Senate Committee to the pending Thirteenth Census bill with reference to the printing (sec. 28).

This question was raised before the committee purely as a business matter, and not in any antagonism or hostility to the Government Printing Office, with which official relations of the pleasantest character, based upon mutual aid, have always been maintained. It was the purpose when this bill was originally framed a year ago to make exclusive use of the printing facilities of the government office. At the suggestion of the director, the section which authorized an independent census printing plant at the Eleventh and Tweifth censuses was omitted from the bill. The task of organizing and conducting a printing office ought not to be superimposed upon that of taking a decennial census. Moreover, in view of the satisfactory service of the Government Printing Office at the Twelfth Census it did not seem to be necessary.

On the basis of the printing costs of that census, I estimate was based upon the price for tabular matter then charged at the Government Printing Office, which was regarded as reasonably satisfactory. Shortly after the estimate was submitted to Congress, rapid and unforeseen changes took place in the printing office. With the change in the Government Printer, the price schedules have also been changed; and the scale prevailing when the estimate was made was withdrawn without notice or explanation to the Census Office. The net advance in charges for tabular matter approximates 50 per cent; and moreover, an opinion has been sought from the Comptroller of the Treasury, under which it is practically impossible to return to the former prices. The difference between the printing costs of the Thirteenth Census, as estimated a year ago, and that which must actually be incurred under existing conditions, is so great as to place the Director of the Census in a most unfortunate position; an exigency had arisen requiring resort to outside printing facilities might well be left to the Joint Committee on Printing of Congress, which has general jurisdiction over the government printing.

In addition to the question of cost, there is also the very important question of expedition. The pending bill requires that the Thirteenth Census shall be compiled and published within two years from the date of the enumeration. Here again the matter is entirely beyond the control of the director, unless some latitude is given. The copy for the current census report upon the annual mortality statistics, almost entirely tabular matter, consisting of over 500 pages, was sent to the Public Printer more than one month ago, and the office is still awaiting the proofs for some of this report. It has been explained, in response to frequent inquiry, that the Printing Office is much crowded with tabular matter, and that the Census Office must take its turn with the rest, and that delays, especially when Congress is in session, are inevitable. If delays are to occur in handling the Thirteenth Census, similar to those now encountered in the mortality report, and in other reports, it will be impossible to comply with the provision above quoted, requiring publication within two years. Necessarily, the printing of the final volumes must be largely crowded into the last months of the last year of the census period, when Congress will be in session.

It is to be hoped and expected that the Government Printing Office will be able to meet the requirements of the Thirteenth Census with such promptness and at such reasonable prices that in the event of the adoption of this amendment no occasion will arise for recourse to private printers. The likelihood for satisfactory service will be greatly increased with the alternative provision in the law. It is certain that no one now in responsible position in the event of actual necessity. It is well understood that the Government Printing Office is the best equipped office in the world and

S. N. D. NORTH, Director.

Hon. C. I. Long, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

JANUARY 21, 1909.

Hon. Chester I. Long,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator Long: The Washington Post of yesterday morning contained an attack upon the statements which I made before the Senate Committee on the Census, concerning the cost of the Cuban census report. The substance of this attack was that the report had cost about $20,000; that it had required the detail of two men from Washington to Vermont for a considerable period, at an expense of $1,300, and that the whole operation was much more expensive than if the work had been performed in the Government Printing Office.

The facts, as testified to before your committee, are not altered by the attack above mentioned. The accounts which have been received since my testimony vary a few dollars from the estimated cost of the report. All the bills for this report are now paid, except for the binding, which is in progress in New York; hence the final cost can vary little, if at all, from the following figure:

"Twenty thousand copies, 710 pages, 42 inserts (illustrations and maps), cover stamped in 2 colors, $11,752.57."

Concerning the detail of two men to Vermont, it is a fact that two men were detailed to Vermont to read proof. The services of these two employees, paid by the Cuban Government, would have been absolutely necessary in Washington had the book been made even inside of the Census Office. Therefore, this item of clerical assistance is not included either in the cost of the work as produced by private contractors, or in the estimated cost if produced by the Government Printing Office. It is a fact that the traveling expenses and the per diem allowance, amounting to approximately $500, might be regarded as an extra charge. There are also some extra freight charges, for which I have not received the bills, amounting, perhaps, to $100, a total to be added to the cost of perhaps $600.

In my testimony before the committee I referred only to the Cuban census report. There is in addition an abstract of this census now in process of production. The co required to the producing office. The work is proceeding rapidly and smoothly.

The cost, according to the estimates made and approved by the Cuban Government, will be $2.787.57 for an edition of 10,000 copies, consisting of 280 pages, 22 illustrations, with cloth binding, stamped in brown ink from an original design. The cost of this book if produced in the Government Printing Office, according to the informal estimates obtained, would be $4.904.27.

For these two publications the actual cost and the charge if produced in the Government Printing Office may be stated as follows:

	Actual cost, private con- tractors.	Estimated eost, Government Printing Office.
Cuban Census Report	$11,752.57 2,787.57	$17,750.52 4,904.27
Total	14,540.14	22,654.79

From this you will perceive that a total expenditure of $14,540.14 to private contractors has produced work of an entirely satisfactory and, indeed, excellent character which would have cost $22,654.79 if produced in the Government Printing Office, an excess of 55 per cent.

I respectfully refer you again to my statement, made before the committee, that I was not conducting an attack, in any sense, on the Government Printing Office, but that as these facts had developed it seemed to be the duty of the Census Office to call them to your attention as a matter of proper administration. The Director of the Census has already expressed to you his views upon this subject and his desire to avoid controversy in connection with the subject of census printing.

Very truly, yours,

W. S. ROSSITER. Chief Clerk.

W. S. ROSSITER, Chief Clerk.

Office of the Public Printer, Washington, January 25, 1909.

Washington, January 25, 1909.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit for your consideration the following statement relative to the printing of the Thirteenth Census:

The plant of the Government Printing Office includes 79 linotype (type-setting) machines, 162 monotype keyboards, and 124 monotype casting machines. The monotype machines are especially adapted to the work of setting tabular matter. The major portion of the composition for the census reports consists of tabular matter. With this large plant of monotype machines I have no hesitancy in saying that the census work can be handled promptly, satisfactorily, and economically from the standpoint of the Census Bureau as well as of the Government Printing Office.

The regular work of the Government is not of sufficient volume to require the use of the entire plant of monotype machines, and the Public Printer who purchased the equipment must necessarily have had in mind its utilization in producing the reports of the United States Census Bureau. A proper return to the Government from this investment in machines can not be had unless the volume of tabular matter supplied to this office is greatly increased.

The equipment of the binding and press room divisions is adequate to perform expeditiously, satisfactorily, and economically the reports of the Census Bureau in addition to the regular run of government work.

A census report page contains 10.000 ems of tabular matter. The out-of the Census Bureau in addition to the regular run of government work.

A census report page contains 10,000 ems of tabular matter. The output of a monotype caster is about 4,800 ems per hour. We have equipment sufficient to turn out 128 pages per day in addition to the current work of the office. I confidently make the statement that the Government Printing Office can perform the printing of the census reports more expeditiously than any other office, or combination of offices, in the United States.

If the Census Office will furnish its copy as regularly and edited in the same manner that it will be compelled to edit if sent to contracting printers, the cost of the census work can be materially reduced below the standard price of 80 cents per thousand ems (single price). By prooper editing of the copy proof changes can be avoided, the cost of proof reading minimized, and the quantity of killed matter greatly reduced. The cost of producing the census work in this office depends upon the extent to which the Government Printing Office and the Census Bureau cooperate and work in harmony. I assure you that I will, with my assistants, exert every possible effort to bring about the much desired cooperative relation, and, when this is accomplished, I am positive that the cost of composition will not exceed $12 per page of 6-point tabular matter, and may possibly be brought below that amount. The Government Printing Office is now experiencing difficulty in securing the services of competent machine operators to perform the extra work of Congress. We can only retain the services of highly skilled mechanics by providing them with continuous employment. Men of this class will not leave permanent positions to accept temporary employment in the Government Printing Office during the sessions of Congress, and unless the maximum volume of work possible be held by the Government to be performed in its own thoroughly equipped plant it will be impossible for the Public Printer to keep intact a working force of skilled mechanics

Sam'l B. Donnelly, Public Printer.

Hon. E. D. CRUMPACKER, Chairman of the House Committee on Census, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. LANDIS. I desire to say to the House in this connection that we have in mind certain changes and certain regulations by which I feel we will be able to protect the Census Bureau and other departments of the Government and Congress against this recent change of scale.

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield to me for one or two minutes?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know how much time I have remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana has sixteen minutes remaining.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask— Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, there has been almost an Mr. HULL or lowa. Mr. Speaker, there has been almost an hour taken in this debate, and practically that hour has been taken by those in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota. It seems to me like in all fairness there should be an extension of the debate in order to get the facts before this House. I want to call attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that if this motion of the gentleman from Minnesota prevails it means to absolutely take from the Government Printing Office the printing of this census—absolutely. It is concluding gentle. the printing of this census—absolutely. It is couched in gentle language, but its effect will be to take it from the Government Printing Office. Now, I want to say further to this House that to my mind the comparison of cost is not a fair one for this reason, that no matter

Mr. LANDIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have only five minutes.
Mr. LANDIS. I will say to the gentleman that I must differ with his conclusions in regard to all of this work going away from the Government Printing Office.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think it is the intention and purpose to take it all away. Mr. Speaker, those who are setting type, the typesetters-I do not know what the technical term would be—are paid by the thousand ems.

Mr. LANDIS. They are paid by the hour.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Their pay is fixed by the hour and not by the number of ems they set, according to the gentleman from Indiana, who speaks from full knowledge. Then the cost of any extra work is virtually what is paid for composition and white paper.

For, Mr. Speaker, whether there is one bit of extra work going on there or not, the expense of the salaries for the Public Printer, his assistants, the foremen, the proof readers, the heating plant and the lighting plant, and all the expenses of keeping up that great organization will go on just the same, whether they are busy all the time or not.

Mr. LANDIS. Just as they do in the War Department and in the Treasury Department.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. And every other department. This Government Printing Office was organized to do work for the Government. It is the greatest printing plant on earth. It is supported by government funds, it is paid out of the Treasury, we have this great plant running there regardless of whether the work is pushing or not at all times. duce the number of compositors, they may dispose of some few proof readers, but they will not take off one of the higher paid officers or employees. These are the fixed charges of the office and go on all the time.

How about your census? The Government pays for the printing of the census out of the same Treasury that we pay for running the Government Printing Office. It looks to me more like a matter of bookkeeping than anything else-taking funds out of one pocket and putting them in another pocket. When you come to the question of cost in the Government Printing Office, if you will deduct out of the cost of your printing these fixed charges that we are going to carry on regardless of the census work, you reduce the cost of the printing more than one-half.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him right there? That statement is on the assumption that part of the time the Government Printing Office will be idle, when, as a matter of fact, they have got more work now than they are able to do as promptly as the departments require it to be done.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They may have work, and always will have work, but a large part of this census will be printed when Congress is not in session, when the largest part of their work has dropped off, and when it is not as imperative as when Congress is in session. It seems to me, if we are going to keep up the Government Printing Office for printing public documents and carrying on government work, the very place for this census and all other government work to be done is in the Government Printing Office, and, if the Public Printer raises the price beyond what it should be, the Committee on Printing should come in here with a bill that will limit him in his power, as I believe the gentleman from Indiana says they propose to do. No man should have the power that this Government Printer seems to have, as developed to-day. In place of taking the printing away from here, I would say that the way to remedy the evil is to correct his abuse of power by law that will make it impossible for him to do such arbitrary things in the future.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. I understand the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hay] is a member of the committee, but the time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] has been consumed by those in favor of the motion made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], and I understand the gentleman from Virginia is in favor of that motion. Now, when will those who are opposed to it be entitled to recognition or time?

Mr. HAY. I will yield the gentleman some time if he wants it.

I only want to say a few words, Mr. Speaker. The feature of the amendment dealing with the expense has been fully gone into. I think it might be well to call the attention of the House to the fact that the bill requires the Director of the Census to have the census reports printed within two years. That is obligatory upon the Director of the Census. Now, it appears from the communication received from him, addressed to Senator Long, chairman of the Committee on the Census in the Senate, it will be impossible to have this information printed in the time prescribed under the bill. Therefore that is all the more reason that the House should adopt the amendment proposed by the Senate, in order to give the Director of the Census an opportunity to make contracts on the outside, so that this work can be expeditiously gotten before the coun-If the publication of the work is to be deferred, it will be of little use to the country, and therefore the bill provides that it shall be given to the country within two years. not going to give the Director of the Census an opportunity to get the work before the country within the time prescribed in the bill, what will be the use in getting it before the country at all?

Mr. DAWSON. Will the gentleman yield to a question on that point?

Mr. HAY. Certainly. Mr. DAWSON. Would it expedite the publication of these volumes to have the work done at some point outside of Washington, where it would be necessary to send all proofs to the Census Office for correction and have them returned to the private printing office? And I might add, for the information of the gentleman from Virginia, that I understand that the practice in the Census Office has been to what we call in the printing office "butcher" proof more than in other departments of the Government. I ask if that would facilitate the publication?

Mr. HAY. I assume that the Director of the Census would have this outside work done at places near enough so that he would be able to expedite the printing of the census.

Mr. DAWSON. If the gentleman will permit, in the case of the Cuban census they started in by sending the proofs to the Census Office, and they found that occasioned so much delay that the Census Office sent two men up to Vermont, at additional cost. That ought, it seems to me, to be taken into account in connection with this question of the cost of printing.

Mr. HAY. One of the purposes of this amendment is not only to reduce the expense, but to insure expedition in printing the Thirteenth Census. That obligation is placed by the law upon the shoulders of the Director of the Census. not to be assumed that the Director of the Census is going to employ some firm in some remote part of the country which will impede the printing rather than expedite it. For that reason it is important, not only to the Director of the Census as an officer of the Government carrying out the law, but it is important to the people of the country that this work shall be expeditiously done, that the Director of the Census ought to be given the leeway which is given in this Senate amendment.

Mr. DAWSON. Will the gentleman permit one more question?

Mr. HAY.

Oh, certainly.

SON. Is it not necessary under the terms of this Mr. DAWSON. Is it not necessary under the terms of amendment that this printing be let by competitive bids?

Mr. HAY. I do not so understand.

Mr. TAWNEY. The language expressly provides that in the event he exercises the discretion to contract for outside printing, that it shall be done by competition.

Mr. HAY. Oh, yes; the outside printing.

Mr. DAWSON. Then he would have to let the printing to the lowest bidder whether he be at Spokane or any other remote place?

I do not think so. Mr. HAY.

Mr. DAWSON. In the case of the Cuban census it was let to a firm in Vermont.

Mr. MANN. Your town might get the benefit of it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Can this be let in part to private contractors and part done by the Government?

Mr. HAY. Unquestionably. I will say that it is not the purpose nor the intention of the Director of the Census to let this work out to outside bidders unless it is found impossible to have it expeditiously and cheaply done at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is it provided that it may be divided that way between the Government Printing Office and

Mr. HAY. Undoubtedly, he can have it done that way; some at the Government Printing Office and some outside.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How do they get at the facts? It seems it is an assumed fact that it costs 55 per cent more to do this work at the Government Printing Office than by out-How do they get at that?

Mr. HAY. I presume they arrive at it by information given and from outside printing establishments.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Have we any proof of that?

Mr. HAY. We have; the whole matter was discussed by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I was not in the Hall at the time, but busy in conference.

Mr. HAY. Now, I will yield to the gentleman from New York. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Five minutes.

Mr. HAY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the adoption of the Senate amendment. There is here a great Government Printing Office, which, in my judgment, should be utilized. While it is true that the office is fully occupied while Congress is in session, it will not be fully occupied when Congress is not in session. They have certain fixed charges—in session. They have certain fixed charges—

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption, to correct him?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have certain fixed charges, which are paid or met regardless of whether the plant is utilized to its full capacity.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman that during the hearings on the urgent deficiency bill a few days ago we were told by the Secretary of the Interior that work sent over to the Government Printing Office early in June was delayed until some time in July on account of the fact, as claimed by the Printing Office, that they were so busy that they did not have time to do the work. Congress was not in session at that time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That may be; but the gentleman is mistaken. During the period of congressional work and when departmental reports come in at one time it makes the rush; but that is the only time when the work in the office is overcrowded. The gentleman from Indiana, in my judgment, has pointed out the chief reasons for the inability to ascertain what it will cost to do the work at this office. No great establishment that has had its head changed four times in eighteen months can be conducted in an efficient manner. If there was some permanency in the tenure of the head of the office, if some man competent to conduct the office was selected to do it, the work then could be done in a proper and efficient manner. When the qualifications of the man selected to conduct the office are required to be those of a man equipped to conduct a great printing establishment, then the office will be run in a proper manner. I believe that then the office will be run in a proper manner. the chief reason for this inefficiency in the Printing Office has been removed.

Mr. BARNHART. I want to ask a question for information. You say that the tenure of office ought to be longer. Would it not be better to have a law regulating the expenditures of that office first, so that he may not exercise his discretion and make the expenses what he chooses to make them in the management of the office?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know just what the gentleman has in mind. Of course, Congress can not pass a law fixing the price to be charged for various kinds of printing; but it should be possible to get a competent man, familiar with the conduct of a printing office, who would be able to have the work done at a reasonable price.

Mr. LANDIS. I would ask the gentleman if he thinks it would be possible in the State of New York to secure a competent man to take charge of an industrial establishment involving an expenditure of $7,000,000 annually, for $5,500 a year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There seems to be no dearth of competitors, either in New York or in other parts of the United States, willing to do that. The President had no difficulty in getting four men whom he believed to be competent, and surely he would not select a man whom he did not believe to be fully equipped. So there can be no particular difficulty. The fact is, in my judgment, that the office has been run very badly. be possible to get a man to conduct it properly for that salary, because if he does so it will give him such a reputation that he can easily command in the commercial world a much larger compensation. I believe that if the gentleman who has been appointed be now given a fair opportunity, it will be possible for him to conduct this establishment in a way that will be satisfactory.

pending amendment it is possible to have the printing done by contract, regardless of price, with no requirement that it be done by the lowest responsible bidder, and without an invitation to all printing houses to compete, or any requirement which will enable them to do so.

Mr. HAY. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, there have been some very remarkable statements made on the floor of this House to-day. In the interest of the Government, in the interest of economy, we have established a great printing office in this city. It has cost many hundreds of thousands of dollars. I do not know how many millions, in fact, it has cost the Government. It may be, no matter what organization he belongs to, has a right ought to be the most complete printing establishment in the world. It ought to be able to execute work in the best possible manner and upon the cheapest possible scale. that, without taking into account rents, deterioration of plant, insurance, or any expense of that kind, it is more expensive by 55 per cent to the Government to do work in that establishment than to have it done in the private establishments of the Now, Mr. Speaker, there is some reason for that. country. What is it? A number of gentlemen have talked about possible reasons. Is it not true that the reason of this excessive cost is because that establishment is run in the interest of a labor union in this city; that it is dominated by that labor union, and that these excessive expenses are the result of the power and influence of that union over the management of that institution? Mr. Speaker, there are gentlemen who forget that union labor in the United States does not represent labor in the United There are perhaps 2,000,000 men who insist upon the States. closed shop, who insist that no man shall work in the United States who does not pay allegiance to them, who does not bear their certificate, who does not pay taxes to their treasury; and yet there are twenty-four other millions of Americans who labor by their hands whom these gentlemen do not seem to be at all solicitous about.

Mr. Speaker, I have all my life been in full sympathy with those who labor. I am a mechanic. I have been a worker all my life. My sympathies are with those who toil. This sentiment has directed my political life. I am a Republican because I believe in free labor. I am a Republican because in my early days I believed that labor should own itself and capital should not own labor. I am a Republican because I believed that it was the duty of the United States, by every method possible, to enlarge the labor field of the United States, to make more and more and more places in which its laborers should find field for the exercise of their energies at proper compensation. have been a Republican because I believed in protecting the labor of my own country rather than bringing large emolument to the labor of other countries.

But I am not in favor of allowing a class an opportunity to dominate over the interests of others. These gentlemen, who are the apologists of this procedure, that would take $400,000 in a single job out of the Treasury of the United States forget that if this proposition prevailed, as suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota, the labor will yet be performed, and performed by American citizens. We do not diminish the amount of work that is to be done. We do not take work out of the hands of any American citizen, but we simply say that it shall be in the interest of 24,000,000 laborers rather than in the interest of two millions that propose to ostracize the other twenty-four millions. I am in favor of this proposition. I believe that we ought to so arrange that this work may be done in the government establishment if it can be done in the interest of the whole American people; but if it is to cost two or three or four hundred thousand dollars more to be done there, I prefer that it should go to another class of laborers, who are not seeking to control the interest of the Government in this important particular. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL of lowa. Mr. Speaker, I would like one of the gentlemen to yield me five minutes now.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. How much time have I, Mr. Speaker? The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eleven minutes remain-

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I want to protest against my colleague stating my position on this bill. I have had nothing to say about union labor, or any other labor. The question of union or antiunion is not involved. I think that ques-tion has been dragged in here at this time where it does not belong, for this reason the Government Printing Office is not a closed shop. It is a civil-service organization, and any man that passes the examination, whether he belongs to union labor or not, has a right to an appointment, and he will get it

That was settled in a controversy in the recent past. So that my colleague, when he seeks to attribute to his colleagues from Iowa unworthy motives in their position on this matter, has not a single leg to stand on, except his own imagination.

This whole question ought to be determined outside of the question of union labor. That question has nothing to do with it. My position on this proposition is this: This Government keeps up a great printing establishment, the greatest on earth, fully equipped for all kinds of work, and at all times. Every printer and every man competent for a place in the United to take that examination, and, if he meets all the requirements, a certificate from the Civil Service Commission and an appointment in the Public Printing Office.

It is true that they try to divide them among the States, giving a certain proportion to each State, so that if one State has its full number of employees, that State is checked off until the one behind has caught up with it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my proposition is this: As I said, we keep up the greatest printing office on earth, fully equipped, where it does business for ourselves and for the Government only. The Treasury pays both for the printing of the census and for the maintenance of the Public Printing Office. Your foreman, your superintendent, your proof readers, your Public Printer and his three assistants are all paid whether they do this work or do not do it. The additional cost of printing this work is possibly a few more proof readers and compositors, and the white paper. So I do not believe that this apparent saving will be a real saving when the balance is struck at the Treasury

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say this much in explanation of what seems to me to be an uncalled for assault by my colleague upon the position of those who do not believe that the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota should prevail; and I reiterate what I said before, that I hope the House will vote it down, so that we will stand by the House proposition and have the work done in the Government Printing Office, where it properly be-

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I?

The gentleman has forty-two minutes. The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield to Mr. HEPBURN. me for a moment?

Mr. HAY. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa three minutes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull] should have felt that he was aggrieved by anything that I had said. Will he point out any sentiments of mine that were an assault upon him?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman said that his colleagues from Iowa were influenced in this by the fact that it was a labor upion and that we were multipled to the fact that it was a labor union, and that we were mulcting the Treasury of $400,000 on account of a labor union.

Mr. HEPBURN. I said this, I think, Mr. Speaker, that my friend was speaking in the interest of these 2,000,000 men; and on the side of the proposition that would result in mulcting the Government in this sum. That was the statement that I made. I am not prepared to change it. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the gentleman's attention to this fact, that the telegrams that have been coming here to Members, that the lobbyists that have been here against this proposition, come from and belong to the labor union that I have referred to.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to say right there, that I have had no telegram or lobbyist come to me.

Mr. HEPBURN. Very well, then, I am not talking about the gentleman. [Laughter.] "The jade, she doth protest too much." Mr. Speaker, I want to say, further, that practically the Government Printing Office is a closed shop, that 95 per cent of its membership are union men, and that they freeze out the man who is not a union man, or they compel him to join the union. I have had men complain to me that a union man would not even give them "sorts"—a term that my printer friend yonder will understand the meaning of—that they would not tell a newcomer as to methods, of even whether a matter should be set as a "hanging indention" or otherwise, that they freeze them out, and that seems to be established by the proof; and they have dominated, and do dominate, the Government Printing Office in this city.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DAWSON. Most of the time of the House during the last hour and a half has been consumed by those in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Tawney]. I would like to ask whether it is the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hay] or the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], who is in charge of the time in opposition of the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I will state that I am just now yielding five minutes to a gentleman who wants to oppose the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota, and I will yield some time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Dawson] if he desires it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair considers the parliamentary inquiry answered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this amendment because it has not been shown that any substantial saving to the Government can be made by putting out this particular public printing in private shops. Even those gentlemen who advocate the adoption of this amendment do so with the declaration that it is only proposed to use the amendment as a club over the Public Printer to compel him to adjust the charge for printing to satisfy the head of the Census Bureau. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is a "tempest in a teapot." The prices paid by the Public Printer for labor, which so outrages the feelings of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hepburn], are substantially the same prices as are paid for printing and to printers by the newspapers in the large cities of the country. Moreover, those are prices fixed by law and can not be reduced at the behest of the Director of the Census even if the Public Printer were disposed to do so. Then, too, Mr. Speaker, the increase in the charge made by the Public Printer against the various departments, as represented here on the floor to-day, is not an actual increase to the Government, but simply means the taking of money out from one governmental pocket and putting it into another governmental pocket. It is nothing but an increase in the estimate made by the Public Printer himself of what his bureau should be paid by other government offices

How does the gentleman reconcile that state-Mr. TAWNEY. ment with the fact that the appropriations made for the public printing are insufficient, under the changed scale of costs, of Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will tell the gentleman one reason why this charge for public printing has increased and why the charges against the various departments have increased. because there has been a great increase in the cost of paper used by the Public Printer.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is not the ground, however, upon which the Public Printer bases an increase of 55 per cent in the cost of this work to the departments.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The charge against various departments made by the Public Printer is nothing but an estimate. Change your Public Printer and you change your estimate. The gentleman has admitted himself that one Public Printer increased the estimate 50 per cent; but that increase, while it counted against one particular department or all departments, counted as much in favor of the Public Printer, so that the Government lost nothing; taxes were not increased, expenditures were not in-There was simply a change in bookkeeping. What was added to the cost of printing in the various departments was deducted from the deficit in the office of the Public Printer.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the appropriations must be increased I would like to know if the expenditures are not necessarily increased to the extent that the appropriations are increased for this service?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The appropriations are increased for everything, but what is added in the various departments for printing appears in the Public Printer's office as increased earn-One reason why appropriations are increased in this particular case is because the price of paper has been advanced on an average of about 25 per cent; at least that is the advance to private consumers

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes. Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to say how much difference there has been in the cost of paper to the Government durin the last eighteen or twenty months?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am notable to state. I sent for the report of the Public Printer just now, but only have the report for 1906. In that year about $5,000,000 were expended by the Public Printer. Of this amount about $4,000,000 was for labor of all grades, about one million was for paper and supplies. The paper item was over half a million dollars. The big item in many cases is the charge for paper, and that is particularly true of the census reports, which have to be published in great quantities. I notice, for instance, on one page of the report for tabular printing the labor item is $151,000 and the paper item is $208,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. What department of the Government Printing Office was that from which the gentleman has just read?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not able to state, but it is under the head of charge for tabular statements. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to refer for a moment to the speech made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], who takes this occasion to make an assault on union labor as though union labor were responsible for all the extravagances of the Government or for the extravagances in the office of the Public Printer. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes more to the gentleman from Nebraska, and I will take this occasion to state that I have already promised all the time that I have.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Iowa can not set back the clock of progress. Union labor has come, and come to stay. While union labor may have been guilty of some mistakes, and undoubtedly has been; guilty of some wrongs, and undoubtedly has been; union labor has brought a benefit to the working classes of this country immeasurably beyond and above all detriment that it has brought in its wake. [Applause.] Union labor has established itself wherever civilization has been established, and in establishing itself has raised the condition of those who labor and their standard of living. It has been in this country, Mr. Speaker, the only salvation of the working classes in facing the tremendous increase in the cost of living brought upon them by the tariff, the trusts, and other conditions which it has had to confront. [Applause.] Speaker, it seems to me undoubtedly out of place for a Member to make an attack on union labor in a discussion which involves simply the question of whether the Government Printer shall be allowed to do this work or whether it shall be done outside. If the Government Printer, a creature of the Government, a creature of Congress, an appointee of the President, does not do his work in the proper way, let him be controlled. If his estimates do not conform to reason or if his policy does not satisfy other departments, let the administration regulate him. It is an error to assert that the Public Printer's office is a closed shop. It is open to all the world and to any man taking and passing the examination, and the compensation of the printers is fixed not by the men themselves, not by the union, but by law. plause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentle-Mr. HAY. man from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important question; not so much because it is an attempt to break down the Government Printing Office in this particular case, but because it would become a precedent for every head of a bureau to come to Congress and ask permission to go out and advertise for contracts and to secure contracts, as some one stated here, which would be subject to his direction and not to that of the Government Printer. But if I were in favor of so radical a step as this I would be opposed to this amendment. Mr. Speaker, no such loose provision has ever been undertaken to be engrafted upon our statute books as this would be. to the Director of the Census to determine whether he will have the printing done if it is not sufficiently promptly done in his judgment. Also, if he is not satisfied with the manner of doing it; also if he is not satisfied with the quality of the work done; and also if he is not satisfied with the price, with which he has little to do. Now, with those four things all in his discretion, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, he is permitted under this provision to go out and labor, he is permitted under this provision to go out and let a contract to whomsoever he pleases. It says he may let a contract for printing and binding "after due competition." What is due competition? Just such as in his discretion he might choose to exercise, and nothing more. No advertising or estimates is required to be made, nor is there to be competition with the Government Printing Office. The director might let a contract at any price, however high, under this provision. The bill does not require the contract to even be to the lowest bidder.

If these were days of graft there would be a chance for it here. Gentlemen advocate it because they want the Director of the Census to have, or he wants to have, the right to control the printing establishment which does the census printing. Now, this would be a most extraordinary thing in legislation in the States of this Union. In our own legislation, when we propose to let contracts for work, we provide for advertisement and for the letting of the contract to the lowest bidder. Here there is no such provision in the amendment. It is drawn so loosely that the Director of the Census might let the contract as and to whom he pleases. Does anybody dispute it?
Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], Mr. KEIFER. who will make his motion to agree to this provision, says he disputes it, but the language of this warrants all I have said

Now, we have had estimates of the cost of printing that are meaningless. That has been fully explained. We have nothing here that indicates to my mind that there is any necessity for even a proper provision to go into competition with the printers all over the country. There were some estimates made here some time ago by somebody who was ill prepared to make them, based upon old methods and cast-off printing machinery, and so on, that were very extravagant. Now, when we have the greatest printing office in the world in its equipment, all sorts of presses in duplication, all sorts of methods and machinery binding, and all that, we are to be told that the Director of the Census has the right, if he does not like the quality of the work, the promptness of the work, or the price that is being charged in this great office for doing printing generally, to go out and let it to whomsoever he pleases, and at any price he pleases. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I am a member of this committee, and I rise for the purpose of recording myself in favor of the motion made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], and therefore in favor of the amendment as proposed by the Senate. This discussion has taken a very wide I do not care a farthing whether or not the Government Printing Office is run and operated by a labor union. I do not know anything about that proposition as to whether or not it is organized, controlled, and dominated by labor organizations, as I said a moment ago, nor do I care one iota whether that is true of whether it is not true.

I quite agree with everything said by the gentleman from Nebraska about organized labor.

But we are dealing with a proposition here that every man, woman, and child in the United States has an interest in. call your attention to the second section of this bill, which provides for the taking of the decennial census of the United States, and it provides that the publication shall be prepared, printed, and distributed in the first three years of the taking of the census. Now, to my mind, the evidence is clear to the effect that circumstances and conditions may arise in the Government Printing Office during the decennial census period whereby the second section of this bill could not possibly be complied with. Shail the 87,000,000 of people in the United States who are interested directly in the taking of the Thirteenth Census be held absolutely at the mercy, as it were, of the Government Printing Office in the event it can not get these reports out in the time as provided for by section 2 of this bill? To my mind this further fact has been established, that it would be to the interest of economy to adopt this proposed Senate amendment.

The statement has been made, and it has not been denied, that we have had four different Public Printers in eighteen months' time. It is conceded, therefore, either directly or indirectly, that something has been wrong in the way of the management of the Government Printing Office. Suppose that condition occurs during the taking of the decennial census, or the first three years of its existence, or to the extent that the Government can not get out these publications, what would be the condition?
In response to the argument made by the gentleman from Ohio

[Mr. Keifer], it can certainly be presumed that if this matter is submitted to competitive bids the Director of the Census and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor will at least do their duty, and if the Government desires to come in and submit competitive bids along with private concerns, that, at least, it will give the Government of the United States the opportunity to come in and submit its competitive bid.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest that that is exactly prohibited by the clause we are now talking

Mr. COX of Indiana. Then, in response to that, while I have not yet observed or had the opportunity to observe any contract made by the Government of the United States for the furnishing of its supplies, yet I imagine that under the law the Government has the right to accept or to reject any bid which it may have tendered to it or offered to it. This amendment does not propose to take the printing relating to the decennial census period away from the Government during this period. It only provides to aid the Government to get this printing done in the case of emergency; should the emergency not arise, the Government will not undertake to take the option of printing away from the Government, but will permit it to be done by the Government.

Mr. KEIFER. Speaking about contracts let under special contract.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Dawson].

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, it does not seem to me the question of unionism has any place in this debate. question for this House to decide in regard to the printing of the Thirteenth Census is the question, first, as to price, and second, the promptness in delivery. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] has just called attention to the fact and argued upon what the situation would be if the Government Printing Office could not get these volumes out within the required time. Why, that would be wholly within the control of Congress. Congress controls the Government Printing Office. We could easily make a provision to care for any contingency that might arise if the work was done down at the Government Printing Office. But if it were being done in a private plant, we would be entirely helpless in the premises upon the question of promptness of delivery.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to call attention to the fact that if this work is let out to private contractors, it must be let under the provision that is now proposed, to the lowest bidder. That does not take into account the proximity of the bidder to the city of Washington. If the work is to be done distant from the city of Washington, as the Cuban census has been done, then we must submit to the almost interminable delays of sending the proof here to the city of Washington and then returning it to the place where the work is being done.

Mr. TAWNEY. They would have to send a proof reader to the place.

Mr. DAWSON. If we did that, then we increase the cost of printing, because we not only have to pay the salaries of the proof readers, but their expenses while absent from Washington. I want to add, Mr. Speaker, that census tables are somewhat different from ordinary printing. Census tables, after they have been set up and the proofs have been sent to the Census Bureau, have been known to be completely reshaped, and new tables in those cases have had to be set up in the Government Printing Office.

If that is to be done in the Thirteenth Census, and no doubt it will be, I want to say to the gentlemen who expect to promote economy by this provision that, in my judgment, in the long run they will be paying an additional amount for the publication of the census by reason of the additional expense made on account of changes made in the tables and corrections in proofs.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. DAWSON. Certainly. Mr. COX of Indiana. In taking into consideration competitive bids, does not the gentleman believe that the Government before it enters into a contract will take all these things into consideration, such as distance from the capital and everything the gentleman has referred to?

Mr. DAWSON. On the question of economy, I do not think that is worth a cent if you are going to take proximity into

Mr. COX of Indiana. Have not they the right to reject any and all bids?

Mr. DAWSON. On the question of economy it has been said that the Cuban census was printed at a much lower figure by a private concern than it could have been done by the Government Printing Office. I am reliably informed that the Cuban census, instead of costing the Cuban Government the amount of the original bid, eleven or twelve thousand dollars, actually cost between eighteen and twenty thousand by reason of the changes, and so forth, which the private party was enabled to make.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the gentleman

Mr. DAWSON. I can not yield now.

Mr. TAWNEY (continuing). Ought to give the source of his information in order that we may compare it with that given.

Mr. DAWSON. The gentleman has had half an hour's time.

Mr. TAWNEY. No, sir; I did not.
Mr. DAWSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, there is one other point this House ought to take into consideration in connection with this matter, and that is the question of the possibility of reprinting some of these volumes. We all know that in times to come there may be occasions when Congress will want a reprint of some of these volumes. Supposing they are printed by a private concern, will the Government have control of the plates? No. If we reprint the volume we must then send it to the Government Printing Office and go to the additional expense of setting it up and incur the same cost as it would have been originally. These, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, are some of the considerations that ought to be taken into account in con-nection with this amendment. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I want a vote on this question. I will yield to the gentleman from Minnesota four minutes, and after that I will ask for the previous question.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, among the various arguments that have been made against concurring in the Senate amendment the one made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] seems to have impressed the Members of the House, perhaps, more than any other, namely, that it is necessary for us to permit the work of printing the reports of the next census to be done in the Government Printing Office, so that the men there employed shall be kept at work. In reply, I want to say that this census work is special, or work not contemplated in connection with the regular work of the Government Printing Office. Whether the census reports are printed there or not, the employees of that institution will all be employed and receive their usual compensation.

I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that if this amendment is not adopted and does not become a part of this law, the Government of the United States, in respect to printing the next census reports, will be in a position that it has not been in at any time in the past. For the purpose of meeting conditions that might arise, either as to delay or increase in the cost of printing the census reports, the laws under which the last two previous censuses were taken provided for a printing establishment in the Census Bureau itself. There is no provision of that kind in this law. Hitherto the Census Bureau was authorized to establish and maintain an independent printing office in the Census Bureau for the purpose of doing certain of the printing the bureau required.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Does not the gentleman know that they only had six pressmen

Mr. TAWNEY. I am making my statement from the testimony of Mr. Rossiter, the chief clerk of the Census Office.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman to the provision as enacted.

Mr. MANN. That was the law. They could have had it. Mr. Speaker, I want to state further that this is merely a precautionary measure, so that the Census Bureau will not be at the mercy of conditions over which it has no control when it comes to print the census reports within the time fixed by law. Take, for example, the situation that has obtained in the Government Printing Office during the last year, when the scale of prices has changed one month from another month; when it has been absolutely impossible to know how much government printing was going to cost when orders for printing were given, because there was no certainty that the scale of prices would not be changed by some new Public Printer. Now, this is merely as a precaution, to protect the Government against conditions over which the Census Bureau has absolutely no control. If this provision goes in, it does not mean that the census is going to be printed in a private establishment, unless conditions arise making it absolutely necessary to do so; and it being proposed merely as a precaution, I think the House ought by all means to concur, for if the scale of prices charged by the Government Printing Office is that which was estimated for not long ago, then the cost of printing the census will be at least four or five hundred thousand dollars in excess of what it could be done for by some private establishments. therefore the motion to recede and concur will prevail.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on all the motions pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Olmsted). The gentleman from Indiana moves the previous question on all motions pend-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it. Mr. BUTLER. Does this include more than one amendment? The SPEAKER pro tempore. Only the twenty-fourth amend-

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask that the motion be divided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] that the House do recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment 24 and concur therein. Now, the gentleman from New York demands a division of that question.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the motion to recede and concur divisible?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rulings, the Chair thinks it is divisible.

Mr. BUTLER. If we recede, then what do we do?
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the first branch of the motion, which is that the House do recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 24.

Mr. HAY. A parliamentary inquiry. Do we not first vote upon the motion to concur, which brings the two Houses together?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We must first recede from the disagreement to the Senate amendment before we can concur. The question, therefore, is upon the motion that the House do recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment 24.

The question being taken, the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 77, noes 59.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and ays. The yeas and nays were ordered.
Mr. TAWNEY. Will the Chair please restate the question that the House is asked to vote upon?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is upon the motion that the House do recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment 24. Upon that question the year and nays are ordered, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas I answered "present" 6, not voting 136, as follows: -yeas 128, navs 116,

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to the pending Senate amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the previous question is ordered on both motions, to recede and concur.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But this is not on either motion. I offer that amendment to the pending Senate amendment.

Mr. HAY. But the previous question was ordered on both motions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The previous question was ordered on the pending motion. One was the motion to insist and the other was the motion to recede and concur. The House having now receded, the amendment is before the House, and to that I offer this amendment.

Mr. HAY. My recollection is that the gentleman from Indiana asked the previous question on both motions—on all motions-and the previous question was ordered. The motions before the House are the motions of the gentleman from Minnesota to recede and concur.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; but this is a preferential motion.
Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the amendment reported for the information of the House pending its consideration by the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think the motion to amend is not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will rule upon the point of order, if it is insisted upon.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be reported for the information of the House.

Mr. HAY. I insist on my point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order being insisted upon, the Chair will rule. The Chair understands that the previous question was demanded and ordered upon all pending motions. That being the case, the question now before the House for consideration appears to have been squarely ruled upon by the present Speaker of the House on the 2d of March, 1907, when it was decided that the previous question being demanded and ordered on a motion to concur in a Senate amendment, a motion to amend is not in order. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order. The question now is on the motion to concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 97, noes 65.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York emands the yeas and nays. All in favor of taking the yeas and demands the yeas and nays. nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Thirty gentlemen standing; not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

So the motion to concur in Senate amendment No. 24 was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report Senate amendment No. 26.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC, 33. That the Director of the Census, under the supervision of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to acquire by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, for the use of the Census Office, and for other governmental purposes, the site and buildings thereon, containing about 118,000 square feet of ground, and constituting the southern 350 feet, more or less, of square No. 574, in Washington, D. C., bounded on the north by a public alley, on the south by B street, on the east by First street, and on the west by Second street NW.: Provided, That not more than $430,000 shall be paid for the property herein referred to.

That the said Director of the Census, under the supervision of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, is instructed to cause to be erected on such portion of the site as is not now occupied by buildings, a commodious and substantial building with freproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use of the Census Office, and for other governmental purposes, the cost of such building not to exceed $250,000. A sum of money sufficient to pay for the property and the erection of the said building is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; Provided, That no part of the said appropriation shall be expended until a valid title to the property referred to shall be vested in the United States.

United States

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of getting the sense of the House on this amendment, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur therein. The amendment provides for the purchase by the Government of the property now occupied by the permanent Census Office, including the land and buildings and certain other property adjacent thereto on the north, one, I think, a vacant lot and the other a lot upon which there is a building now occupied by the Southern Railway as a sort of subsidiary office. The Government has an option on this property at the price of $3.31 a square foot, including the buildings. The Senate amendment also provides an appropriation of $250,000 for the construction of a building upon the vacant property included in the proposition to purchase, a building large enough to accommodate the entire temporary census force. The present office is altogether inadequate. The building, I understand, was constructed for the use of the Government in housing the clerks and offices for the last census, but it became necessary to rent three or four other places scattered about over the city to accommodate many of the clerks and divisions in the office. It was found to embarrass the administration of the work, to add very materially to the cost of the work, and it is the judgment of the Director of the Census, who knows perhaps more about the particular question than anybody else, that we can save in rents and in cost of administration during the three years of the next decennial census period substantially enough to pay for the property.

The location is within the scope of territory that the park commission has recommended to be purchased and owned by the Federal Government. Some criticism has been made of the location in regard to its altitude. It is largely filled ground. At one time that locality, like the great city of Chicago, was marshy. Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the gentleman yield for a question? When does the option on this expire?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. On the 1st of July next.

Mr. MADDEN. How many square feet of ground is there? Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not have that in my head.

Mr. SHEPPARD. For what purpose was this option obtained?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I am trying to hear the question of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. When was the option acquired, and for what purpose was it acquired?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The option was acquired when we first rented the property. The property belongs to some heirs, I understand the Emery estate, and the trustee of that estate put up the building and rented the property to the Government, and my recollection is that the annual rental is $21,000, and by the contract it was provided that the Government should have the right to buy the property at a price of $3.31 a square foot, including the building. That option expired a year ago. We secured a renewal of the option, and that extension was for one year.

How much is it per square foot?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Three dollars and thirty-one cents. When the option expired, we took a renewal at Mr. SIMS. the same price?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. They renewed it at the same price.

Mr. SIMS. For another year?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. For another year.

Mr. SIMS. Which proves conclusively that the property is not going up.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, I do not know that that proves that it is not going up. They made a contract and renewed it, and we have the option, and it is estimated that, taking the building into consideration, the price of the land is $2.10 a square foot.

Mr. LANDIS. I would like to ask the gentleman how that compares with the price of property in the same locality disosed of recently?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is considerably cheaper. been a piece of property sold in that immediate vicinity at a considerably higher price. This property is not in the hands of a real-estate agent, but it is being handled altogether by the trustees. Complaint has been made in relation to its altitude. The ground is higher than the level of the post-office building or the District of Columbia administration building.

It is a fairly convenient place, and it will result in a great saving to the Government in the administration of the Thirteenth Census in having the entire census force together, instead of having it scattered about all over the city. To have it so scattered will delay the work and it will cost a great deal to send unfinished work from one locality to another or from one room to another and it would require a great many additional messengers, but the expense in additional rent and service will be comparatively small as compared with the expense occasioned by the delay that will necessarily result from that policy.

Mr. SIMS. Will it be possible to put up such a building as the Government ought to put up there and have it ready for use by the time we will take this census?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman, I suppose, has in mind the appropriation limiting the cost of the building to $250,000. The building can be constructed and all ready before we need the clerks, and I sincerely believe we can save almost the entire purchase price of this property in rent and in other ways during the three-year period covered by the decennial census.

Mr. SIMS. If the Government does not rent this building, then who would; who would have any use for it except the Government?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, for that matter it might be sold, but if we could get the census force in the present building we would not be buying additional property. census office will accommodate about one-half of the clerical force that will be in the office during the decennial census period, and we would have to look about over the city to find accommodations here and there, wherever we could—a dozen in one place and fifty or a hundred in another—and it would simply scatter the force all over the city, and the gentleman from Tennessee ought to appreciate the embarrassment that it would occasion and the additional expense it would involve. For $250,000 we can put up a building that is entirely adequate, entirely sufficient to accommodate the force of the temporary census office, and have them together. I think it is a good bargain.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] a question on this amendment. I am not clear as to whether it is the purpose under this amendment to construct a permanent building for the use of the permanent Census Bureau of the Department of Commerce and Labor or whether it is the purpose merely to construct a tem-porary building to be used in connection with the housing of clerks employed in taking the next census.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The purpose is to construct a $250,000 building, to be used in accommodating the additional force during each decennial census period, or possibly the permanent force might move into it. I do not know. I am not informed. We have got to have the room; we have got to get it from some source; and we want to have the accommodations so that we can have the entire force together.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, this amendment, if agreed to, involves the expenditure of $680,000, including the site?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.
Mr. TAWNEY. Or a little more. We have a permanent Census Bureau in a rented building. I have no objection to the construction of a building of sufficient size and capacity to accommodate the permanent part of this organization; but I question the feasibility or advisability of our providing or authorizing the construction of a building during the time of taking the census, when a temporary force must be employed, for the purpose of also housing the permanent organization. Does not the gentleman think it would be better to provide temporarily for the force of employees necessary to take the next census, and after that is over and we know how much space will be required for the permanent organization, provide a suitable building for that permanent organization?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not, if by the carrying out of this contract we will save substantially enough to buy the property; because, when we get through, we will have as much money as we would otherwise have, and the property in the bargain. Does the gentleman understand that sort of a business proposition?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know what contract the gentleman refers to.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The option we have.

Mr. TAWNEY. I was unfortunately absent when the gentle-man stated what the option is.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The option is $3.31 a foot, including the improvements—the building. We must house the clerks, and it is good business and good administration to have them together, because their work is interdependent, and the gentle-man well knows that all this work is emergent. It has got to be done with dispatch, without delay, in order that it may be completed in time, and completed economically, and we can save nearly if not the entire amount of the purchase by buying this property, putting up this building—

Mr. TAWNEY. In the event that we do not take up the option, are we to be thrown out of the building?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Not necessarily thrown out. The present building has sufficient capacity to accommodate only about one half of the force during the temporary period. During the last census the gentleman knows we had a lot of clerks up in the Union Building, and I do not know where all-scattered all over town. Where will we go this time? The question of housing the bureaus and the divisions in the administration of the Government is a serious problem. This property, if we do not buy it now, may ultimately be worth eight or ten dollars a square foot.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman think it would be good business management for us to provide a building of sufficient size to accommodate all the employees engaged here in Washington in the taking of the census every ten years?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I believe that the building we have in mind will be sufficient to accommodate all of the clerks at the next decennial period, and perhaps at the decennial period following that; but in the meantime, if the Government sees fit to make some other disposition of it after the decennial period is over, put another bureau or division, or two or three of them. in the new building, or use it for storage purposes, it may do so; but the strong argument is that we will save substantially the cost of this property in rents and in securing more efficient administration, and have it practically free.

I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX of Indiana. I do not know if I understood my colleague when he stated a moment ago as to how long the Government had its present option on this property.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understand until the 1st of next July. Mr. COX of Indiana. When did that option begin? When was the contract made between the owner of the property and the Government?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think it was originally made about ten years ago, and expired about a year ago and was renewed for one additional year.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman inform the House how much rent the Government paid for the taking of the Eleventh Census under General Merriam?

Mr. LANGLEY. The total amount of rentals paid for all the ten years, was two hundred and sixty-two thousand and some odd dollars. The annual rental of the building now occupied is $21,000.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know how much we paid ten years ago. I do not know what buildings we had rented. I know we had a number, and we have been renting this property from that time to this.
Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker-

Mr. COX of Indiana. One more question, and that is whether or not the Government is getting this building any cheaper, so far as rent is concerned, than during the time of the taking of the census by General Merriam?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understand the rental is just the same.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How much is the rental? Mr. CRUMPACKER. Twenty-one thousand dollars a year, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Langley] informs me.

Mr. ROBERTS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Certainly. Mr. ROBERTS. I want to ask the gentleman if this contemplates the purchase of any new property not now occupied by this building?

Mr. LANGLEY. A part of the Emery estate, adjoining a vacant lot, containing about 10,500 square feet.

Mr. LANDIS. There is quite a strip of land to the west, which is now vacant, contemplated in this purchase.

Mr. ROBERTS. The building in which the Census Bureau is now located is a brick building, is it not?
Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTS. Two story?

Mr. ROBERTS. Two story?
Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.
Mr. ROBERTS. Will the gentleman inform the House what is contemplated in the $250,000 addition to this building? Will the architecture still be brick, and can these walls be used to run up a higher building?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understand a new building will be

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understand a new building will be erected, three or four stories high.

Mr. ROBERTS. Will they utilize any of the present building in that construction or raise it from the ground?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It will occupy the vacant property included in the purchase.

Mr. ROBERTS. The present property is to remain intact?
Mr. CRUMPACKER. A new building is to be constructed on the west side of the present building.

Mr. ROBERTS. On land not now occupied?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. On land not now occupied.
Mr. ROBERTS. A further question that may have some relation to it. What relation will the permanent buildings in this location have to the plan for the beautification of Washington, according to a plan which was reported by a commission some years ago, which involved having all the buildings on the Mall and on the south side of the Avenue?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This row of buildings is included within the park scheme for the Government to purchase and own for different purposes. That is substantially all I know

Mr. KEIFER. I understood the gentleman to say that the cost price was $3.10 per square foot?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. Then, why do you put the sum to be appropriated and to be paid for this 118,000 square feet of ground at $430,000?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know. I have not figured it

Mr. KEIFER. If that sum was paid, it would be substantially

$3.64 a square foot—more than $3.63 per square foot.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have not examined the mathematics of the Senate. I have here a statement made by Mr. Rossiter, the Acting Director of the Census, in the absence of Mr. North, covering this whole question, which I want to insert in the RECORD. I would like to have it read for the information of the House. It contains succinctly and clearly the reasons why this property ought to be purchased.

Mr. KEIFER. I am dealing with the price now, and that is what I wanted to find out.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know. Mr. KEIFER. If I make no mistake, you have put the price which you propose to give at substantially $3.64 a square foot; but if we can get it at $3.10 a square foot, we ought not to pay

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield for a question. Mr. MADDEN. The bill provides for an expense of $430,000 buildings, including the building now occupied, during the past | for the purchase of 118,000 square feet of ground. The gentleman states that the option price is $3.10 per square foot. As I figure it, that is $363,800. What becomes of the difference between $363,800 and the $430,000 provided in the bill?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is the question the gentleman from Ohio just asked me, and I answered him that I had not gone into the mathematics of the bill; but I have a statement here from the Director of the Census, in which he says the option price of purchase is $3.31 a square foot; and, of course, they will not pay any more than the option.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for one further question? I understood the gentleman to say that the option price included the purchase of the building now on the ground.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It covers the building on the ground.

Mr. MADDEN. If that be the case, why is this additional $64,000 embodied in the bill over and above the option price?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am not prepared to explain. I do not know. I took the statement of the Senate and the statement of the Director of the Census. The probabilities are that the gentleman's figures did not include the building and ground occupied by the old high school building, now occupied by the Southern Railway Company as its offices.

Mr. MADDEN. My understanding of the gentleman's statement was that the option price covered everything.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is my understanding.

Mr. KEIFER. There is no such provision in the bill about including buildings.

Mr. MADDEN. If it does not cover everything, and nobody knows anything about it, would it not be a good idea to post-pone the consideration of the question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will have read from the Clerk's desk a statement from the Director of the Census, and if the gentleman desires information and will give attention to it, it will probably satisfy him in every respect. It will not, if he does not listen.

Mr. BURLESON. Let us have it read.

Mr. MADDEN. I should be very glad to have it read. Mr. CRUMPACKER. I ask to have this letter of the Director of the Census read from the desk in my time.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I should like to ask the gentleman a question first. What consideration have the House Committee on the Census given to this matter?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Oh, the House committee have had it up. We had it up a year ago, and the Director of the Census came before the House committee and we decided that it was within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. We advised the Director of the Census to go to that committee. A bill was introduced, and he went before that committee, and that committee concluded that its policy was not to include in the bill it was engaged upon any public buildings in the District of Columbia. Therefore it was not reported upon. The Director of the Census came to me again early in the present session and asked me if there would be any impropriety in his presenting this matter to the Senate committee, and I said I thought there would be none; and so he went before the Senate committee and submitted his evidence, and the Senate committee incorporated this amendment in the bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. So that this plan has had the consideration of the House Committee on the Census?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It has.

Mr. DOUGLAS. And is approved by them?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.
Mr. HULL of Iowa. Does the gentleman believe that it is good policy to undertake to erect this building at the time the census is being taken? Would it not be better to wait until afterwards?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Either the gentleman was not listening or I was not speaking to any purpose at all.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I was temporarily absent from the Hall of the House

Mr. CRUMPACKER. My statement was that the building can be constructed two or three months before we will need it for the use of the new clerks.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It will not interfere with the present clerks in their work?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No, indeed; it does not involve the destruction of the present building. This is simply for an additional building, for the accommodation of the additional clerks, and will not disturb one clerk in the present building.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am glad to have this explanation. Now, one other question. Is this in accordance with the policy of trying to concentrate our public buildings on the Avenue, where they can be reached readily and seen by visitors? Does not the gentleman think it would be policy to put this building on the Avenue, or some place where it would not be off to one side?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. We do not want to put on the Avenue, as a matter of ornamentation, the proposed census building. We want to build it where it will be worth something for practical purposes. What would the gentleman say to a proposition to remove the present census building out onto the Avenue, to be viewed and admired by visitors? It is not a very sightly would want to keep it in the background.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If it was a question as to the present one, I would not want to have that moved onto the Avenue.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will say to the gentleman that the purpose in building this is the hope of saving in rent and in expense of administration during the temporary period of the census taking practically the entire cost of the property.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. You want a workshop. Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Speaker, we have not been able to hear very well over here. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether the proposed building is a temporary building for permanent employees or a permanent building for temporary employees?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It will be made of brick, probably, and it will have a roof on it, and it will be occupied by clerks in the Census Office. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR, BUREAU OF THE CENSUS,
Washington, January 16, 1909.

Dear Judge Crumpacker: As you are aware, the director has been called suddenly away from Washington. Before leaving the city he turned over to me a memorandum which he had prepared, setting forth his reasons for favoring the Senate building amendment to the Thirteenth Census bill. These reasons are as follows:

1. Congress is enacting a law for the Thirteenth Census, and enormously difficult undertaking. It commands that the main reports shall be completed and published on or before July 1, 1912. Unless this amendment prevails, Congress will be in the position of requiring that this work shal be done while refusing to provide the necessary facilities for doing it. It will be directing the Census Office to make bricks without straw.

In modern manufacturing the profit is made by labor-saving devices, and particularly by those which permit continuous processes; and it is so with the census. Unless this amendment is adopted, it will be necessary to house the Thirteenth Census clerks in four or five rented buildings, all of them ill adapted to the work and at long distances from each other. The "continuous process" will thus be impossible; the time and money lost in carting the work about the city from stage to stage in its progress will greatly exceed in amount the entire cost of constructing the proposed new building and purchasing the adjoining high school building.

II. On the ground of economy alone, therefore, the proposition should be approved, because it means an actual saving of money to the Government in the cost of the Thirteenth Census.

III. The saving in expedition is a consideration of even greater importance than that of economy. The Thirteenth Census can easily be completed in four months' less time if the work is concentrated in one locality. Section 2 of the pending bill requires that the main reports shall be completed and published during the decennial census period—that is, on or before July 1, 1912. The time allowed is hardly sufficient for the performing of this great work even under the mos direct methods are absolutely essential. Such methods are impossible in handling such a large number of employees unless the force is concentrated.

IV. Objection was made in the Senate to the purchase of this site, because it is low ground and in a malarial locality. The ground is low; but it is practically the same level as all the ground south of Pennsylvania avenue as far west as Fourteenth street, including that upon which the more recently constructed government buildings are located, and that upon which the new building for the State Department, the Department of Justice, and the Department of Commerce and Labor will be located. The Census building is situated at a greater distance from the river than any of the buildings named, and its elevation (15.27 feet) is better than that of either the municipal building (13.54 feet) or the Post-Office building (12.35 feet).

The experience of the Census office proves that it is not a malarial site. The comfort and health of the employees, so far as concerns temperature, circulation of air, and general sanitary conditions, can be as well safeguarded here as in the Post-Office building, the Smithsonian Institution, the new National Museum, the new Agricultural building, the new Municipal building, and many other buildings now rented by the Government.

V. The land has been included by the National Park Commission in the property which must ultimately be purchased and added to the government reservations. It is immediately contiguous to the Capitol Park, and whether it is finally utilized as a building site or as a park reservation, its immediate purchase is highly desirable, at the price named in the bill, which is materially less than the price paid by private parties for property immediately contiguous, with no improvements thereon. I refer especially to the Bliss purchases directly across the street on First street and on First and B streets.

VI. This price represents the cheapest land purchase made by the Government for any purpose, within the city limits, for

It is possible to obtain the property for this low cost only because of the option rights which the Government obtained under the original contract with the late Mr. Emery for a building for the Twelfh Census, an option which expires on July 1 next, and which can not be further an option which expires on July 1 next, and which can not be further renewed.

If Congress adopts this plan, every dollar of the appropriation will go to the actual present owners of the property.

VII. The proposition is an emergency proposition, which Congress would not be asked to approve if the need for immediate action were not imperative. The Census Office would like to be located upon some breeze-swept hillside, in the environs of Washington, in a perfectly equipped building, monumental in character, costing two or three million dollars. Such a scheme would contribute greatly to the architectural development of the national capital, and its realization would, incidentally, be pleasant for those in charge of the Thirteenth Census. This ideal solution of the problem may some day be reached, when the National Treasury is in a condition to justify its advocacy.

But it is a plan impossible of consideration, even if the question of money were not involved, in connection with the Thirteenth Census, for the reason that adequate quarters to promptly handle that census must be obtained within the next ten months.

The pending plan provides these quarters at a total cost to the Government not greater than the amount which will have to be paid out for rentals, and for the increase in the cost of the work, due to scattering it in five or six buildings, in distant parts of the city, every one of which will be miserably adapted to this particular work, and compel its production under the worst possible conditions, so far as concerns cost, health, light, comfort, and expedition. The census work demands large rooms, in which can be concentrated from 300 to 1,000 clerks, doing the same work, under the same supervision; and, so far as I am aware, no accommodations at all meeting these requirements can be rented anywhere in the city of Washington to-day at any price. I therefore repeat what was said in the director's annual report, that the plan proposed by the Senate amendment will involve a much. less money cost than the VIII. When the Thirteenth Census is completed, the Government will own this property at a total cost materially less than it will have incurred it it shall choose to continue to pay large rentals to private parties, permitting them to retain title to the property at the end of the transaction.

parties, permitting them to retain title to the property at the end of the transaction.

Thereafter the Government can make such use of it as seems best. It can devote it to park purposes; it can utilize it as the site of a monumental building, costing three or four millions; or it can utilize it for the taking of the Fourteenth Census at no aditional cost, if that shall seem wise ten years hence.

In the meanwhile, during the intercensal period, the Government can utilize the extra space for the housing of bureaus now occupying rented quarters. In order to secure proper accommodations, many branches of the service have been compelled to rent space in the high-priced modern office buildings. When it is considered that the rentail which the United States Government is paying for offices in this class of buildings ranges from $1 to $2 a year per square foot, it will be seen that this extra space afforded by the Census building during the intercensal period, which amounts to at least 100,000 square feet, has a very considerable money value. This saving alone will more than offset the cost of constructing the new building proposed.

IX. A site for a new building for the State Department, the Department of Justice, and the Department of Commerce and Labor has already been authorized and is now in process of acquirement. Upon it will be erected a monumental building, for which no appropriation has yet been voted, and which can not be ready for occupancy until long after the Thirteenth Census is completed and preparations for the Fourteenth Census are already under way. It is not possible to construct that building, with any regard for economy, so that it will meet the requirements of the census at the decennial periods, expanding suddenly from 600 clerks to, say, 4,000. It is fully understood by the department that provision for decennial census requirements can not be made in the plans for this building. There is therefore no conflict whatever between this plan and that for a monumental department building.

X. In a

X. In a word, the Senate amendment is a plain, straight, business proposition, approved by the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor, to meet an emergency situation precisely in the way that it would be met, under similar conditions, in commercial life. The Government has an opportunity to make a good bargain, practically on its own terms, under conditions which mean an actual annual saving of money, with possession at the lowest possible cost of desirable property, which it will ultimately buy, undoubtedly at a much higher cost.

XI. In presenting these arguments in favor of the proposed purchase, I trust that the fact will not be overlooked that the main, controlling, and conclusive argument in its favor is its advantage to the Thirteenth Census in the matter of economy, convenience, and expedition; also that, aside from this consideration, it is a good business proposition.

Very truly, yours,

W. S. ROSSITER,

W. S. ROSSITER, Acting Director.

Hon. Edgar D. Crumpacker, House of Representatives.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt].

Mr. Bartholdt. Mr. Speaker, as has been stated by the gentleman from Indiana, this is a proposition to spend $680,000, $430,000 to be devoted to the purchase of the present census property and $250,000 for the purchase of additional ground and the erection of an additional building for the use of the United States Census Bureau.

It is a matter that belongs to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The fact that it does not come from that committee, however, is not the fault of the Director of the Census or of anybody else. That gentleman appeared before our committee during the last session and presented this matter is a most urgent manner. But in view of the great demand made upon us by the country, it was impossible to include in the last omnibus public-building bill a provision to give to the census a permanent home. I do not say this provislon, but a provision for the census.

The committee gathered some information on the question, and I should like to give the House the benefit of that information.

I believe, from what I have learned, that the price for this property is an entirely fair one. There is, as far as we could learn, no real-estate speculation connected with it whatsoever, The present arrangement which we have with the owners of that property is also a very fair one. As I understand, the rental charges are only about 4 per cent on the original investment. Consequently, in my judgment, it could easily be con-tinued for an indefinite period of time without injury to anybody.

It is obvious to all who have looked into it that the present building does not comport in any sense with the dignity of the Government. It might harmonize geographically with the gen-eral plan for the beautification of Washington, but it certainly does not harmonize with our views architecturally.

I am very much afraid if the property is purchased we will never get a census building such as this Government ought to An addition will be erected, the same as the present one, and it will be practically an eyesore in the immediate vicinity of the Capitol.

The only question, Mr. Speaker, since there is no objection as to price, which is to be decided by the House now is whether we shall at this time, with a deficit staring us in the face, at a time when the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds must refuse to listen to all appeals from Members of this House for small additional appropriations for public buildings in their districts-whether at such a time it is wise and proper for us to make this large expenditure of money.

Where there is a will there is a way, and, in my judgment, it will be easy for us to rent additional facilities and accommodations for the census, and this plan appeals more to me because the additional building which is needed will only be needed for about three years and not for ten years. So that if we rent another building for three years, the next census can be taken under the present arrangement.

Mr. LANDIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana has seventeen minutes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will yield two minutes more to the gentleman from Missouri in order that he may answer a question by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS].

Mr. LANDIS. Does it occur to the gentleman that during the seven years when we would not need the space for the census force that that space could be utilized in placing people who are in rented quarters now? Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is the very fear I expressed. If the space is not needed for the census it will be used by some one else, and consequently we will have continually a building that we do not want, and which will not comport with the dignity of this Government.

Now, I want to refer to the statement that within the next census period we can save enough money to practically pay for this property. We are now paying $21,000; add to that $10,000 for a building which will be needed for the taking of the new census; that will bring the amount up to $30,000; in ten years that will amount to $300,000, while here we propose to appropriate $780,000 and have a building that no one wants.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to my genial friend from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] directed the attention of the House to the reading of a communication from the Census Bureau, which, in effect, stated that they needed this property for the accommodation of the clerks to be employed in taking the next census, and which stated that the option price on the property to be purchased was $3.31 per square foot. This $3.31 includes the purchase of a building now on the ground. At that price, the 118,000 square feet of ground to be purchased would amount to $290,580. The bill proposes to appropriate $430,000 for the purchase of this property, which would be, instead of $3.31 a square foot, $3.64\frac{1}{3} per square foot. What I do not understand how an option price can be but $3.31 per square foot while the price appropriated is $3.64\frac{1}{3} per square foot.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I want to give the reasons why I propose to vote for this amendment. The rent for census quarters in 1909 aggregates $256,000, and for this sum the Government has not anything to show in the way of tangible property. The approach of the coming decennial census necessitates a decision on the part of Congress whether it will continue the policy of renting property or owning it. If the present policy is continued it will cost the Government for the next nine years about $270,000, and at the end of that period the Government will not have anything to show for the expenditure of this large sum of money. It seems to me that good business judgment commends the purchase of the Census building, with the adjoining vacant lot and former high-school building, and the erection of a fireproof building, all of which together will cost only $674,000; and if this plan is followed ample space will be provided for the Thirteenth decennial census force, and for seven out of ten years the building will be available for other government uses. By the plan proposed $270,000 in rentals would be saved and a large amount in rentals for other government properties, or more than 60 per cent of the cost, and the degree to which the work of the Director of the Census would be simplified and facilitated can not be estimated. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the adoption of the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, and I do not believe that any wise purpose will be subserved in postponing the purchase and the erection of this building. It will come in time; it is absolutely necessary for the purposes of the Government; and the sooner the property is acquired and the sooner the building is put up the less it will cost.

Mr. CRIMPACKER, Mr. Speaker, inst a word in conclusion.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, just a word in conclusion in relation to the criticism made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Madden]. The amendment fixes the maximum appropriation for the purchase of the property, expecting, of course, that the price shall not be above the option. The criticism made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt] in relation to the advisability of making the purchase omits an important factor. In his calculation respecting the saving to the Government on account of the purchase he entirely overlooked the important factor suggested by the Director of the Census, that we save four months' time in doing the work if we purchase the property and put up the building, and the value of that time alone would more than pay the entire purchase price of all the property

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand that if we appropriate the money and buy this piece of ground, it means that the Census building shall stand at this point?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; it does not mean that. simply this: If we purchase this ground, make this improvement, we will provide facilities for all of the clerks for the Thirteenth Census, and in so doing we will save money enough to pay the entire purchase price. That is what it means, and Congress can do what it chooses with the property at any time in the future. The Government may at some time in the future build a magnificent marble-front building, like the District administrative building on Pennsylvania avenue, like the one the gentleman from Missouri has in his mind. That may be done some time in the future, when we have more money.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman advocate the erection of permanent census building at this point?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No; I do not. The proposed building is to cost not more than $250,000, and have room sufficient to accommodate 1,600 or 2,000 clerks during the temporary census period. The Government will then own the property, having gotten it practically for nothing.

Mr. LANGLEY. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana and the House to the fact that the director states that the building it is proposed to erect could be used for the Fourteenth Census also.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I want to make a suggestion. If the House adopts this provision I would suggest the necessity of an

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

Mr. HARDY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question for information.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I think I have the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I want to make this suggestion, that these plans should be drawn by the Treasury Department at least. There is no provision of that kind in the bill, and the gentleman is certainly interested in having that done.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am not going into the details of the proposition. The amendment can be voted up or down as it is. Mr. LANDIS. I will ask the gentleman to yield in order that I may correct a statement made by the gentleman from Illinois relative to the price.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, the option on the property that is occupied by the present Census building is $354,126. That property in dimension is 70 by 150 feet, making, all told, 10,500 feet. At $354,126 it would be $3.31 a foot, and the gentleman from Illinois was evidently led into his error by reason of the fact that he added the dimensions of the old high-school building property, on which we have an option for $70,000, and based his price per foot on that computation.

Mr. KEIFER. But, Mr. Speaker, the 118,000 square feet mentioned in the bill, costing $430,000, makes $3.64 a square foot.

Mr. LANDIS. But the gentleman has not figured on the right

Mr. KEIFER. I figure that exactly. Mr. HARDY. The question I wanted to ask the gentleman was, Who pays the insurance and keeps up the repairs on this Census building for which the Government pays some $20,000 rent per annum?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, I do not know, but I presume the owners.

Mr. HARDY. You do not know whether the Government does the repairs or not?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not know whether the Government does or not, but I presume the owners keep up the outside and the Government keeps it up on the inside, the usual practice and, I think, the law in the absence of any specific contract.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Who owns the building?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The owners of the land. Now, Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was or-

Mr. BARTHOLDT. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. BARTHOLDT. If this is adopted by the House, the previous question having been ordered, will the conference committee be allowed to amend this section at all or not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is to recede and concur, and if that should be adopted there is nothing left to be done. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, that the House do recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 26 and concur therein.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. Butler) there were-ayes 73, noes 32.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, the other amendment is a pro forma amendment relating to the numbering of a section, and therefore I move that it be agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Change section 33 to section 34.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is upon the motion to recede and concur.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. For the purpose of making a privileged motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will suspend for a moment. The Chair will call attention to the bill S. 4712 and the bill H. R. 16374 on the Union Calendar, bills identical in form having passed; and without objection, the Committee of the Whole House will be discharged from their further consideration, and the bills will lie upon the table. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk will report the titles of the bills.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 4712. An act to provide for the care of persons adjudged insane in the District of Alaska.

A bill (H. R. 16374) to confirm to the Wahiawa Water Company, of Hawali, the right of way for irrigation purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And also the following bills on the House Calendar, having been passed in another form, will be, without objection, laid on the table. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk will report titles of the bills.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3966) ratifying chapters 57 and 61 of the session laws of the twenty-third Arizona legislative assembly, providing for the issuance of bonds by Mohave County.

A bill (H. R. 16964) ratifying an act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona providing for the erection of a court-house and jail at Yuma, in Yuma County, Territory of Arizona.

A bill (H. R. 13097) to enable the city of Phoenix, in Maricopa County, Ariz., to issue bonds of said municipality for the purpose of funding its floating indebtedness incurred prior to July 1, 1906.

John resolution (H. J. Res. 94) disapproving certain laws enacted by the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico.

A bill (H. R. 16643) to ratify an act of the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii authorizing the manufacture, distribution, and supply of electric light and power in the district of Lahaina, county of Maui, Territory of Hawaii.

A bill (H. R. 16644) to ratify and confirm an act of the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii authorizing the manufacture and distribution of electric light and power in the district of Walluku, on the island of Maui, Territory of Hawaii.

A bill (H. R. 3963) ratifying an act of the Arizona legislature providing for the erection of a court-house at St. Johns, in Apache County, Ariz.

viding for the erection of a court-house at St. Johns, in Apache County, Arlz.

A bill (H. R. 3962) authorizing the county of Gila, Ariz., to issue bonds for the completion of the court-house and jall.

A bill (H. R. 19364) ratifying bonds of road district No. 1, Maricopa County, Arlz.

A bill (H. R. 19411) authorizing the incorporated town of Valdez, Alaska, to issue bonds to the amount of $15,000 for the purpose of constructing dams and dikes for protection against glacier streams.

S. 4748. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to define and punish crimes in the district of Alaska and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said district," approved March 3, 1899.

A bill (H. R. 21311) to ratify and confirm an act of the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii authorizing the manufacture and distribution of electric light and power in the district of Walluku, on the island of Maui, Territory of Hawaii.

A bill (H. R. 21312) to ratify an act of the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii.

A bill (H. R. 17982) to authorize the issue of bridge bonds by the county of Bernailllo, in the Territory of New Mexico.

A bill (H. R. 19004) authorizing the Territory of New Mexico to sell and transfer certain school lands to the town of Portales, N. Mex.

A bill (H. R. 19604) restricting the practice of medicine and surgery in the Territory of Alaska.

S. 6417. An act to amend sections 4467 and 4468 of the Revised Statutes, relating to lists of passengers on steam vessels.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill H. R. 26915, an act making appropriations for the support of the army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910; and, pending that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Hay] if we can not agree on fixing the time when general debate shall close?

Mr. HAY. I understood it would be three hours on a side. Mr. HULL of Iowa. That will be satisfactory, then. I ask unanimous consent that general debate shall close in six hours three hours to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAYl and three hours by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the motion for the House to resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the army appropriation bill. The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 26915, the army appropriation bill, with

Mr. Perkins in the chair.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the bill as it is reported to the House needs but little explanation. It carries an increased amount over the current fiscal year, made necessary very largely by the increased pay given the army when the pay was increased for the officers and the enlisted men, and by the fact that to-day the army is more nearly up to the number authorized by law for its minimum force by some twelve thousand or more men than it was last year. I think there is only about five thousand of a shortage in the enlisted force at this time, and there was something near eighteen thousand or twenty thousand of a shortage at the time the bill for this fiscal year was passed.

I do not intend, Mr. Chairman, to take up the time to-night in discussing the bill. I do not know that I will take up any time during the general debate, but if I do, I prefer it to come a little later. The last provision of the bill, in regard to the general staff, is, of course, clearly subject to a point of order, and if no one else discusses it, I do not know that I care to discuss it at all until it comes before the House in such shape that the House can act upon it. I believe the provision is right. My object in going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to-night was largely because I understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] desired to make a statement.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman answer one question along the line he spoke of in the bill?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I notice the amount proposed for the pay of enlisted men is raised from $10,000,000 last year to $15,000,000 and something over this year, an increase of 50 per cent. Is the gentleman able to tell now how much of that is caused by the increase in the number of men in the army and how much is caused by the increase in the pay of the enlisted men?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman that I could not answer as to that, but there is a large increase on account of the increased number of men. There is another increase that comes from the increased pay for reenlistment, that we gave as increased pay as an inducement for them to reenlist. It is not any part of the bonus of three months' pay; but reenlistment, up to a certain point, carries with it an increase of pay, both by the noncommissioned officers and the privates; but just how much that will be I do not know. If the gentleman desires it, I can get it accurately from the Pay Department.

Mr. MANN. It is a very interesting proposition, where there is an increase of 50 per cent in total cost, to know how much is caused by our legislation of last year and how much by the increase in the growth of the army.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman that, as he will remember, last year we gave $7,000,000 in a lump sum, to be distributed over these increases where we could not agree on just how much there might be-an amendment that was put on in the Senate.

Mr. MANN. I know; but that was to cover the increase in pay? Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What I wanted to get at was this: The bill that was brought in last year and which became law proposed ten millions for the pay of enlisted men on the then basis. Now the proposition is fifteen millions and something over. Of course I know a large share is the increase in pay, a large part for the increased number of enlisted men in the army, but if it is feasible I should like to get the details.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think it is feasible. I gave the gentleman the estimates. The estimates were made upon the full number of men authorized by law; and we deduct something over a million and a half from the estimates on the ground that the army would not be entirely filled up; that while the recruiting may keep it up to the present state, yet the Government is not making an effort to get in every man it can, and quite a number of the recruiting officers have been recalled. So we cut off a million and a half from estimates for the full pay of the army. If every man authorized by the order of the President fixing the peace basis was enlisted, there would be a deficiency in this item.

If the gentleman from Virginia wants to occupy some of his time, I would like him to do so.

Mr. HAY. I will ask the gentleman to use some time. tlemen on this side who desire time do not desire it now. I will yield the gentleman an hour of my time.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holliday.]

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I will consume twenty minutes, but I want to submit a few remarks upon the present condition of the army, in which I think the American people are interested. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, when the law was passed or the rule adopted by which men were put out of the active service when they attained the age of 64 years. But whenever it was done and however it was done, it seems to me to have been very bad policy indeed. As it stands now, at the time a man reaches the age when he is best fitted to serve the country the Government dispenses with his serv-The only argument I have ever heard in support of the proposition is that this gives a better opportunity for the promotion of the younger officers, who might otherwise have to wait long for increase of pay and advancement in rank. Well, Mr. Chairman, if the younger officers do not now have enough pay and rank commensurate with their abilities, I am willing to give both in some other way. I think it is wrong to increase the pay and at the same time impair the efficiency of the service. It is poor business policy. Whoever heard of a railroad company that discharged its trained and qualified engineers in order to make places for its firemen?

Mr. Chairman, every student of history knows that when Von Moltke laid France prostrate at the feet of Germany he had passed beyond the age at which an American general would have been retired; and if the same rule had applied in the German Empire as applies in the American Army, Von Moltke would have been sitting around cooling his heels while younger officers might have lost the war that he carried to so successful

We know that in the case of England, when it found itself in trouble with the gallant Boers in Africa, when army after army had been crippled and demoralized, the English Government looked around for a man of sufficient capacity to lead its army to victory, and they found him in the person of General Roberts, who had long passed the age at which an American general would have been placed upon the retired list. I may also add that in the war with Spain the laurels won by the officers there were won by men who had participated in the civil war in the United States, and consequently none of them could have been young men.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that some policy should be adopted by which, when the Government educates a man and trains him for service, it ought to have the benefit of his services as long as he is able to do proper and efficient work. I remember I had the pleasure a few years ago of passing some weeks in company with a distinguished general, a man whose fame stands high in this country. As I looked at his stalwart frame, as I saw him at work and listened to his talk, I felt absolutely convinced there was never a day nor an hour in his life in which he was better fitted to command an army than he was upon the day that he retired from the service.

I suppose, however, there is no remedy for this. It has got started in that way, and I suppose it will continue in that way. If it serves no other purpose, it gives a chance for more promotions.

But, Mr. Chairman, if we can not keep these trained men in the service on the active list, then we ought to utilize to a much greater extent the retired list. The pay of officers on the retired list is growing, not gradually, but by leaps and bounds, and if the present system keeps on it will only be a question of time when it will take more money to pay the men on the retired list than the men on the active list. If we must have them (we have got them, and I do not complain of it, for they were all gallant men and most of them retired against their will), let us utilize them in their present positions. We have a very large number of men on the active list who are engaged in detached A number of them are teaching school. A good many more of them are acting as recruiting agents, a duty which cer-"tainly does not require great physical strength. They are used for a number of purposes. I think we ought by legislative enactment to provide that the men on the retired list should perform these duties and the active officers kept with their commands.

In the American Army to-day there is 1 commissioned officer on an average to every 18 enlisted men, and a bill has passed the Senate and is now pending in this House which, if enacted into law, will bring up the ratio to 1 officer to every 15 enlisted men. Of course, the new men will go in as second lieutenants, boosting the other men up. They will stay in the army a few years, the Government will get a few years' service out of them, and then they will go upon the retired list. Their service to the Government will cease within a reasonable time, but their pay, like Tennyson's brook, will go on forever. It seems to me that this is a waste of the people's money. There is a feeling of unrest throughout the country over the enormous expenditures that are growing in every direction in this country.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like to know how many have been retired in the last year or two.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I am not able to give the gentleman the figures. I am simply stating a general proposition.

Now, we ought to save every penny to the country that we can, and when we educate a man at the expense of the taxpayers of the country, we ought to get out of him all the service that we can. We ought only to dispense with his services when he ceases to be useful. Of course every time when it is desired to increase the army or the navy somebody starts a war scare, and we turn pale over the prospect of an invasion by some great power, for which we are not prepared, and we vote all the money that is needed, and then the war scare gradually subsides. I am opposed to increasing the army at this time, and yet it is increased by little things that they keep asking for all along the line. It would not be good policy to go to the country and ask that a great many new regiments be recruited, but, indirectly and remotely, they manage to get more officers in the service every year; and after a while, when we get as many officers as there are enlisted men, we will have to recruit a big army in order to furnish the officers something to do. Against that I desire to protest.

And in this connection I wish to say that a disposition to spend money on the army, the navy, and everything else is growing at a tremendous rate in this country. This is probably the last time that I shall trespass upon the indulgence of my fellow-

Members. I am going to leave this body—

Mr. MANN. Very much to our regret. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I simply wish to remind you that there are still a few people in the United States who do not hold any office. They do not reap the emoluments so lavishly handed out by Congress, but they pay the bills and bear the burdens; and when you add vastly to salaries, to armaments, to navies, and armies somebody has got to pay the bills. It seems to me that sometimes in the debates of this House we look too steadily at the man who is the beneficiary of these various bills and forget about the people who pay the money and foot the bills. [Applause.] I suppose we will be called upon in a few days to vote largely to increase the salaries of the men who are already the best paid of any men in the United States. I suppose the proposition will go through. I have never known a proposition to increase a salary to fail in this House.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Other Members may know of it, but I do not know of it. I want to say that I for one am going to stand for economy. I am going back to my constituents, I am going to mingle with the laboring men, the toilers among whom I have lived for so many years, and I want to be able to tell them that so far as my feeble voice was raised it was to lighten their burdens rather than to make them heavier.

We have a committee of very able men who are now devising ways and means for the purpose of raising money for this country, and then there are several hundred men who are equally busy devising ways of getting rid of it as fast as we raise it. [Laughter.]

We ought to call a halt somewhere in this matter of extrava-The people are demanding it. There is a feeling of unrest throughout the country growing out of it. Why, in the matter of raising these salaries they will come before the House in a few days, and one argument is that these men must have something with which to entertain. Gentlemen of the commit-tee, I have read the Constitution a few times, and I have never found any provision in it requiring any public official to do any entertaining whatever. I have read most of the general laws passed by Congress, and I have found no law requiring a man to expend money in lavish entertainments. And yet the people who pay the bills, the people who bear the burden, are expected to come forward with the cash to enable these men to dispense hospitality which they think is necessary for their social position. It is said that the judges of the country are unable to live and entertain properly on the salaries that they now receive.

I have heard it argued that we would get better judges and stronger men if we should pay them more money. I do not believe in the argument. I do not remember exactly what John Marshall was paid when he was Chief Justice of the United States, but my judgment is that his entire salary would not pay for more than one modern swallowtail dinner. And yet we have not improved upon John Marshall from that day down to this. [Laughter and applause.]

When we increase salaries the result is not to get better men, but to make a bigger scramble for the places. That has always been the result. So it is in all these matters. Let us practice economy; let us see that the people get a dollar's worth of benefit for every dollar expended. Let us not waste the money on the army or the navy.

Let me say to you, and I betray no confidence in saying it, that whenever a proposition comes in here to increase the pay of the army, they say it ought to be increased because the navy gets more than the army; and as soon as we bring the army up to the navy, the navy comes in and says the navy ought to have a little more than the army; and so we keep it up by this general process, a species of perpetual motion, and the Lord only knows when it will stop.

It is time to call a halt in all these matters. I observe that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], the able chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, does his best every ession to keep the appropriations within reasonable bounds. The House generally runs over him, and what little is left of his mangled remains disappears when the bills go over to the other end of the Capitol. [Laughter.]

Let us forget during the closing days of this session to consider alone the beneficiaries of the measures to spend money, and let us give some consideration to the men who raise the money which we so lavishly disburse on the floor of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to interrupt the gentleman a moment. I did not interrupt him to answer the question he asked in reference to when the limit of retirement was fixed for army officers, but I desire to say that long before the limit was fixed for the retirement of the army officers there was a limit of time, 62 years, for officers in the navy. In 1882, as I recollect, at the suggestion of William Tecumseh Sherman, who was himself to become a retired officer, the limit of 64 years was made for officers in the army. The legislation came in the Forty-seventh Congress in that way, and General Sherman himself was one of the first to be retired under that limitation.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I accept the explanation. I do not care who is responsible for it. I might say that the gentleman from Ohio who furnishes the information was himself a gallant and meritorious officer in the last war with Spain, and while I can not give his exact age, if he had been in the Regular Army he would not have had any command at all [laughter]; and so with General Wheeler and others who rendered such conspicuous service.

It only illustrates my argument. General Sherman was a great and good man. In his definition of war I most cordially concur, but I am not willing to acquiesce in every detail that

Let us think about that. We will probably have no general bill this session, but some time it will come. My proposition is not to keep a man in service after he ceases to be useful.

Mr. FOCHT. How about the Government paying for the support of the state troops? That is the next step, is it not?
Mr. HOLLIDAY. Yes; we have taken the militia under our consideration, and it will only be a question of time until that will be on the retired list. A great many men have aspirations for different things, but there seems to be a practical unanimity of aspiration to get on the retired list.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Chairman, I would say that at the time of the Spanish war my frisky young constituent, Gen. William H. Davis, then about 80 years old, tendered his services to the Government and they were refused, and the same afternoon he called to pay his respects to Gen. James Longstreet, then about the same age, the latter using an ear trumpet in order that he might hear what was said. Those two vigorous youths declared that it was perfectly absurd, this policy of the Government in not accepting them on account of the years they had reached. [Laughter.]
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Perkins, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 26915. the army appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BURROWS submitted an amendment providing that after June 30, 1909, clerks and carriers at first-class post-offices shall be promoted successively to the sixth grade, and clerks and carriers at second-class post-offices shall be promoted successively to the fifth grade, intended to be proposed by him to the postoffice appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DICK submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $85,000 for the pay of all letter carriers in first-class post-offices eligible for promotion to the sixth grade, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the post-office appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $150,000 for the pay of all post-office clerks eligible for promo-tion to the sixth grade, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the post-office appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and ordered to be

INSPECTION AND GRADING OF GRAIN.

Mr. BOURNE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 382) to provide for the inspection and grading of grain entering into interstate commerce and to secure uniformity in standards and classification of grain, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

CANAL TO THE GULF OF MEXICO.

Mr. MILTON submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. C. Res. 82), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made to ascertain the most feasible and practicable route to build a canal or inland waterway on the shores of the Gulf of Mexico connecting St. Andrews Bay, in the State of Florida, and the Mississippi River near New Orleans, in the State of Louisiana, with a view to determining the advantage, best location, and probable cost of such canal or inland waterway, and to submit a plan and an estimate for such improvements.

DISTRICT JAIL, WORKHOUSE, ETC.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, at the last session we passed legislation empowering the President to appoint a commission to investigate the jail, workhouse, and so forth, of the District of Columbia. A commission, consisting of Mr. Justice Stafford, of the district court, Mr. John Joy Edson, and Mr. Robert V. La Dow, was appointed by the President. After visiting various jails, workhouses, and penitentiaries in many of the cities of the country, that commission has made a very illuminating report, which, if the recommendations are adopted, will result in removing from the District of Columbia a condition that is a reproach to civilization.

The document was ordered printed in the usual number, but there is a very great demand coming in for it and the com-mission desires additional copies. I ask unanimous consent that 1,000 additional copies of the document be printed, 500 for the commission and 500 copies for the document room of the Senate.

There being no objection, the order was reduced to writing and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That 1,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 648, Sixtieth Congress, second session, "Jail, workhouse, etc., in the District of Columbia," 500 for the use of the Senate document room and 500 for the use of the commission appointed to investigate the jail, workhouse, etc., in the District of Columbia, be printed.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I gave notice yesterday that at the conclusion of the routine morning business to-day I would move to take up the bill (8, 5729) to correct the records and authorize the reenlistment of certain noncommissioned officers and enlisted men belonging to Companies B, C, and D of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry who were discharged without honor under Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, November 9, 1906, and the restoration to them of all rights of which they have been deprived on account thereof.

I overlooked the fact that the Senator from Oregon was proceeding with the omnibus claims bill under a unanimous consent agreement. In view of that, I will wait until he is through with that bill before making the motion.

ACCIDENTS TO RAILROAD EMPLOYEES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed. and the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over under the rule, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 267, submitted on the 27th instant by Mr. Clarke of Arkansas, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and it hereby is, directed to send to the Senate a statement showing the number of railroad employees killed and injured each year since June 30, 1901, from the following causes:

1. Lack of, insecure, and improperly applied sill steps;
2. Inefficient and improperly applied hand brakes;
3. Insecure and improperly applied ladders;
4. Lack of, insecure, and improperly applied roof hand holds or grabitons; and irons; and

5. Lack of, insecure, and improperly applied running boards.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, there is so much of labor and cost involved in the resolution that I think the committee having charge of such matters should consider it. Therefore I move that it be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas, Mr. President, it was not my purpose, in the introduction of the resolution, to call for the employment of additional clerks or to call for the collection of information on a new subject. The fact is that the Interstate Commerce Commission are in possession of the information called for by the resolution. But I realize the force of the suggestion made by the Senator from Maine, and I have no objection to the resolution going to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, with the understanding that it will make a timely investigation as to whether or not it will involve an additional outlay of money in the employment of new clerks. If it does not, the information called for will be very useful in legislating upon the question of the relation between the employees and employers of the railroads of the country.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. Burrows and Mr. Balley tellers on the part of the Senate, authorized by the con-current resolution of the two Houses providing for the opening and counting of the electoral votes for President and Vice-President of the United States on February 10, 1909.

CITIZENSHIP OF NAVAL DESERTERS.

Mr. PERKINS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5473) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy in certain cases to mitigate or remit the loss of rights of citizenship imposed by law upon deserters from the naval service, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House and agree to the same.

GEORGE C. PERKINS, J. H. GALLINGER, B. R. TILLMAN, Managers on the part of the Senate. ERNEST W. ROBERTS, A. F. DAWSON, L. P. PADGETT, Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. M. C. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day, January 29, 1909, approved and signed the following bill:

S. 2024. An act to amend an act authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to grant to the Veteran Volunteer Firemen's Association use of certain property in the city of Washington, approved March 2, 1891.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 25396. An act for relief of applicants for mineral surveys was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

H. J. Res. 226. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for use at the festival encampment of the North American Gymnastic Union, to be held at Cincinnati, Ohio, in June, 1909, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate House bill 15372, under the unanimous-consent agreement.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15372) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the "Bowman" and the "Tucker" acts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Fulton].

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the last item in the bill that was put in yesterday, the Hall case. I have since obtained additional information in regard to that claim. I find it has been in the Supreme Court of the United States; and Mr. Justice Peckham, in deciding the case, said:

Under the holdings of the Court of Claims and of this court, it is perfectly apparent that the result of the passage of the act of February 13, 1895, was simply to bestow a pure gratuity to the amount of the difference between the contract price and the board rates upon those persons included within its provisions. There is no element of a legal or an equitable claim, within the proper meaning and signification of those words, on the part of any of those who will profit by the act of February 13, 1895, against the municipal authorities of the District.

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in 1895, Mr. Dockery, of Missouri, when the claim was up in the House, pre-sented a statement of the number of claims that would be opened if this class of claims were allowed, and that it would put a burden on the District of Columbia of more than a million and a half dollars.

I do not think this is a proper claim to be allowed. It opens a class of cases that ought not to be passed on by Congress at this time.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

Mr. FULITON. I regret that I was unable to hear the Senator as to the distinct ground of his objection to the item.

Mr. KEAN. I object to the item because it opens a large class of claims against the District of Columbia that have been in controversy for a long number of years and will entail on the District of Columbia an expense of about a million and a half dollars; and the Supreme Court of the United States has decided against it.

With the permission of the Senate, I will have incorporated in the RECORD the report of the auditor of the District of Columbia on these claims, made in 1902.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Letter of the auditor of the District of Columbia to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in relation to bill for the relief of Julia L. Hall, being S. 1308, and also H. R. 1727, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, now pending as No. 615 on the Private Calendar of the House of Representatives.

Office of the Auditor of the District of Columbia, Washington, March 17, 1902.

COI. R. A. Howard, special assistant attorney, saw his opportunity, and made the point that as the allowance of board rates in excess of contract rates by the act of February 13, 1895, constituted a gratuity, interest could not be claimed prior to the date of the act itself. The Court of Claims overruled this contention, but he appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States. This august body entertained appeals in the cases of Contractor Hall and three others of like character, and under date of February 15, 1887, reversed the Court of Claims, sustaining thereby the position of Special Assistant Attorney Howard. Mr. Justice Peckham delivered the opinion of the court, and in passing upon the question of interest took occasion also to characterize the claims themselves, including that of Contractor Hall, as follows:

"Under the holdings of the Court of Claims and of this court it is perfectly apparent that the result of the passage of the act of [February 13] 1895 was simply to bestow a pure gratuity to the amount of the difference between the contract price and the board rates upon those persons included within its provisions. There is no element of a legal or an equitable claim, within the proper meaning and signification of those words, on the part of any of those who will profit by the act of [February 13] 1895 against the municipal authorities of the District. The act bestowed a pure and simple gift."

The report of the Committee on Claims, which accompanied Senate bill 1308, opens with a biographical sketch of the late claimant and his wife, which is interesting from a personal and literary standpoint, but, if I may be pardoned for differing with its honorable author, is irrelevant and without value as a demonstration of the justice or equity of the claim. Its averment that the contractor had formerly been a good soldier and that his widow's pension is only $8 per month is doubtless true, but it would be more in keeping with a memorial for increase of pension from the United States Treasury than as an a

The COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, this item was inserted on the motion of the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller], whose explanation seemed to make it clear that it is a just and meritorious claim. It has been some months since I went over the facts, and they are not very clear in my mind. I will ask the Senator from Colorado, as he is more familiar with the claim, to explain it.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, Captain Hall was a resident of this city. He is now dead. He made a contract with the proper authorities for furnishing a certain quantity of stone from a quarry that he owned in the immediate neighborhood. He furnished the stone according to the contract. He was to have been paid in money. When the proper time came for payment they could not pay him in money, and turned over to him a lot of bonds, I do not know but that they might be called warrants, which he sold at a discount. Then he brought his suit in the Court of Claims, and the Court of Claims rendered a judgment in his favor for the amount that was due him for the delivery of the stone. He claimed also that he was entitled to the loss he had sustained by accepting the warrants instead of cash. The claim was for what the Government had not paid

The court rendered a decision and with it gave him interest on the debt the District Government had not paid him. The case was reversed on the ground that he was not entitled to interest. But the judgment that is here now is not for interest, it is not for discount on notes or warrants, but it is for the stone he delivered under a contract and for which he was not paid.

Mr. KEAN. If the Senator will allow me-

Mr. TELLER. In a minute. The matter has been before Congress for a good many years. It outlived Captain Hall, and I presume it will outlive his wife, if she is not very long lived at least

Mr. KEAN. I hope it will outlive everyone and never be

Mr. TELLER. There was never any reason presented to the Senate and there is none now why the claim should not be paid. It is as honest a debt as any man ever owed at a bank. judgment is not on the discount—the judgment is for materials furnished.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. TELLER. I think, after having examined this case for the last fifteen years, I know as much about it as the Senator from New Jersey does

Mr. KEAN, Probably the Senator knows more,

Mr. TELLER. I have not come prepared to give all the data on a matter that has been pending here and has passed out of my knowledge. I know that this is a claim that ought to be paid. It has been reported favorably by not only the Court of Claims, but it has been reported favorably by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KEAN. And decided adversely by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. TELLER. This case has never been before the Supreme Court.

Mr. KEAN. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. TELLER. It was decided on the ground that there was no interest to be allowed. That is the only point that was decided. They reversed the case because it allowed interest. There is no interest included in the claim as it is now made.

Mr. President, this is all I can say about it. If, after the committee has disposed of these cases, one Senator who knows nothing about the case is to be heard against the committee and against the Court of Claims, and, if I was the Senator having charge of the bill, I think I would abandon it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this is rather a serious matter. The question before the Supreme Court was the question of interest, but the Supreme Court took occasion, or Mr. Justice Peckham did, to characterize the claim and all claims similar to it as being without merit.

I am not prepared this morning to go into a discussion of this question, and I think it ought to go over. I find that it was discussed at length in the House in 1897. I want to go over that discussion, Mr. President, and see precisely what was said at that time.

There are a great many claims against the District of Columbia pending—old claims relating to contracts and to change of grade in the District—but they have as a rule been decided adversely. If they are to be reopened, the District of Columbia will be bankrupted. I have reason to believe that if this claim is allowed, the District of Columbia will have claims on its hands of a similar nature involving possibly $2,000,000.

If it is a just claim it ought to be paid, but with all due deference to the distinguished Senator from Colorado, who is in the habit of looking carefully into matters and who always has the courage of his convictions, and I have no doubt believes precisely what he says regarding this matter, I think we ought to hold our breath and look into it with great care, to ascertain the exact questions involved and determine, if we can, the justice and equity of the claim.
It seems that Captain Hall entered into a contract to do certain work for contract prices, but twenty-three years afterwards, because of certain legislation, the claim was set up that he ought to have been paid what was known as "board rates." Again, he accepted the certificates that were presented to him and receipted in full—at least, I assume he receipted. He accepted the certificates and afterwards sold them at a discount.

Ordinarily, if I went into a transaction of that kind, I should not go back on the man I dealt with because the securities were not as good as they ought to have been. The District was in a peculiar situation at that time, and it made the best terms it could with those who had claims against it for contracts that had been entered into for public works.

I am not this morning prepared to say whether this claim ought to be allowed or not, but I think, Mr. President, that no action should be taken upon it this morning, because we can reach it when it goes into the Senate by a motion to reconsider. We can then discuss the matter to our satisfaction. It may be that we will all agree that it ought to be paid, but I want at least to enter a caveat to the extent that I wish to look into it, and perhaps I will have something to say about it before it finally goes into the bill.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, this is an old claim, but it is a claim that has been before Congress every year since the claim arose. It has received the attention of not only the Committee on Claims, but it has received the attention of the court under the control and belonging to the government of this jurisdiction. That court rendered a judgment in Captain Hall's favor. They erred only in rendering a judgment in favor of interest in addition to the other, and on that the Supreme Court reversed the decision. That is all the court had to do with the case, and if the court went beyond that they went out of their jurisdiction. It was a mere question, "Was the Cap-tain entitled to interest on that claim?" The court said he was not, and they did not reverse the judgment except in that particular.

Mr. President, if every claim that comes up in the bill after it has passed the committee is to be submitted to the Senate and discussed in the Senate, there will be no end to the discussion; and it seems to me a Senator who gets up and says he knows nothing about it, and does not know whether it is right or not, ought not to be heard in preference to the committee and the court itself which decided it, and to which it was referred by the friends of the administration and Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I beg to say that I have not admitted that I know nothing about it. I have in my hand a letter from the auditor of the District of Columbia which tells a good deal about this claim; but as between the views of the auditor of the District of Columbia and the Senator from Colorado and the committee that reported it, I want to try to ascertain the facts, and I think I am entitled to that degree of consideration in this matter. I have not interfered with this bill, Mr. President. In my judgment there are hundreds of claims in the bill that might well have been contested in this Chamber. I am of opinion that it is about time Congress stopped even giving consideration to a large class of claims such as are in the bill. But I did not feel it incumbent upon me, being busy with other matters, to halt the consideration of the bill, and I have not done so. However, as chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, having some responsibilities in that regard, I think I have a right to be heard after I have made an investigation of a claim that is of very serious consequence to this District and that if allowed would involve the District in an expenditure that it can ill afford to make. is a just claim, I shall have nothing more to say about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the pending amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Fulton]. Mr. FULTON. Which amendment is it to which the Chair now refers?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill

Section 14 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887—

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I desire to change the amendment I offered, proposing to amend the Tucker and Bowman acts, and, without having it read, I think I can explain it. amendment as I first proposed it is at the desk. It provides for the repeal entirely of section 14 of the Tucker Act. That section provides for the sending of any bill pending before Congress for findings, other than a bill for pension, to the Court of Claims, and it is under that section that these war claims, so called, go to the Court of Claims. There are a great many bills which should properly go to the Court of Claims for findings, matters involving contracts or contractual relations with the Government, and various characters of claims. The desire is to preclude the sending to that court of so-called "war claims." Hence I propose now simply to amend section 14 by adding thereto what I shall read. After setting out the section exactly as it now appears in existing law, the amendment reads:

as it now appears in existing law, the amendment reads:

That section 4 of the act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the executive departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, be, and said section 4 is hereby, repealed, and section 3 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 3. The jurisdiction of said court shall not extend to or include any claim against the United States growing out of the destruction of or damage to property by the army or navy during the war for the suppression of the rebellion, or for the use and occupation of real estate by, or for stores, subsistence, or supplies taken by or furnished to any part of the military or naval forces of the United States in the operations of said forces during the said war at the seat of war; nor shall the said court have jurisdiction of any claim against the United States which is now barred by virtue of the provisions of any law of the United States: Provided, That all claims for supplies or stores taken by or furnished to any part of the military or naval forces of the United States for their use during the war for the suppression of the rebellion, heretofore referred or transmitted to the Court of Claims by virtue of and pursuant to the provisions of said act of March 3, 1883, or which shall be so referred prior to the 1st day of January, 1910, may be prosecuted in and shall be heard, determined, and reported by said court in all respects as fully and completely as if said section 4 of said act of March 3, 1883, had not been repealed or said section 3 thereof had not been amended by this act."

Section 4 of the Bowman Act I propose to repeal, and sec-

Section 4 of the Bowman Act I propose to repeal, and section 3 amended. As section 3 is in the existing law, it reads as follows:

Mr. TILLMAN. Right there—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. FULTON. I do. Mr. TILLMAN. Do Do I understand the Senator to mean by the amendment which he proposes to bar the Court of Claims from considering any claims for subsistence or the destruction of property at all?

Mr. FULTON. During the civil war at the seat of war. That is it exactly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yet this bill and perhaps bills which have been passed heretofore have been in recognition of the justice of those claims, and they have been paid. Now, if there should be some belated instance, why should the Senator within the twelve months, which he is going to allow as the time within which claims must be presented and passed, shut those out?

I have in mind, Mr. President, a case of this kind. Opposite the city of Savannah there is a large rice plantation. Sherman's army crossed into South Carolina they landed some of their troops on that rice plantation. There were several thousand bushels of rice on hand—the entire crop of a yearwhich was taken by the army for subsistence. That rice belonged to three orphan children, the eldest of whom-a girl, I think—was 11 years old. Those children were certainly not disloyal to the Union, for whatever might have been in their blood and in their environment of rebellious feeling, to use the pet phrase here, those children were certainly incompetent and entirely innocent of any resistance to the national authorities. Those children have been trying for years, with my assistance here, to get evidence as to the taking of that property, through the affidavits of some of the soldiers who did it. I would ask the Senator from Oregon whether he would bar those children from bringing their suit and having the evidence sifted, to see whether it was competent or not to allow their claim. I simply want to ask whether that case would be barred.

Mr. FULTON. If the Senator is through, I will answer. My answer is this: Taking away the jurisdiction of the court to consider these claims does not debar Congress from passing any act for the relief of any citizen for any purpose.

Mr. TILLMAN. One Congress can not bind another. I know

Mr. FULTON. And if the claim the Senator describes is one of exceptional hardship and of exceptional merit, no doubt Congress will provide for it by special act; but what I seek to stop is the flow of this stream-

Mr. TILLMAN. And I am in hearty sympathy with the effort to stop it and let the gates down.

Mr. FULTON. To the Court of Claims freighted all the time with claims that are based on fraud and perjury, to provide against which we are helpless.

Mr. TILLMAN. I say I sympathize with the effort, because we on this side are sufferers in endeavoring to aid our constituents when we are appealed to.

Mr. FULTON. I realize that. Mr. TILLMAN. And I am anxious to have a limitation fixed, within which these claims shall not be considered. I merely wanted to know if the incorporation of the amendment which the Senator from Oregon proposes would preclude these orphan children, who are now grown men and women—I think one or two of them are dead, but I know one who is not and who is now along in the fifties-would those children be permitted to have their case brought here and sent to the Court of Claims, or would this amendment prevent it?

Mr. FULTON. It would. Mr. TILLMAN. Let me ask another question. Would this amendment, if incorporated in the bill, prevent the Senate from sending to the Court of Claims, of its own motion, to be investigated, a given case?

Mr. FULTON. It would.
Mr. WARREN. But wou But would it not still be open to such claimants to have a bill for their relief presented and considered and the case referred to the Court of Claims?

Mr. FULTON. It would not be referred by the Senate. It would take an act of Congress to do that.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly; but such a case could be referred by an act of Congress.

Mr. FULTON. It could be referred by act of Congress. Mr. WARREN. It could be considered by the committee, because the Committee on Claims will still exist, and claims will still be filed and deserving ones recommended and allowed to pass Congress

Mr. FULTON. Certainly. Mr. TILLMAN. While we are endeavoring to shut off this flood of claims I will venture to predict that there will continue to come claims along this very line for the next fifty years, after probably every man in this Chamber is dead.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon

yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. FULTON. In a moment.

There is no doubt that these claims will continue to come, even though we shut off this channel, but they will not be acted on by Congress. The evidence will not satisfy Congress in a great majority of the cases that they should receive consideration, and Congress will feel under no obligation to act. when the Senate, pursuant to an act of Congress, sends these claims to the Court of Claims and invites the party to present his evidence, employ counsel, and go to all the expense of trial, and he secures a finding that is in his favor apparently, Congress feels under obligations-at least I do, and I suppose others feel the same, even though they may feel that probably the claim is not based on sound testimony-having sent the claim there for a finding, to make payment.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President— The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. FULTON. I do.

Mr. McCREARY. I could not hear the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Fulton] clearly, but his amendment refers to certain claims that may be filed up to the 1st of January, 1910. I desire to know to what claims the Senator refers.

Mr. FULTON. The character of claims of which we are speaking—claims arising out of the civil war.

Mr. McCREARY. I understood the Senator had made some exceptions, to which the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] referred, that were not permitted to be filed and referred to the Court of Claims.

Yes; when this act takes effect. Mr. FULTON.

Mr. McCREARY. Ah!

Mr. FULTON. They will not be permitted—
Mr. McCREARY. Then, as I understand, all kinds of war claims can be presented and referred to the Court of Claims up to the 1st of January, 1910.

Mr. FULTON. That is the object.

Mr. TILLMAN. By order of the Senate only, however.

Mr. FULTON. According to the provision that I propose.

Mr. McCREARY. The Senator does not propose to change the system or the plan of getting to the Court of Claims until after the 1st of January, 1910.

Mr. FULTON. Not until after the 1st of January, 1910. Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Kentucky, I think, has not caught the provision, the enlargement there barring all claims for subsistence. Those are still-

Mr. McCREARY. I asked the Senator that question. Mr. THLIMAN. Under existing law those are permitted to be sent to the Court of Claims, but the amendment proposes that even that class shall be cut out.

Mr. McCREARY. That is the very question I was endeavoring to get information on. I want to know if any class of claims are to be barred before the 1st of January, 1910.

Mr. FULTON. None whatever. The law is continued in existence as it is until that date; that is, the amendment I propose will have that offset pose will have that effect.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator will recall his amendment and reread the new provision which he has put in, he will himself see that he has barred claims for subsistence at the seat of war.

Mr. FULTON. I do not question it. I say I propose to do that.

Mr. TILLMAN. In that regard the Senator proposes to change existing law.

Mr. FULTON. Certainly; that is my intention; my deliberate purpose.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, it is to that I object, for the simple reason that, having been up to this time allowing these claims to come here and be presented to the Court of Claims for adjudication, you ought not now, within twelve months, change the character of claims that may be presented.

Mr. FULTON. That is the proposition; and, of course, that is a matter for the Senate to determine. There is a provision here, however, that all these claims, which shall be presented or referred to the Court of Claims prior to the 1st day of January, 1910, shall be considered by the court, and that they shall be tried out to final determination. That may take, of course, great many years, or a year or two at least beyond 1910.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Kentucky?
Mr. FULTON. I do.

Mr. PAYNTER. I should like to have the amendment again I did not understand the language exactly.

Mr. FULITON. Does the Senator want it all read? Mr. PAYNTER. If it is necessary to give us a comprehensive idea of what it means, I do.

Mr. FULTON. The first-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Oregon that it will be necessary to read the amendment as modified at the Secretary's desk.

Mr. FULTON. I understand, Mr. President, but I thought I had perhaps better explain it slightly first. The first amendment is to repeal section 4 of the Bowman Act. The reason for a repeal of that section is simply, I will say again, that under section 3 of the act this class of claims can not be considered, and section 4 of the act, which is proposed to be repealed, simply provides the machinery for trying or the manner of trying this class of cases.

The other amendment is simply to amend section 14 of the existing law by providing that after January 1, 1910, claims of the character we have been discussing shall not be sent to the Court of Claims. Now, I will ask that the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Oregon to withdraw the amendment heretofore proposed and substitute the one he now offers?

Mr. FULTON. That is my desire.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. The proposed amendment reads as follows:

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The proposed amendment reads as follows:

That section 4 of the act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the executive departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883, and commonly known as the Bowman Act, be, and said section 4 is hereby, repealed, and section 3 of said act is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 3. The jurisdiction of said court shall not extend to or include any claim against the United States growing out of the destruction of or damage to property by the army or navy during the war for the suppression of the rebellion, or for the use and occupation of real estate by, or fer stores, subsistence, or supplies taken by or furnished to any part of the military or naval forces of the United States in the operations of said forces during the said war at the seat of war; nor shall the said court have jurisdiction of any claim against the United States which is now barred by virtue of the provisions of any law of the United States: Provided, That all claims for supplies or stores taken by or furnished to any part of the military or naval forces of the United States for their use during the war for the suppression of the rebellion, heretofore referred or transmitted to the Court of Claims by virtue of and pursuant to the provisions of said act of March 3, 1883, or which shall be so referred prior to the 1st day of January, 1910, may be prosecuted in and shall be heard, determined, and reported by said court in all respects as fully and completely as if said section 3 thereof had not been amended by this act."

That section 14 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Tucker Act be, and the same is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 14. That whenever any bill, except for a pension, shall be pending in either House

Mr. OVERMAN. Right there I suggest to the Senator from Oregon there ought to be a date fixed, say from the 1st day of January, 1861, to the 1st day of August, 1865.

Mr. FULTON. What is the suggestion?

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest that a date be fixed as to the period of the war, because there might have been some property destroyed after the war was over.

Mr. FULTON. This provision is simply for claims arising for supplies taken or damage done by the army during the war for the suppression of the rebellion.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that; but let us fix the dates during which the war lasted.

Mr. FULTON. The Supreme Court has already decided during what period war prevailed. So I think there can be no misunderstanding about that.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what I want to do—to fix in this bill the dates as determined by the Supreme Court, so that there will be no misunderstanding about it.

Mr. FULTON. That does not occur to me to be necessary so long as that is a matter that has been judicially determined. Mr. OVERMAN. I think there is a difference of opinion as

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Oregon tell us when the war did end, according to the Supreme Court?

My recollection is that it was in July, 1865. Mr. FULTON.

Mr. GALLINGER. Was it not August, 1865?

Mr. OVERMAN. There is some misunderstanding about it. That is the reason why I want to put the dates in the amend-One Senator says the 1st of August, and another Senator says January, 1866. Why not put the dates in the bill?

Mr. FULTON. The Supreme Court passed on the matter, I think, and determined it as some time in July, 1865. Senators at my right say it was June 27, 1865. Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President-

VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. FULTON. I do.

Mr. McLAURIN. I think it was April 2, 1866.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I think it was in 1866, but I do not recall the month.

Mr. FULTON. Senators can very readily see the difficulty we shall have in agreeing on any amendment fixing the period when the war began and ended. I think, therefore, we had better leave it entirely to the courts to determine. The courts will construe that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the amendment.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the amendment of Mr. Fulton, as follows:

Provided further, That all bills and claims hereto referred to the Court of Claims under and pursuant to the provisions of said section, or which shall be so referred prior to the 1st day of January, 1910, may be prosecuted in, and shall be heard, determined, and reported by, said court in all respects as if said section had not been amended, but had been continued in force as it now is: Provided further, That the foregoing provisions repealing said section 4 of the said Bowman Act, and amending section 3 thereof, and amending section 14 of said Tucker Act, shall not be in force or take effect until the 1st day of January, 1910 1010

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Fulton]

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if this amendment should be adopted and become a law, it would impose upon Senators from the Southern States an enormous amount of unnecessary labor. All of our constituents who have claims which they think are good claims and which have been sent here, but not referred to the court, and all who would send claims here during the time in which they might be referred, but which were not referred, would immediately insist that we should procure the passage of an act through the Senate providing for their payment. As the law now stands, it being impossible for Senators to thoroughly advise themselves about the justice of these claims, they, finding a sufficient basis for them, secure their reference to the Court of Claims, where the work is done, as it ought to be done, by a judicial tribunal. Then the Court of Claims, after performing that labor, sends them back here for our final disposition. But if this amendment prevails, after the time set every one of our constituents who thinks he has a good claim will feel-and I am not sure but what he will have a right to feel-that we ought to take it up and go through with it until we are prepared to appear before the committee of the Senate, thrash it out, and so far establish its justice as to warrant us in asking the Senate to pass it. I need not tell Senators on this side of the Chamber who have from time to time been called upon to examine these claims and present them, even to the committee, that that would involve a work that would occupy nearly all of a Senator's time.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. BACON. I want to ask the Senator if he is not confining his statement to too narrow limits. I think it would occupy the time of half a dozen Senators from each State to do it, because each case is a law case in itself, with all of its facts and with the law applicable thereto.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Georgia is right. keeping myself altogether within what I might have stated. The result would be that we would be compelled to say to our constituents, "We can not do this," or else, attempting to do it, we would only be able to do it for some of them, giving the stituents. others a right to complain that we discriminated, and then we should have no time left for our other senatorial duties.

Mr. President, I believe there ought to come an end to these claims; and, personally, I should like to see that end come as soon as possible. I suggest to the Senator from Oregon that if he would provide that all who have claims can go to the court without coming to the Senate, and give them two years in which they may file their cases, then we would have an end to it, and I would be glad to agree to an amendment to the rules which would forbid the introduction of the claims known as "war claims" in the Senate. We could relieve the Committee on Claims from a vast deal of drudgery, and we could relieve Senators. I believe I am well within the truth, Mr. President, when I say that, even from the State which I have the honor in part to represent, these claims occupy more than 10 per cent of my time, and probably as much as 20 per cent; and yet in this bill there is but one item for Texas, although I have the

Mr. FULTON. I will say to the Senator—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BAILEY. I do. Mr. FULTON. Another item was inserted yesterday from

Mr. BAILEY. And there is still another so absolutely just that I have no doubt it will be agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. That is one for each Senator; and I have one this morning, that I am going to offer, that they can divide between them.

Mr. BAILEY. I have no fault to find with the Senator from Oregon. I think he is trying to be just and fair, and I think he and his committee have performed a vast amount of labor in the preparation of this bill and in the disposition of these But if it requires one-tenth of a Senator's time to look cases. after a State with only three claims in the bill, what must be the case with the Senators who have some 15 or 20 claims in the bill?

Mr. TILLMAN. Their States were the scene of war; yours was not.

Mr. BAILEY. No; but the most intelligent people from the other States after the war came to our State.

Mr. TILLMAN. That may be true. Your people did a great deal of very fine fighting in Virginia and Georgia, east of the Mississippi, and to some extent west of the Mississippi, but you did not have any war in Texas worth considering.

Mr. BAILEY. And, Mr. President, I am glad to make the acknowledgment that the most gallant of the men who fought in Texas regiments had been borrowed from other States, such as South Carolina, Georgia, and Mississippi.

But that is neither here nor there. While there was none of the devastation of the war in Texas, it is still true that in most of these cases the claimants have come to our State from the older Southern States, and they have imposed upon their Senators, as they had the right to do, the duty of looking after their interests in these matters.

Now, I hope that either this amendment will be rejected, or else I hope that it will be so broadened as to allow these claimants to go to the Court of Claims to make out their cases against the Government, and thus save us this labor, now great enough, and to be made incomparably greater if this amendment prevails without some such provision as I have indicated.

Mr. McLAURIN obtained the floor.

Mr. FULTON. I am very anxious to get the consideration of this bill concluded to-day-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. McLAURIN. I do.

Mr. FULTON. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought I had the floor. With the Senator's permission, I will say what I was going to say, and it will be brief.

Mr. McLAURIN. Certainly; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FULTON. I am very anxious to have the consideration of this bill concluded, to have it passed to-day. I am not going to take up time any further in the discussion of this provision. I have explained it, I think, so that it is understood. I think a majority of the Senate have reached the conclusion that it is time to stop sending claims of this character to the Court of I think I have made a very reasonable provision, which gives until January, 1910. I do not purpose taking up any time in discussing this matter, and I hope the Senators interested in the bill will not kill it by continuing the discussion.

Mr. BAILEY. I want to suggest to the Senator from Oregon that to fix the 1st day of January, 1910, is practically the same as to repeal it at the end of this session. Here comes the extraordinary session, which will be occupied with tariff legislation and nothing else, and then comes the regular session, convening the first Monday in December, followed by an adjournment for the holidays, and by the time we reconvene after the holidays the 1st of January will have come and gone. This means practically that no other bills will ever go to that court.

Mr. FULTON. Let me correct the Senator in that. I am sure he has made a mistake.

Mr. BAILEY. I am sure I do not want to make one, although I may have made one.

Mr. FULTON. I am equally sure of that. We have a vast number of claims pending; I would not undertake to say how many, but a very great many; it may be two or three thousand.

It is our purpose to bring in a resolution referring all bills of this character to the Court of Claims unless there is objection Then those will go down. Then during the to their going. special session there is no reason in the world why a resolution of that character might not be put through, and doubtless it will be. Then you will have all the month of December, or at least up to the holiday adjournment-some weeks-in the next regular session, and bills can be introduced, and if the Senate thinks they are meritorious a resolution can be put through. The only difficulty I see in extending the time is that you are going to provide for too many going down.

Mr. McLAURIN obtained the floor.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. McLAURIN. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I think I understood the Senator to say that during the session he would offer a resolution to refer certain claims to the Court of Claims. May I ask to what claims that resolution will be confined?

Mr. FULTON. The resolution has never been confined to any class of claims. It has carried claims of every character. But I had reference when I spoke to what we call "war claims," and the number that I said were probably pending before the committee referred to claims of that character.

I would favor such a course. Of course I can not tell what the Senate will do; I can only say that I will. In order to clear the board and wipe all of these off, I would favor sending them all there. I do not want to be misunderstood. There are some claims that I think it would be entirely out of order to send to the Court of Claims. They are not to be considered.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I think if it is the intention of the committee to offer an omnibus resolution referring to the Court of Claims all the claims now before the Committee on Claims, it would be well to embody that in the amendment which has been offered by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Oregon, and let all those claims go with this amendment. If there are

Mr. FULTON. That would not be proper legislation, because it does not require a congressional act to send them there. They go by simple resolution of the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. I am satisfied the Senator from Mississippi would take the assurance of the Senator from Oregon to that

Mr. McLAURIN. I am willing to take the assurance of the Senator from Oregon that he will refer all of the others. can then be referred in an omnibus resolution at once, and it will give the committee the opportunity and the time to examine the claims that may be introduced between this and the 1st of January, 1910.

Mr. BAILEY. I was just about to say-I intended to say it in response to the reply which the Senator from Oregon made to me, and with the permission of the Senator from Mississippi I will say it now—

Mr. McLAURIN. Certainly.
Mr. BAILEY. With the understanding that those now introduced are to be referred to the court, and with the under-standing that those introduced between this and next January will also be referred, I will consent to the amendment. The only thing I want to be able to do is to say to my constituents, "You now have until the 1st of January to present these claims, and if they are not presented, you will be forever foreclosed. If you will present them, I will introduce your bills, and then you can prepare your facts and have the attorneys go before the committee." I am sure that any man who can make a decent show of justice will get a report from the committee. On that assurance I have no objection to the

Mr. FULTON. I can only assure the Senator that so far as I personally am concerned I will make every effort to bring in a resolution to that end this session. Of course, beyond the end of the session, owing to certain events over which I had no control, conditions will be such that I will not be able to report a resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McLAURIN. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I should not like to have it understood, so far as I am concerned, as one member of the committee, that every one of these claims shall be referred to the Court of Claims. any Senator here would examine the testimony that has been filed with some claims, I do not believe he would think it proper to send such claims to the Court of Claims and take up their time. Senators, there are claims there which are based upon the testimony of men who were not over 8 years old at the time of the war, and in their sworn statements it is stated that there were taken 4,015 pounds of bacon, worth 75 cents a pound, and they knew that was taken by the army. There are cases in which women, who were not over 11 years old, according to the age as given in the testimony, who testify that they knew there were a thousand bushels of corn growing in a field, that was worth 75 cents a bushel; and the claim is supported with no other testimony. Why on earth do we want to send such claims to the Court of Claims, to burden that court?

So far as I am concerned, as a member of the committee, I am perfectly willing that every claim having a shadow merit, or which is supported by any kind of testimony, shall go to the Court of Claims; but I would not like to promise here if I had my say so-of course, I am only one member of the committee-that all these claims should be sent to the Court of Claims, because I do not think, as to some, it would be proper.

Mr. FRAZIER. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to ask the Senator from Utah a question?

Mr. McLAURIN. Certainly.
Mr. FRAZIER. I was going to suggest to the Senator from Utah that if the Committee on Claims should itself undertake, between now and the 1st of January, 1910, to examine and pass upon the merits of the large number of claims now pending before that committee, possibly aggregating 2,500, then a very small percentage of those claims would go to that court. So if this amendment is to pass and this matter is to be closed up, it seems to me nothing but fair and reasonable that the claims which are now pending before the Claims Committee should be sent to the Court of Claims.

The court has jurisdiction. It is a court organized by the Government. It will try these cases upon their merits, and it is not incumbent upon the Senate to sit here and pass judgment upon individual claims when a judicial tribunal has been constituted by act of Congress for the purpose of doing that work. If we propose to close up this matter it seems to me but reasonable and fair to fix this limitation, January, 1910, and then send all the claims now pending to the court for adjudication. If they have no merit in them doubtless that court will dismiss them, as it ought to.

Mr. SMOOT. The only object I have in speaking is this: I know from my own personal examination of hundreds of these claims that there is not a solitary particle of merit in some of them, and there is no testimony given to substantiate the claims. It does seem to me that such claims should not be referred to that court, to take up its time.

Mr. FRAZIER. That court was constituted for the purpose of determining the justice or injustice of the claims. It is not an obligation upon the Senate to try the lawsuits, the innumerable lawsuits now pending before the Claims Committee.

That was the very purpose of the creation of this court.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah has stated that a good many of the claims, or some of the claims at least, are based upon the testimony of men who were boys 8 and 10 and 11 years old at the time of the transaction. far rather risk the memory of a boy of 8 years of age or 10 years of age or 11 years of age than I would that same boy when he had become 40 or 50 or 60 years of age.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi if he believes that there was a boy, not interested at all in a certain individual living in a town, who would know that that particular man had in his cellar 4,015 pounds of bacon, worth 75 cents a pound.

Mr. McLAURIN. That would depend upon circumstances. He might or might not know that. There are a great many things that a boy knows when he is 8 or 10 or 11 years old as to to the affairs of his neighbor. If a man who claimed to have been 25 or 35 years of age at the time should testify as to what was contained in the cellar of his neighbor, it might not be worth anything, because he might be worthy of no credence at all, or he might be a man who knew the facts and was a truthful man and a man whose word ought to be taken for anything he would That would depend upon the circumstances and the facts.

Mr. President, as suggested by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Frazier], the time of the Senate Committee on Claims would be taken up if it is to examine all of these claims. If they are all to go into an omnibus resolution, as is desired by the chairman of the committee-and only one member of the committee has expressed dissent thereto-then it would relieve that committee of that much work, and the time could be devoted to claims hereafter introduced. But I do not see any reason for bothering the Committee on Claims at all about this matter. seems to me the best way to dispose of them is to provide by amendment here that any man who has a claim of this class may go before the Court of Claims at any time between now and the 1st of January next, or the 4th of March, 1910, and present his case to the Court of Claims and let it there be heard. If there had been a court of claims open for the trial of these cases to which the claimants could have gone immediately, there would not have been one claim in ten of the number which have been presented.

Mr. President, a great many of these claims are presented to the Congressman, either the Representative or the Senator, and he is asked to present it because it is supposed by the claimant that he can introduce a bill and that that bill can be passed without any reference to any court of claims, without anything except the ipse dixit of the Senator or the Representative, and that it will thereby become a law and an appropriation will be made to pay him, whereas if the claimant knew in the first instance that he must go to a court of claims, employ his attorney there, introduce evidence to substantiate his claim in that court, in numberless instances there would be no claim presented to the Court of Claims and there would be an end to So nothing has been gained, so far as economy of time and labor and expense is concerned, in the process of getting cases to the Court of Claims through a bill introduced in the Senate or the House of Representatives and going by the Committee

I think there ought to be some provision that would allow these people to go to the Court of Claims and present their cases by the 1st day of next January or the 4th day of March, 1910—which I think is a better time to limit it to-and let the court try their cases.

As there is some impatience on the part of the committee to dispose of this matter, I shall not say a good many things I intended to say with reference to this bill. I will say, however, that this bill does not appropriate money exclusively for what are called "southern war claims." The 16 Southern States have in here very little more than the 3 States of Massachusetts, New York, and Pennsylvania.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask that the amendment may be read, if you please.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia asks that the amendment be again read. The Secretary will read

The Secretary again read Mr. Fulton's amendment.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, there is but one way for an honest government to treat a claim: First, to give the claimant a fair opportunity to be heard; second, to pay, or to hold, through its proper officials, that the claim is invalid and let it go. The accumulation of these claims in the Senate has arisen from the fact that there was no place where the claimant could be heard. There was a Southern Claims Commission appointed soon after the war. In the law creating it it was provided that no one should be a claimant who had not been loyal to the Government during the war. After thousands had been prevented from putting in their claims by that provision, because they could not honestly do it, it was held to be unconstitutional and they were left in the air.

I do not wonder that the chairman of the committee and many Senators are anxious to get rid of the horde of claims that continue to accumulate before the Senate committee. It is the fault of the Government that they have so accumulated, and we ought not to take advantage of our own wrong by excluding them from the opportunity of a fair hearing.

My own State has had more of these claims than any other. If anyone would reflect for a moment upon the history of our internecine troubles he would see the reason for it. The armies were there from the very incipiency of the war to its last day, and for some time after the actual hostilities had ceased. I recollect there was a general during the war, Jackson it is said, whose adjutant-general wrote a note to the brigadier:

Why is it that the general commanding sees so many stragglers behind your brigade?

The reply was-

The only reason I can give to account for it is the fact that the general commanding rode behind my brigade.

The stragglers were behind all brigades, as they always are on long marches. But in Virginia these claims were matters of daily origin. Three or four hundred thousand troops were occupied in Virginia during four years.

Now, while I sympathize with the desire and with the opportunity sought to be made to conclude these matters, there are many good claimants with valid claims under the law as it many good claimants with valid claims under the law as it stands who are excluded from the opportunity to get their claims heard at this session—excluded simply by the gravity of the event. You go to a committee. A Senator from one State is entitled as much to be heard as another. He may have a dozen claims because he represents a State in which there are great congeries of claimants, but he must defer and give equal opportunity to another Senator, for all Senators are equal; and the result has been that at this very session of the Senate, as I know from careful and prudent examination, there are many claims that ought to be put on this bill; but I do not offer any of them. If you build up the bill too much, it will crumble to pieces of its own weight; and I think I am doing the part of a faithful public servant when I decline to offer amendments to this bill which in my heart and according to my best examination I believe to be just and as much entitled to consideration as any claim before the Senate.

I wish it might be agreeable to prolong the time until July 1, 1911, for the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims; but I am informed that any claim offered between now and January 1, 1910, will be sent to the Court of Claims, and that there the claimant will have an opportunity to be heard, even though the case be not reached until such time as may suit the convenience of the court.

I have felt it proper to make this explanation, for I know there are many people to-day in Virginia who are blaming both Senators for not pushing their claims in this bill. They can not do it with just consideration to the public interest. have many claims. We can not help it. It is the event of fate, and we must deal with it according to the best judgment we can exercise in the presence of the opportunity to get some through, and let others go by.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President, in view of the numerous claims which this bill carries and which are to be considered by the Senate, I will speak very briefly. I will content myself with a statement of the principle of law which authorizes the payment of war claims. The mere fact that it may not have been invoked and applied in the other cases does not in the least militate against the correctness of the principle or against the justice of the claims under consideration. This is a great and rich Government. The people are generous, magnanimous, and always want to be just. Those whom we represent here would not have us fail to discharge all obligations of the Government, whether they be legal or honorary. They will submit without complaint to a liberal expenditure of money if done in the discharge of a legal or honorary obligation, or in the promotion of the public good, though there be an apparent extravagance in reaching such end. The necessities of our Government do not require us to higgle over paltry sums or items in meeting its obligations. Its bounties to those who have defended it in its hour of need or peril have been more munificent than those bestowed by any government of which history gives any account.

The Government has been both just and generous to those who have offered their lives to maintain its honor and existence, and has even bestowed gratuities upon their dependent relatives. These just and generous acts have been approved by the people with practical unanimity. If it is proper for the Government to take care of its brave defenders and their dependent relatives, why is it not an equally just obligation to pay its loyal citizens for property which they may have, willingly or unwillingly, surrendered to governmental authority to sustain armies in the field. Why should not the Government pay for property used or destroyed by military authority, superinduced by military necessity, to sustain or lessen the danger to it or to promote its ultimate triumph?

I believe, Mr. President, that it is the duty of Congress to pay these debts.

In saying this I do not mean to be understood as saying that under the law of nations governments are required to pay the losses which came from the operations of the army in the field. the ravages of war, or as designated by some authors and courts as the "accidents of war." These losses are some of the sacrifices which the citizen assumes to bear as one of the necessities of government or organized society. While this is the law of nations, should a rich and great Government allow its loyal citizens to bear such losses? It is not necessary to answer this question to justify the appropriation for the claims in the However, I will invite the Senate's attention to an answer which Vattel makes to it:

Each citizen is required to make contribution of his share of the losses entailed by war. This is accomplished by means of taxation. When a citizen has made his contribution he thereby has sustained his just proportion of loss, and should not be made to bear additional losses, which should be met at public expense. In time of extreme necessity the Government can take the citizen's property or destroy it. The necessity is often so great that the Government can not employ the usual method of ascertaining the value and paying for it before it is taken. When such necessity exists the property is taken or destroyed for the public good, and the public should bear the loss, and not the individual. While the Government may not in some instances be technically liable for property which it has taken or destroyed under such necessity, if its affairs will admit, it should show an "equitable regard for the sufferers." In part as a result of war, we have grown in wealth and power. We are able to be not only just, but generous. When the Government is so abundantly able to meet all of its obligations, it should not demand that its citizens, who can ill afford to do so, should lose the value of their property surrendered to aid the Government in the presecution of its wars. In the crystallization of that principle of the law of nations which requires its citizens to bear the losses resulting from the ravages of war, governments were weak and without the necessary means to treat its citizens with justice, much less with generosity. A law that might be invoked by a poor and weak government should not be applied and enforced by one that is rich and great and powerful. This Government in such matters should blaze the way for the guidance of other governments. It should lead the way in giving justice to those who defended its honor and existence and to those whose property has been sacrificed for the same purpose. We should furnish an example to other governments in the just and generous treatment of our citizens.

The Government should show a scrupulous regard for justice and morality. The courts have said that it should show a more scrupulous regard therefor than belongs to the ordinary transactions of individuals. The Supreme Court, in Woodruff v. Trapnell (10 How., 207), said:

We naturally look to the action of a sovereign state to be characterized by a more scrupilous regard to justice and a higher morality than belong to the ordinary transactions of individuals.

In United States v. Realty Co. (163 U. S., 427) the court had under consideration the question as to what was a debt of the Government, and in deciding the question said:

Government, and in deciding the question said:

Under the provisions of the Constitution (Art. I, sec. 8) Congress has power to lay and collect taxes, etc., to pay debts of the United States.

* * It is conceded, and indeed it can not be questioned, that the debts are not limited to those which are evidenced by some written obligation or those which are otherwise of a strictly legal character. The term "debts" includes those debts or claims which rest upon a merely equitable or honorary obligation, and which would not be recoverable in a court of law if existing against an individual. The Nation, speaking broadly, owes a "debt" to an individual when his claim grows out of general principles of right and justice; when, in other words, it is based upon considerations of a moral or merely honorary nature, such as are binding on the conscience or the honor of an individual, although the debt could obtain no recognition in a court of law. The power of Congress extends at least as far as the recognition and payment of claims against the Government which are thus founded. To no other branch of the Government than Congress could any application be successfully made on the part of the owners of such claims or debts for the payment thereof. Their recognition depends solely upon Congress, and whether it will recognize claims thus founded must be left to the discretion of that body.

Before the time of Grotius many treatises on the civil law and

Before the time of Grotius many treatises on the civil law and on the municipal law of countries had been written, but there seems to have been no written law to regulate the intercourse of States and sovereign principalities. Grotius prepared a valuable work upon that subject. It has been said of him by another:

It remained, therefore, for his deep insight to unfold, and his masterly pen to arrange, the scattered truths of a science, which forms the basis of all treaties, conventions, and negotiations; upholds the intercourse of nations with each other in the bonds of amity, and, in short, establishes all the rights of peace and war.

In Campbell's Grotius (vol. 3, chap. 20, sec. 7, p. 348), under title "War and peace," it is said:

title "War and peace," it is said:

The property of subjects is, so far, under the eminent control of the State that the State or the sovereign who represents it can use that property or destroy it or alienate it, not only in cases of extreme necessity, which sometimes allow individuals the liberty of infringing upon the property of others, but on all occasions where the public good is concerned, to which the original framers of society intended that private interests should give way. But when that is the case, it is to be observed, the State is bound to repair the losses of individuals at the public expense, in aid of which the sufferers have contributed their due proportion. Nor will the State, though unable to repair the losses for the present, be finally released from the debt, but whenever she possesses the means of repairing the damages, the dormant claim and obligation will be revived.

In Grotius (2, ch. 14, sec. 7), it is said:

We must observe this, that the king may in two ways deprive his subjects of their rights, either by way of punishment or by virtue of his eminent power. But if he do so in the last way, it must be for some public advantage. Then the subject ought to receive, if possible, a just satisfaction for the loss he suffered out of the common stock.

Vattel's Law of Nations is a recognized authority, and on page 462 it is said:

page 462 it is said:

Is the state bound to indemnify individuals for the damages they have sustained in war? We may learn from Grotius that authors are divided on this question. The damages under consideration are to be considered into two kinds, those done by the state itself or the sovereign and those done by the enemy. Of the first kind, some are done deliberately and by way of precaution, as when a field, a house, or a garden belonging to a private person is taken for the purpose of erecting on the spot a town rampart or any other piece of fortification, or when his standing corn or his storehouses are destroyed to prevent their being of use to the enemy. Such damages are to be made good to the individual, who should bear only his quota of the loss (181). But there are other damages, caused by the inevitable necessity, as, for instance, the destruction caused by the artillery in retaking a town from the enemy. These are merely accidents; they are misfortunes which chance deals out to the proprietors on whom they happen to fall. The sovereign, indeed, ought to show an "equitable regard for the sufferers" if the situation of his affairs will admit of it; but no action lies against the state for misfortunes of this nature, for losses which she has occasioned not willfully but through necessity and by mere accident, in sioned not willfully but the exertion of her rights.

In Grant against the United States (1 Court of Claims Reports), it appeared that Capt. J. N. Moore was commanding United States troops in the vicinity of Tucson, Ariz., and that Grant was a contractor with the Government for furnishing commissary and supplies for the forts and military posts in Arizona, and that he expended large sums of money in the repair and erection of flouring mills, dwelling houses, storehouses, shops, etc.; that he had personal property of considerable value, consisting of flour, wheat, corn, barley, merchandise, and so forth. Captain Moore directed Lieutenant Lord, commanding a company of dragoons, to destroy the property of Grant. This was done to prevent it from falling into the hands of the

The question was whether the United States should indemnify Grant for the loss of his property under the circumstances. Judge Wilmot delivered an opinion to the court in which it was held that the Government was liable. In the course of the opinion he said:

opinion he said:

Every civilized state recognizes its obligations to make compensation for private property taken under pressure of state necessity, and for the public good. The state is the transcendental proprietary of all the property, real and personal, of its citizens or subjects. This transcendental right—the eminent domain of the state in all countries where rights are regulated by law—is so exercised as to work no wrong, to inflict no private injury without giving the party aggrieved ample redress. This doctrine was not ingrafted on the public law to give license to despotic and arbitrary sovereigns. It has its foundation in the organization of societies and states, and is as essential to a republic as to the most absolute despotism. It is of the very essence of sovereignty, and without it a state could not perform its first and highest duty, its own preservation.

The doctrine of Grant's case was reaffirmed by the Court of

The doctrine of Grant's case was reaffirmed by the Court of Claims in the Wiggins case (3 Court of Claims Reports, p. 412). In Mitchell v. Harmony (Howard, p. 115) it appeared that Mitchell had planned a trading expedition to New Mexico and Chihuahua, in the Republic of Mexico, before hostilities commenced between this country and Mexico and before the declaration of war. After the war commenced an expedition was prepared, under the command of General Kearny, to invade New Mexico, and a detachment of troops was sent forward to stop Harmony and other traders until General Kearny arrived. The trading expedition of Harmony was authorized by the law of the United States. The traders were compelled by the military commander to follow the United States Army, and in doing so Harmony's property was seized by the enemy and was a total loss to him. An action was brought against the commanding officers to recover damages which Harmony alleged he had sustained by the seizure of his property.

Many questions were considered by the court, which are unnecessary to state. The court held that where there is an impending danger from the public enemy or the urgent necessity for the public service it will justify the taking of private property by a military commander to prevent it from falling into the hands of the enemy, and for the purpose of converting it to the use of the public. That private rights must for a time give way to the common and public good.

Among other things, the court said:

There are, without doubt, occasions in which private property may lawfully be taken possession of and destroyed to prevent it from falling into the hands of the public enemy; and also where a military officer, charged with a particular duty, may impress private property into the public service or take it for public use. Unquestionably, in such cases the Government is bound to make full compensation to the owner but the officer is not a trespasser.

In United States v. Russell (80 U. S., 627) the court said:

In United States v. Russell (80 U. S., 627) the court said:

Extraordinary and unforeseen occasions arise, however, beyond all doubt, in cases of extreme necessity in time of war or of immediate and impending danger, in which private property may be pressed into the public service, or may be selzed or appropriated to the public use, or may even be destroyed without the consent of the owner. Such a taking of private property by the Government, when the emergency of the public service in time of war or impending public danger is too urgent to admit of delay, is everywhere regarded as justified, if the necessity for the use of the property is imperative and immediate and the danger, as heretofore described, is impending; and it is equally clear that the taking of such property under such circumstances creates an obligation on the part of the Government to reimburse the owner to the full value of the service. Private rights, under such extreme and imperious circumstances, must give way for the time to the public good, but the Government must make full restitution for the sacrifice.

I have called attention to these provisions of international law, the law of war and peace, that the Senate may have be-fore it the law which regulates the rights of citizens under such circumstances. So it is not a mere gratuity that we are giving to citizens who have lost their property in the way hereinbefore mentioned, but it is in discharge of legal obligations of the

I am exceedingly anxious that the Senate may pass the bill because I believe the claims are meritorious. Many of them have existed against the Government for forty years and more. I believe that when the Government is under an obligation to one of its citizens, whether it be legal or honorary, it is the duty of Congress as soon as possible to meet that obligation. If it shall become necessary even to borrow money for the purpose, then Congress should not hesitate a moment to do it. We did a generous thing recently in assisting the sufferers in a distant land. Yet we allow citizens of our own country, who furnished stores for the army during the war, who were loyal to the Union, to remain unpaid for forty years.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARTER. I would inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill which has been under consideration about how much time will be required to conclude it and reach a vote?

Mr. FULTON. It seems to me that we ought to conclude it in a very few minutes. I think we will conclude it in fifteen minutes, but of course it depends upon the amount of conversation that is to be had.

Mr. CARTER. With the understanding that the consideration of the unfinished business may be called up and the regular order demanded if the pending bill leads to protracted debate, I will for the present ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. out objection, it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that when the Senate adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15372) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the "Bowman" and the "Tucker" acts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Fulton], which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—
Mr. FULTON. There are some committee amendments yet to be offered. After line 5, on page 192, I move to insert:

On the schooned Hazard, Joshua D. Upton, administrator of the estate of Evan Parsons, deceased, $7,218.59.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. After line 25, page 125, I move to insert: To Alfred P. Southwick, administrator of the estate of John Southwick, deceased, $641.68.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. After line 16, on page 93, I move to insert: To Daniel W. Darris, of Caddo Mills, Hunt County, $703.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Has the Senator from Oregon concluded the submission of committee amendments?

Mr. FULTON. I apologize to the Chair; my attention was diverted. I have one more amendment that I am just trying

Mr. FUL/TON. Very well. Mr. TILLMAN. After line 15, on page 84, I move to insert: To Winyah Lodge, No. 40, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of corgetown, S. C., $4 200.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief explanation in order that the conferees on the bill may have the facts to present to the House.

This is a finding of the Court of Claims. It is shown in the affidavits, which were not submitted to the Court of Claims, but which I have here, all sworn to, that this building was destroyed in April, 1866. That is one reason why I wanted the question as to when the war ended settled a moment ago.

Mr. FULTON. Somebody said it was settled in 1866.
Mr. TILLMAN. In August, 1865, according to some, and various dates were fixed. But I want to say that in South Carolina the war ended in 1865, and this building was burned

I ask that these affidavits be printed in the RECORD, showing the basis upon which I make this contention. The Court of Claims finding is also here, and the decision-

There being no objection, the affidavits were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA, County of Georgetogen:

Personally appeared before me B. A. Munnerslyn, who, after being duly sworn, deposes and says that he is a resident of Georgetown, Georgetown County, State of South Carolina, and was in the year 1866; that during the months of March or April, 1866, the Masonic Temple at Georgetown, S. C., was destroyed by fire, which destruction was caused by the federal soldiers; that soon after the destruction of said building reclamation for damages was made and approved by the Claims Committee at Washington, D. C., at which time he was master of the Georgetown Masonic Lodge, but owing to the fact that this congressional district was then represented by a negro Congressman—J. H. Raney—who made the assertion on the floor of the House that if such a claim was approved and paid the funds would be used for Democratic political purposes and not for the erection of a new Masonic temple; that the said J. H. Raney, after he had upset the claim, made the assertion to several of his friends in Georgetown that inasmuch as the claim was not presented through him, and inasmuch as he was entirely ignored in the matter, he had made every effort to have the claim canceled; that he verily believes that if such representation to the Claims Committee had not been made the claim would have been approved and paid. He further states that he knows positively of his own personal knowledge that said building was destroyed by fire, and that said destruction was caused by the federal soldiers.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina if a bill has ever passed the Senate or the House for the payment of this claim.

Mr. TILLMAN. It has been decided in the Court of Claims, the same as 100 or 500 other claims which are included in the bill

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say that if the amendments which are now being offered outside of the committee amendments are to be accepted, I am going to vote against every one of them on the ground of the understanding that we had before the consideration of the bill in the Senate, and also if they are accepted I desire to state now that I shall vote against the passage of the bill. I was in hopes, however, that we could pass the bill ac-bill. I was in hopes, however, that we could pass the bill according to the agreement. I make this statement now so that my position may be understood.

Mr. FULTON. I simply want to say that I trust the amendment will not be adopted. I can not, of course, at this time remember just the circumstances. We have gone over all these claims and rejected them. This is all I have to say. If the Senate sees fit to vote them in, of course we can look at them later. Mr. TILLMAN. I have made a statement of the facts, Mr. President, that the finding is in accordance with the evidence before the Court of Claims, and, in addition to the evidence submitted to the court, I have presented affidavits from men-some of whom I know, persons who were not 8 years of age at the time, but who were men in 1866-that the building was destroyed after the war was over.

That is all there is about it. Of course if the Senate wants to vote the ameriment out or if the committee of conference chooses to throw it out, I can not help myself. I have done my

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President— The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas rise to the pending amendment?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Yes, sir; I rise for the purpose of addressing the Senate on some of the aspects of the pending

When the bill was reported from the committee it was announced that, upon an understanding, the number of claims that had been included fairly exhausted the amount of money deemed to be available on this occasion. A number of claims from Arkansas were included, and a number of claims just as merito-rious were excluded on the ground that a fair division among the several States and communities would allow Arkansas to have that many of it's claims included.

Believing that the committee had acted conscientiously, with a disposition to recognize fairly the rights of classes and sections, I was disposed to accept it, and did accept it. When in the items arranged by States the point was reached where the Arkansas claims were to be found, I did not offer amendments that were just as meritorious as those that were included.

Now, I want to be dealt with fairly. If the bill is to be opened up for meritorious claims, then I have many that I care to present and shall feel it my duty to present.

Mr. FULTON. I will say to the Senator that, as far as I am concerned, if this item goes in I shall make no objection to his items. I know what they are; and they are, as he states, equally meritorious.

Mr. SMOOT. I will also say to the Senator I will make no objection whatever. If the arrangement is violated in one instance, I am perfectly willing that any claim thus presented here shall go on the bill.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. In view of the statement of the chairman and member of the Committee on Claims, I have nothing further to say.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN],

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAYNER. I send to the desk two amendments to the bill. One is an amendment that failed to get before the committee by reason of the death of my late colleague, Governor Whyte.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary. On page 63, after line 17, it is proposed to insert:

To Nathan F. Edmonds, administrator of estate of Henry Show, deceased, late of Washington County, Md., $225.

Mr. FULTON. That is the one to which the Senator referred? Mr. RAYNER. As I understand it, the committee would have passed the claim if it had been presented by my late colleague. Mr. FULTON. The Senator says it is an amendment which failed to get in because of the death of his colleague? Mr. RAYNER. So I understand. I have been so informed. Mr. FULTON. I have looked it over. I think it is within the rule, and under the circumstances I am willing to accept it. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAYNER. The second amendment is a judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the claim, but it came in shortly after the committee made up the bill. It is for a church.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 62, after line 15, insert the follow-

To the consistory of Grace Reformed Church, Knoxville, Md., the sum of $410, the same being the amount of the findings reported by the Court of Claims in Senate Document No. 418, Sixtleth Congress, first session

Mr. FULTON. All those amendments the committee have declined to insert. I trust the amendment will not be adopted, because there will be another bill similar to the one pending.

Mr. RAYNER. What is the objection to the adoption of this claim? It is a payment to the consistory of Grace Reformed Church, Knoxville, Md., and the Court of Claims finds

II. During said war the military forces of the United States, by proper authority, for the use of the army, took possession of the church building described in the petition and used and occupied the same for hospital purposes for a short period of time and damaged the same. The reasonable rental value, together with damage in excess of ordinary wear and tear, was then and there the sum of $410, no part of which appears to have been paid.

III. The claim herein was never presented to any officer or department of the Government prior to its presentation to Congress and reference to this court by resolution of the United States Senate as hereinbefore set forth, and no satisfactory reason is adduced showing why the claim was not earlier presented.

What is the objection to allowing the claim? It is for a church and is for $410. It came in shortly after the committee made up the bill and ought to have been in it, but for some reason or other it was delayed.

Mr. FULTON. In the first place, all those claims which came in subsequent to the reporting of the bill the committee has had no opportunity whatever to examine. In the next place, it seems to me that there ought to be some limit, and the committee felt if we passed on all matters that had been reported to the Senate up to the time of the reporting of the bill, the others should wait until there would be another bill carrying these claims.

Mr. RAYNER. But do not draw the line on a church claim. It is impossible for me to examine this matter Mr. FULTON. carefully now. The mere fact that there is a court finding here does not settle it. There may be two court findings. Sometimes we discover that these matters are duplicated; and one has been paid. I do not care to assume the responsibility myself ing additional section:

Mr. LODGE. I offer an amendment, which I will not delay the Senate by asking to have read. The Senator from Oregon knows the claim, which I think is a good one. I wish to submit it to his consideration. It is what is known as the "dies claim."

Mr. FULTON. I have never looked upon the claim as one enjoying much merit, and I have not changed my view.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts proposes an amendment, which will be read by the Secretary. The Secretary. It is proposed to add to the bill the follow-

SEC.—. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, to refund internal-revenue taxes illegally collected from owners of private dies, as decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, the following amounts, or so much as may be found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, to wit: To Alligator Match Company, $105; A. Beecher & Sons, $1.407; W. T. Brown & Co., $830; John J. Brown & Son, $2.535; John Bull (estate), $1.278; Jeremiah Curtiss & Sons, $4.010; Curtis & Brown Manufacturing Company, $49.50; Andrew Dougherty, $5.645; Henry Dalley, fr., $220.13; P. H. Drake & Co., $990; A. Eichele & Co., $3.527; Griggs & Scott, $380; William Gates's Sons, $203.98; L. G. Hunt, $155; Holman Liver Pad Company, $21.04; S. B. Hartman & Co., $34.568 cents; Joseph Lochr, $2.961.44; R. H. McDonald & Co., $2.436; National Match Company, $1.040; D. Ransom & Co., $400; H. R. Stevens, $348; Swift, Courtney & Beecher Company, $7,000; Trenton Match Company, $755.20; John Lochr, $4,521.44.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I hope that the amendment will not be voted on favorably.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to offer an amendment at the end of the North Carolina items, on page 78.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. It is proposed to add, after line 25, page 78: James W. Adams, of Patrick County, $2,325.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Oregon will offer no objection to this particular amendment. I am inclined to think that it was the intention of the committee to include it with the committee amendments in the bill, but it was overlooked.

Mr. RAYNER. There ought to be some equality of distribu-I am not objecting to any claim, but I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina what is the date of the claim, because one of my claims was just ruled out. Let us have the

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to say with reference to the matter, if there is any claim in the bill that is thoroughly established, both by the evidence and by the Court of Claims, it is this claim.

This is a claim for the use of the schooner Triumph. This schooner was taken, so the Court of Claims find, by order of General Burnside for the use of the army, and was used for the army for one hundred and fifty-five days. The Court of Claims find that the reasonable value of the use of that schooner for that time was $2,325; that the claimant was a loyal citizen of the United States.

Mr. FULTON. I did not understand the Senator's answer to the question as to when that claim was reported by the Court of Claims

Mr. SIMMONS. It is dated "Court of Claims, clerk's office, Washington City, December 5, 1905." Mr. FULTON. If it came in in 1905.

Mr. SIMMONS. I may be mistaken about the time when it came in; but the letter of the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims transmitting it bears the date I have stated.

Mr. FULTON. There is a possibility that it was paid in the last omnibus claims bill, and there is the further consideration that it was previously passed upon by the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. It appears at the close of this report that the case was attested on the 3d day of June, 1905.

Mr. FULTON. That matter must, of course, have been passed upon by the committee which made up the last omnibus There must have been grounds, in its judgment, for rejecting the claim, or it is possible that the claim may have Has the Senator looked that matter up carefully?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I know the parties interested. They have written to me about the claim recently, and I assume they would not have written about it if the claim had been paid. I have made no investigation other than that. I think the claim was not included in the other report, probably on account of some inadvertence on my part. I am not sure what was the real reason for its omission from the last bill, but as to the merits of the claim there can be no controversy whatever.

Mr. FULTON. If the Senator will allow me to look at the report perhaps I can ascertain. [Examining.] Yes; I find one reason, probably, why the claim was rejected, if there was no other, was this:

III. The claim was never presented to any department or officer of the Government prior to its presentation to Congress and reference to this court as aforesaid.

That is a finding of laches, and the existing law provides that when these claims are sent to the Court of Claims, the court shall report whether or not any showing has been made why the bar of the statute should be removed, contemplating that if no such showing is made the claim is not to be entertained.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon a

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon

yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. FULTON. I yield the floor, Mr. President. I am through. Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, a great many of the claims contained in the bill, with respect to the time of presentation, are not upon an exact parallel with this case.

FULTON. There are some exceptions. We have not made that a strict rule in the matter of laches. Oftentimes we are able to satisfy ourselves that a claim ought to be recognized notwithstanding laches.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask the Senator from Oregon, again, if the Court of Claims is not in the habit, when it finds that a claimant has been guilty of unreasonable laches, of stating, as a part of its findings, that he has been guilty of laches'

Mr. FUL/TON. No; the court simply say that no proof is offered to show why the claim had not before been presented. They do not say whether the claimant is guilty of laches or not.

as in this case, sometimes the court-

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not understand, if the Senator will pardon me, that there is any mention in the finding as to the diligence of the claimant. The court simply says that this case was not presented to Congress until the introduction of the bill which was referred to the Court of Claims. Mr. WARREN. I think I ought to say, regarding the claim presented by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Simmons], that it was one of the class that in the last omnibus bill we did not include. We only included cases involving laches where it was against infants or was otherwise some peculiar case of hardship or there was some extraordinary reason why the claim could not be earlier presented. There were several hundred claims exactly on the same level with that which the Senator from North Carolina is presenting.

I think I said on the floor when the previous omnibus claims bill was being considered, that the committee had thought it best to leave out a great number of claims, at least for the time. I intimated then-and I believe it will eventually be donein cleaning up, perhaps in the next bill such claims will all be taken up and reviewed.

I do not know what is in the present bill, but the last bill contained no claims where the laches was as plain as in the case the Senator from North Carolina has presented.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, the differentiation which I want to point out to him is that in the case I present there is no finding of the court that there was laches and no finding of the court with reference to the question we are now discussing. The finding of the court with reference to the question which we are now discussing is as follows:

The claim was never presented to any department or officer of the Government prior to its presentation to Congress and reference to this court as aforesaid.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, those are exactly the terms of the findings in all this class of cases that were before excluded upon the findings of the court.

Mr. SIMMONS. My recollection is Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly. Mr. FULTON. The law contemplates that the claimant shall affirmatively show some reason why he did not present the claim earlier; and failing to so show, the claim is barred. requires an affirmative showing.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, my recollection is, from an examination of a number of cases I have had in charge, that where the court intended to find that the claimant had been guilty of unpardonable negligence, if you will allow the use of that term, they assert either that the claimant was guilty of negligence or they declare that no reasonable explanation was offered why the claim was not presented at an earlier date.

Now, Mr. President, I can only say this with respect to this claim: It may be that there may have been some negligence in presenting it, but where it is shown by the findings of the court, created by the Government itself to determine and pass upon the merits of claims of citizens against the Government thus submitted, that the claim is just, that the Government has had the use of the property, and that the citizen was a loyal citizen of the United States, I do not think the Government ought to plead the statute of limitations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr.

SIMMONS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I now present a committee amendment. This is the last committee amendment I have to offer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 200, after line 15, following the amendment already adopted, it is proposed to insert:

That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to audit and adjust the claims of Stewart & Co., and A. P. H. Stewart, agent, for internal-revenue taxes collected on government cotton between January 1, 1865, and January 1, 1866, and which have not been here-tofore refunded, and for this purpose, any statute of limitation to the contrary notwithstanding, sections 989, 3226, 3227, and 3228 of the Revised Statutes of the United States are hereby made applicable and available with the same force and effect as if protest and demand for payment had been made within the time prescribed by said sections, and the amount, not exceeding $11,208.04, when ascertained as aforesaid, and not heretofore refunded, shall be paid to legal representatives of A. P. H. Stewart and Charles A. Weed, out of the permanent annual appropriation provided for similar claims allowed within the present fiscal year.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The SECRETARY. On page 41, at the end of the Colorado items, it is proposed to add the following:

To Jesse W. Coleman, Custer County, $675.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I want to state very briefly the facts about this case. Mr. Coleman was a farmer on the Arkansas River in southern Colorado in 1864. He had quite an extensive farm, the farm covering a piece of land that did not belong to him, but which belonged to a different party. He had large fields of grain and crops of all kinds. When the Indians began disturbing that vicinity, he enlisted in the army and became a soldier in the Third Colorado Cavalry, which was a regiment recruited to fight against the Indians.

Mr. Coleman lost his entire crop. He filed a claim against the Government for a very large amount of money—$23,000—and went into the Court of Claims. I will read the findings of the Court of Claims, and then, if the chairman of the committee will say that this is not a proper claim, I shall admit that I do not know what is a proper claim. This is the finding of

It appears from the evidence that the claimant, Jesse W. Coleman, was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout the war for the suppression of the rebellion—

I suppose that may be presumed after he had entered the army and served one hundred days, which was the time of his enlistment-

In 1864 the claimant was engaged in farming a tract of land belonging to the Government—

I want to say, Mr. President, that in those days all that land belonged to the Government. There was no private ownership of land of any consequence in that part of the country of land of any consequence in that part of the country—which he had leased from one Eader, who seems to have been in possession as a "squatter." The land is located about 12 miles from Pueblo, then Colorado Territory. The land was leased on shares, the claimant agreeing to give one-fourth of the crop raised by him. In August, 1864, the Indians in that locality were on the warpath, and the

That is what he has filed a claim for, which the court did not

During that period there were taken from the said claimant, in Custer County, in the then Territory of Colorado, stores and supplies of the character and kind described above, which at the time and place of taking were reasonably worth the sum of $675, no part of which appears to have been paid for.

Mr. FULTON. Let me ask the Senator right there, by whom were those stores and supplies taken? By the Indians?

Mr. TELLER. They were taken by the troops.

Mr. FULTON. It does not say so.

Mr. TELLER. It does not say so, but that is a fact within my knowledge. I happen to know Mr. Coleman. He is, think, the only man I do know who has any interest in this bill. It is a claim for property taken by the United States; and while the court does not say it was taken by the troops, it evidently follows that the court understood that it was taken by the

Mr. FULTON. I think that might be assumed. Mr. TELLER. That is all there is of that claim. Of course the claimant did not get his claim for $23,000, although I have no doubt the soldiers got the property on which the claim was based. I think Mr. Coleman, who is now an old man, is entitled to $675, and I am sure it will not break this Government of ours to pay it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller.] [Putting the question.] By the sounds, the "noes" have it.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I am going to ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment, for if there is any decency in the Government of the United States, that is a claim that ought to be paid. It is a mere subterfuge to say the court did not find that the property was taken by the United States troops. The property was taken, and if they find that the claimant is entitled to recovery, it follows that the property was so taken, and that the court so understood it. I do not know whether I can get the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. FRYE. Let the question be again put. Let us have another viva voce vote.

Mr. TELLER. Very well. I ask that the question be again

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will again put the question. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller]. The amendment was agreed to. Mr. KEAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 194, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to examine the claim of the Wales Island Packing Company, for injury to its business and property on Wales Island on account of the recent decision of the Alaska boundary tribunal, under which the possession of said island has passed from the United States to the Dominton of Canada, and allow to said company whatever sum may be found due, not exceding $$1,869.60. And the amount so found due shall be paid to the Wales Island Packing Company: Provided, That the said amount allowed shall be accepted by the said company as full satisfaction of all its claims against the United States arising from said injury; and the said amount allowed is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. KEAN Mr. President that is a well-known case I

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, that is a well-known case. I think the Senator from Oregon will accept it.

Mr. FULTON. I will simply say, in regard to that matter, that some amount should be allowed to these parties. The Secretary of State has recommended it many times. I do not know whether the amendment is so framed that he can pay whatever he chooses.

Mr. KEAN. He can.
Mr. FULTON. If it is not so framed, I will see that it is.
Mr. KEAN. It is so framed that he can pay whatever he thinks fit.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I rather think that a dangerous precedent will be set by paying that claim. I have examined it a great many times, and I can not see any justice in it. I hope the Senate will vote it down and not allow it to go into the omnibus claims bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will do as they have done before—agree to the amendment with the same unanimity as before. It is something the State Department is very much embarrassed with, caused by a change of national boundary, no fault being attached to the packing company. I think it is a righteous claim and that it ought to go into the bill.

Mr. FULTON. They were cut out by the boundary line being changed.

Mr. TILLMAN. If it is such an important matter, why is it not brought in here on its own merits, instead of being put on this omnibus claims bill with so many other claims which everybody realizes and acknowledges are just? Let us have the same treatment for both sides of this Chamber, and for both parties here, or let us not have anything at all. I would rather have no bill at all than have such discrimination.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr.

KEAN1.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. KEAN. I have another amendment which I desire to offer for the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. It should come in after the French spoliation claims

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

That the sum of $496,812.54 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the president and directors of the Insurance Company of North America the several amounts found by the Court of Claims and heretofore reported to Congress as due them in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spollations committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July 1801," approved January 20, 1885.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Foraker] has a similar amendment in regard to the Insurance Company of Pennsylvania. They are both to be considered to-

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment now to be inserted in the bill following the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. KEAN. So that both of them may be considered together.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that my amendment be read for the information of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary. Following the amendment of Mr. Kean, it is proposed to add:

That the sum of $313,931.65 be, and the same is hereby, apprepriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay The Insurance Company of the State of Pennsylvania the several amounts found by the Court of Claims and heretofore reported to Congress as due them in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1801," approved January 20, 1885.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN]

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, if I understood correctly, the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey is for the payment of the French spollation claim of the Insurance Company of North America.

Mr. KEAN. It is.

Mr. FULTON. And the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, I understand, is similar.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; for The Insurance Company of the State of Pennsylvania. Mr. FULTON. We

We have included in the bill allowances for all individual claims against that fund, but we have excluded the claims of all incorporated companies. That has been the policy heretofore, and the committee followed it this time. I want to say, though, that my investigations have led me to be-lieve that it is a policy that ought not to have been pursued; and, so far as I am concerned, were it not for the fact that it would impose so large an amount on this bill, I would consent to accept the amendments.

The truth is, I found, when I came to investigate the matter, that these insurance companies received no greater premium for the insurance they wrote than was paid on the same risks to private insurers. For some time I had been laboring under the impression that they had really been charging what might be called "a war risk" premium and had received larger premiums than the private insurers. We have uniformly paid the private insurers, and justice will some time require that Congress shall pay these claims. I hope, however, Senators will not insist on pressing these claims at this time, because it will be simply impossible, in my judgment, to get this bill through with them on.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I hope the Senator having the bill in charge will not insist upon his objection. I hardly see how he can do so consistently, in view of the statement he has just made.

It is true, as he says, that these are absolutely just claims. They were presented and heard in the Court of Claims and were there allowed. It is true, as he says, that there has never been any objection to paying them when similar claims were being paid, except only that these were claims in favor of corporations. That surely is not a just and tenable objection.

It is true the amount is large; but some time, if the Senator's suggestion is acted upon favorably, the Government will discharge these claims, and I do not know why we should not discharge them at this time as well as at some subsequent time.

These insurance companies have just passed through the great fire at San Francisco, where they lost heavily, but met all their obligations, and at this particular time it would be only a just recognition, and a most appropriate and a most agreeable one, if they could have that which the United States Government owes them and has owed them for a hundred years. How much longer are they to wait in patience? I hope the Senate will vote that these claims—as just as any that are in-corporated in this bill; as just as any that have ever been paid of all these French spoliation claims-may be now acted upon and allowed.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I have not a word to say about the justice of the claim that is presented as an amendment, nor the justice of any other claim included in this bill; but the proceedings in the consideration of this bill have been of such a character that it is not exactly fair to some of us on this side that these amendments should now be offered.

A good many Senators on the Democratic side understood that there was going to be great difficulty in having this bill presented at all for consideration. It is called a "southern claims bill," but, in fact, 3 Northern States have more than the 11 Confederate States put together. I, with a number of gentlemen on this side of the Chamber and around me, agreed that we would not introduce any amendment whatever if the bill should be presented to the Senate, and I understood that it was upon such conditions that the bill was brought before the Senate to be put upon its passage.

I and several other Senators have religiously adhered to that contract, as I may call it, and have not presented amendments that arise properly under this bill and are quite as just as any that are carried in it. I am not questioning the justice of any of them; but if it were to be understood that any sort of claim might be presented and appended to this bill on the ground that it was a just claim, we should have a good many to offer our-selves. I know that I should have several. I have been importuned by my constituents to see that claims which have been favorably acted upon by the Court of Claims should be added to this bill, but I have refrained from offering any of The bill has now grown large enough when you consider the understanding under which, I think, it was at first presented to the Senate.

While I have no disposition to put off any further the claims covered by the amendments of the Senators from New Jersey and Ohio-and I know they have been delayed here a hundred -there are many other bills quite as just to which there is not the slightest probability of any consideration ever being given by the Senate. I have in mind a bill that I introduced myself which has been on the Senate Calendar every year, session after session, as it has been in the House, for thirty years. It has never received an unfavorable report; it has never received the views of the minority; and yet consideration can never be had for it because it simply involves the distribution of a trust fund in the Treasury which the courts and the Congress say, and everybody says, belongs to somebody else. If the claim of a cestui que trust who has proved his right to a part of a distributive fund in the Treasury, allowed by all to be a trust fund, is not a just claim, then there are no just claims against the Government whatever.

I want all just claims against the Government paid. not think we can put the United States in the attitude of denying a claim for provisions or anything else furnished to its troops. If we do, we put it in a most anomalous and ungracious attitude, different from that of every other country in the For at least two hundred years—two hundred and fifty, I think-it has been decided over and over again in international law that a government in honor must pay for what it seizes, whether that seizure belongs to friend or foe, and we always proceed upon the legal fiction that the Government has an implied contract to pay.

I know that a great many of the French spoliation claims are just, and I do not, by what I am saying, throw any sort of cloud upon the claims presented by the Senator from New Jersey and advocated by the Senator from Ohio. It is simply that after we on this side, because of the condition of the bill, agreed not to present claims which are fully as just, fully as pressing, and very much smaller in amount, and have withheld action because we agreed to do it, now we find ourselves overrun with amendments from another section of the country, embracing much older claims and no more just.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know anything about the agreement of which the Senator from Mississippi speaks. I only know that these claims have been called to my attention, that I have investigated them, and I have reached the conclusion stated by the chairman of the committee having this bill in charge, that they are absolutely just claims and that they ought to be paid; and the Government has not even the excuse of not being able to do it as the reason why it should not pay.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Ohio permit me? Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Just a word, Mr. President. I think the first time any number of these French spoliation claims were paid upon the findings of the Court of Claims was something like a dozen years ago, when about three-fourths of a million dollars of spoliation claims and about the same amount of southern war claims were put on the deficiency bill. At that time it was with the promise on the part of those who proposed them that the spoliation claims should not include the insurance claims. I had not then had time to look them up. After that had passed we again put upon another deficiency bill about as much more—three-quarters of a million of spoliation claims—and the bill was vetoed by President Cleveland on the ground that we had included insurance claims.

Later on it was looked up. We found that the only objection to these claims was that it was the business of the insurance companies to insure; that they had charged a premium for insuring, and therefore it was a business transaction, and they assumed the risk as an ordinary business proposition in contradistinction to those people who had had their property taken from them.

But I must say, in justice to the claims, that we have paid the underwriters, as the Senator from Oregon has said, the private insurers, and, so far as my investigation shows, at about the same rate of premium. I have believed, and now believe, that before the matter of settling the French spoliation claims is entirely closed these insurance claims will have to be considered. But they have been left out of this bill on account of the understanding had in the first place, and as was so well said by the Senator in charge of the bill, to keep the pending bill from becoming larger than we could obtain the consent of this House and the other House to pass. If it shall be ex-cluded now, I think there will later on be a stronger prospect of its going through than at this time.

Mr. FULTON. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact. if he will allow me, that the acceptance of these amendments means adding nearly $2,000,000 to the bill. It simply means to sink it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.
Mr. SMOOT. I sincerely hope this amendment will not be accepted by the Senate. I have studied the question pretty thoroughly, and I do not believe the claims are just. It is true they happened in time of war; but if you will inquire what the rate of premium was, you will notice that war premiums were paid, many of them 35 per cent.

Mr. KEAN. I think the Senator from Utah will find, if he will examine it, that that is not true.

Mr. FULTON. Let me ask the Senator if he contends that the premium charged by the insurance companies on a given risk, where the risk was also carried by a private individual, was greater than the premium charged by the private indi-Was it not exactly the same in every instance?

Mr. SMOOT. As far as my examination discloses, it was a trifle higher.

Mr. FULITON. No; I had all that tabulated. I had every one drawn off. I had the same impression that he has; but where an insurance company and a private insurer carried a risk on a ship or a cargo at the same time, the premium was the same, except in some instances, much to my surprise, the insurance companies did it for a less premium.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President—
Mr. FORAKER. I decline to be further interrupted.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. The statement made by the Senator from Utah is the expression of a misunderstanding that obtained to the prejudice of these claims for years.

Mr. SMOOT. Not with me.

Mr. FORAKER. Not with the Senator from Utah, as he says, because I assume that until recently his attention had not been directed to the matter, but he is now under the same misapprehension that others labored under at the time these claims were discriminated against—that is the only word proper to employ. The record and testimony adduced show that there was no war premium charged, but only the ordinary marine rate that underwriters, incorporated and unincorporated, charged at that time.

But for the assurance given by our Government, by President Washington, and by Mr. Jefferson, then Secretary of State, whose assurances are quoted on the record, there could not have been any merchant marine at all belonging to America at that time. They gave assurance that the Government would stand behind and protect them if they took these risks. In view of that fact the insurance companies of the country were willing to underwrite these risks and did underwrite them; and then, Mr. President, when the vessels were destroyed by the French our Government stepped in and assumed the obligation that the French Government thereby came under to pay for these ships. Our Government got value received for it, and for one hundred years our Government has been refusing to recognize and pay these claims.

The whole trouble out of which grew these French spoliation claims was one not creditable to our Government, I am sorry to say; due to the fact, acknowledged by us officially, that we did not keep our pledge to the French people embodied in the treaty of 1778.

Mr. FULTON. If the Senator will allow me-

Mr. FORAKER. In just a moment.

It was in consequence of that and to adjust our differences with the French Government that we assumed these obligations. and when we assumed these obligations the insurance companies became subrogated to all of the rights of the owners of the vessels, and they advanced and paid the loss, and all this time they have been trying to get back that which belongs to

Mr. FULTON. I have the list here that I drew off, showing the risks carried and the premium paid. Take the brig Ruby, office of Peter C. Brooks; $16,000 insurance, at 18 per cent premium. We have paid Peter Brooks all his claim. The Boston Marine Insurance Company, $2,500, on the same risk, 15 per cent. The company charged 15, as against 18 by the indi-

Mr. KEAN. Has not the Boston Marine Insurance Company been paid?

Mr. FULTON. It still has claims. I do not know whether it has been paid. I do not think it has been.

Mr. KEAN. Some of the claims of the Boston Marine Insurance Company were paid, as I understand.

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; I have the record here, showing that one company in Massachusetts and two or three companies in Rhode Island were paid, and one in Baltimore.

Mr. FULITON. That does not make any difference. I was calling attention to the fact that the insurance companies charged practically the same premium that private individuals charged for the same risk. But I do not want to be misunderstood. I do not want this amendment attached to the pending bill, for it simply means to destroy the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not want to destroy the bill-

Mr. KEAN. Let us have a vote.

Mr. FORAKER. But as the amendments have been brought up, and brought up in good faith, I want to answer the objections made to them. I desire to say, in answer to the objection, that the companies charged a war premium. Suppose they did. Does that justify the Government in refusing to reimburse men for losses which they have paid, for which the Government undertook to reimburse them? That they would charge war rates in time of war is the most natural thing in the world; but that does not take away their right to hold the French Government responsible if wrongfully the French Government destroyed the vessel on which they had written insurance.

Mr. FULTON. I think the Senator did not intend to say that this was during war. As a matter of fact, it was not during war. Had it been during war we would not recognize the claim at all. As a matter of fact it has been judicially determined that a state of war did not exist between France and this nation at that time.

Mr. FORAKER. I stand corrected as to that. During a time of practical hostility. The French Government undertook to punish us for not keeping our treaty agreement with her to stand by her when she got into war with any other country. She called upon us to stand by her in her trouble with Great Britain, and we had declined to keep our pledge. To punish us she set about destroying our merchant marine upon the high seas, and wrongfully destroyed it, because, as the Senator from Oregon suggests, there was no war to justify it. It was in time of peace. It was pure wantonness, as we claim.

Hence it was these vessels had an undoubted claim against the French Government, and our Government had promised the insurance companies, the vessel owners, and everybody else who took risks in regard to our merchant marine that it would stand by and protect and secure to them redress if they suffered wrongs. That led to this insurance. It led to these ships salling the seas as they did. Suppose they did, in view of that, charge high rates-which they did not, because the record shows they were simply the ordinary marine rates at that time. But suppose they had. They still would have been allowed to assert their claim against the French Government. They would have a just claim against the French Government for the full value of their loss, and it was that obligation of the French Government to the vessel owner, and through the vessel owner to the insurance company which paid the loss, which our Government assumed and promised to pay, and which it has been for a hundred years dodging in and out on one pretext and another and not paying.

I do not want to kill the bill; but inasmuch as this question came up, I wanted to express to the Senate my opinion, based upon the best examination I have been able to make, that these are perfectly just claims, and that they ought to be paid.

Mr. KEAN and others. Let us have a vote.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. FORAKER. I was answering a suggestion. I had not determined what I would do; but in view of the fact that Senators desire a vote, I will let it come to a vote.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have spent a little time in looking up the rates that were charged the different boats, and while I notice from the list the chairman of the committee has here that in many instances there was an insurance rate of 25 per cent, there is a list I have seen which shows that there was 35 and 40 and even 50 per cent charged.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SMOOT. I do. Mr. FULTON. I think the Senator surely must be mistaken. I had this taken from the list as it appears on file in the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not say that—
Mr. FULTON. Of course I understand the Senator thinks he is correct, and possibly he is correct, but it does seem to me he must have this confused with some other matter, because I had this list compiled from the records in the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not say it is not compiled from the list that the chairman of the committee has, but I do claim there is a list showing in many cases higher rates charged than on this list. It seems to me if the insurance was charged at a war rate, and if the Government told these companies it would protect them against loss, then they should not have charged a war rate for the insurance.

Mr. KEAN. The Senator from Ohio and I are perfectly willing that the amendment shall go over. We withdraw it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. SCOTT. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Secretary. On page 106, in the items for West Virginia. after line 22 and after the amendment already inserted at that point in the bill, it is proposed to insert:

To the board of education of the Harpers Ferry school district, Jefferson County, W. Va., $2,121.72, the amount found due by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives, as included in Report No. 1135, Sixtleth Congress, first session.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, in view of the action of the Senate I have no hope, or at least scarcely any hope, that the amendment will be adopted, but I want to say that my State was the theater of very stirring scenes from 1861 to 1865. I have probably 50 or 75 amendments which I ought to offer that are as deserving as the one which I have just sent to the desk. This is for property taken by the Government. The Government sold the property and got the money, and my constituents have been waiting now for forty years for it, and I suppose they will have to wait forty years longer.

But, Mr. President, I am not going to press it, because my constituents are provided for in the bill to a reasonable amount, and I do not want to kill the bill. You know the saying, "A half loaf is better than no bread." I am going to follow what the Senator from Mississippi said a while ago and not offer these additional amendments, although every one of them is just and should be paid. I ask to have a vote on this amendment, which will determine my action as to whether it is worth while to offer any of the others.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will not be adopted. I do not think it is proper to insert it on

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia. [Putting the question.] The "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. SCOTT. If I thought I would have as good luck as the Senator from Colorado when he called for the yeas and nays on his amendment, I would insist upon the yeas and nays. But not wanting to take up the time of the Senate, I will be satisfied with a vote if Senators will vote on this proposition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will again put the ques tion. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BULKELEY. I desire to offer an amendment.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut offers an amendment, which will be stated.
The Secretary. On page 42, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

To John G. Foster and Horace M. Sanford, $206.79.

Mr. BULKELEY. This matter has been considered by the Committee on Claims, and a bill was reported to the Senate, and it seems to me it is entirely proper.

Mr. FULTON. Has the bill passed the Senate?

Mr. BULKELEY. It is now on the calendar of the Senate. Mr. FULTON. But it has not passed?

Mr. BULKELEY. No; it has not.
Mr. FULTON. Then, Mr. President, I must object to it.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut. The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I offer the amendment I send to

The Secretary. On page 200, after line 15, and after the amendment already inserted at that point, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reimburse Joseph Schrembs, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $262.20, which amount was paid by said Schrembs, under protest, to the surveyor of the port of Grand Rapids and covered into the Treasury, as duty unlawfully assessed and collected by said surveyor on four cases of statuary for the use of St. Mary's Church, Grand Rapids, Mich., December 16, 1902.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, Rev. Joseph Schrembs is the vicar-general of the Catholic Church in Michigan. Before he went abroad he consulted the surveyor of customs at Grand Rapids, Mich., and was told by him that there was no duty on statuary or works of art imported for religious He went to Europe and made some purchases and returned home, only to learn that the surveyor had changed his mind and levied customs duty against these church statues. The matter was appealed to the Board of General Appraisers, and the board overruled the surveyor. The case was taken finally to the court of appeals. The court held that these were works of art, imported for religious purposes, and that they were not dutiable. For four years I have been trying to get this money refunded to Father Schrembs. It is a very small sum. The bill has passed the Senate once, and I hope the claim will have no opposition now.

Mr. TELLER. What is the amount? Mr. SMITH of Michigan. $262.20.

Mr. FULTON. The amendment is in order. A bill for this ator from Michigan, that the bill has also been reported favorably in the other House, and it would be far better to leave it out of this bill and take the chance of getting it through there. However, that is a matter which he will determine for himself.

I shall make no objection to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRAZIER. I offer the amendment I send to the desk. The Secretary. On page 93, after line 13, it is proposed to insert:

To Edmund W. Williams, administrator of the estate of Joseph R. Williams, deceased, $12,940.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, in view of the tacit understanding that prevailed in the Committee on Claims in reference to this bill, I would not have offered this amendment at the present time but for the peculiar hardship to the claimant if the item is not put on the bill. I may state that as a member of the committee when the discussion was had I reserved the right to offer this particular claim as an amendment to the bill.

Mr. FULTON. Has the case been to the Court of Claims? Mr. FRAZIER. Yes.

Mr. FULTON. Has the Senator the finding?
Mr. FRAZIER. Yes. It was reported from the Court of Claims too late to go on the last omnibus claims bill. It came in after that bill was reported to the Senate, and for that reason it was not placed on the last claims bill which passed Congress.

This is a thoroughly meritorious bill. The claimants were loyal; it was so found by the Court of Claims. The claim arises for the use and occupation of buildings in the city of The buildings were used as headquarters for the army officers and for a hospital. While the claim was for a much larger sum than has been finally reported from the Court of Claims, there can be no sort of question as to the justness of The ground upon which it was disallowed is that of laches. The report of the Court of Claims simply says, in substance, that the claim had not been presented to the claims commission and other tribunals.

Mr. President, there can not be any laches in this case, because it arises for the rent of property, and each one of these tribunals created by Congress for the purpose of hearing these claims has determined that it has no jurisdiction to hear and determine the question of rent. The Quartermaster-General, February 26, 1874, decided that he had no jurisdiction of a claim for rent. The Southern Claims Commission decided they had no jurisdiction of claims for rent. The Court of Claims decided that under the Bowman Act it had no jurisdiction to determine the question of claims for rent. So there was no tribunal that had jurisdiction before which the claimant in this case could present his claim until the passage of the Tucker Act, in 1887. Shortly thereafter a bill was introduced here and sent under the resolution of the Senate to the Court of Claims, and in 1902 was reported back to the Senate favorably.

I hope that the rule that has heretofore seemingly prevailedor at least for the last few minutes-of voting down these amendments will not prevail in this case, because it is a peculiar case, and it is entitled to favorable consideration and ought to be placed on the bill.

Mr. FULTON. I regret very much being compelled to oppose this claim, for I know how very deeply the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Frazier] feels about it. He has been very earnest in advocating its passage during all the time this bill has been under consideration. He very earnestly urged it before the committee, but it belongs to that class of claims which we have excluded, and it would be unjust to allow this and exclude the There is a direct finding here of laches:

The claim was not presented to the Southern Claims Commission, the Quartermaster-General, or the Commissary-General, nor to any department of the Government.

It is quite true that the claims commission did not, or it held that it did not, have jurisdiction to entertain claims for rent and for the use of real estate, but it seems extraordinary that during all that time a party having a claim, one that he considered a bona fide claim, and realizing his own loyalty to the Government, would not have presented it to the Commissary-General or the Quartermaster-General or some department of the Government; and the fact that no explanation of his delay and nondiligence in that regard has been offered justifies the assumption of negligence or laches. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. FRAZIER. Laches has been charged where the claimant had no court that had jurisdiction to determine it. We can not put ourselves in the attitude of saying that a man is guilty of negligence for not doing a thing that he is prevented purpose has passed the Senate. I suggest, however, to the Sen- by law from doing. These courts had no jurisdiction of the claim. Therefore there could not be a question of laches for not going into a court which had already held that it had no jurisdiction. It would have been a waste of time and money. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ELKINS. I offer the amendment I send to the desk. The Secretary. On page 132, after line 8, in the West Virginia items, it is proposed to insert:

To Wildey Lodge, No. 27, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Charles Town, W. Va., $2,100, the amount found due by the Court of Claims and reported in Senate Document No. 136, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, this is a most meritorious and worthy claim. The court in its findings sets out the facts and finds favorably to it. It arises for the destruction by fire of an Odd Fellows' Hall situated at Charles Town, W. Va. The troops took possession of the lodge on the 28th of May, 1862, and used it as a quartermaster's office, storing quartermaster's stores. Shortly after that, during the campaign in West Virginia by one of the armies invading that part of the country, on the appearance of the confederate troops the Union troops abandoned the town, and of course the quartermaster's establishment; but before doing it they set fire to it to destroy, I suppose, the stores and not allow them to fall into the hands of the enemy.

Mr. President, the court finds that this claim is just. These are the facts: Belonging to a benevolent institution, doing good-

Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. ELKINS. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. Does not the Senator understand that it was an act of war; that the property was destroyed to keep it from falling into the hands of the enemy? Does the Senator assume that any government would pay such a claim?

Mr. ELKINS. I do assume that the Government would pay a just and fair claim, as it should in this case. They burned up the property in the interest of suppressing the rebellion, I suppose; they did not want these quartermaster's stores to fall into the hands of the enemy and they burned down this lodge building. It is not a private claim.

Mr. KEAN. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment? Mr. ELKINS. Certainly. Mr. KEAN. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Oregon to the fact that there is a similar claim in the bill from New Mexico.

Mr. ELKINS. And allowed?

Mr. KEAN. And allowed in this bill. Mr. FULTON. Similar to this one?

Mr. KEAN. Similar to this one; private property that would fall into the hands of the enemy and was burned.

Mr. FULTON. I recall that claim. Mr. KEAN. It is a very poor claim, I think. Mr. FULTON. It is rather on the border line.
Mr. ELKINS. This is the claim of a benevolent institution, not of an individual. It involves only $2,100, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. On page 41, after line 19, in the Colorado items, I move to insert:

To Edward F. Mitchell, of Denver, Colo., $4,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to state briefly what the claim is. Mr. Mitchell made a contract with the Government to carry the mail in Colorado some years ago for a certain sum over a certain line. The department arbitrarily ordered him to carry it over a different line and ordered him also to carry it with the same compensation which he had bid for, and they had accepted his bid. He carried the mail for the statutory time under his bid on an entirely different and a more difficult route, and he claimed and proved before the court that it cost him

If the Senator from Oregon is not willing to accept it, I will proceed to offer another amendment.

Mr. FULTON. The findings are quite lengthy. I do not remember just the facts in the case, but I do know that we went over the matter very carefully. I did not feel that we could see our way clear to accept it. I must object to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. I want to present another case that did not come from the Court of Claims, and I want to say that there is not any legal liability on the Government of the United States to It is a mere question whether it is a proper and a just thing to do, and if the Senate does not think it is I shall of course be compelled to be satisfied with its finding.

I send the amendment to the desk, and after it is read I desire to say a word or two about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. It is proposed to insert, on page 41, after line 19:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William H. Crook, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,000, as compensation for services as secretary to the President to sign land patents for the fiscal years of 1879, 1880, 1881, and 1882, inclusive, and which services were additional to his regular duties as executive clerk and disbursing clerk.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, for many years Congress provided a clerk to sign the patents for the President, and paid him fifteen hundred dollars a year.

Mr. FULTON. As I recall the case—and I ask the Senator whether I am correct—the party was paid a regular salary as a government employee, and he claimed that this was extra work.

Mr. TELLER. That is exactly the case.
Mr. FULTON. I will say to the Senator that the committee did not feel warranted in adding to the salary he received.

Mr. TELLER. It is true that Colonel Crook was under a He was an executive clerk in the office of the President, under Mr. Lincoln, and I believe he has been there ever since, and occupies some position, I think, at present-perhaps as disbursing clerk.

It was shown very thoroughly that this required extra duties and put on him considerable service. The Committee on Claims twice or three times reported a bill to pay this claim, and the Senate has twice passed a bill for his relief, giving him $4,000. It is in order, at least. He has the statement made by the Commissioner of the Land Office that his service was worth at least the sum that it is proposed to give him, or that we did give him by law. He has a report from the President of the United States-President Hayes-saying that he rendered the service and ought to be compensated, and twice the Committee on Claims reported favorably upon the claim.

Mr. President, with that I am willing to leave it to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. Now, I want to offer an amendment, and I wish to be frank with the Senate. I do not expect that this amendment will be adopted; but I wish to take only a few minutes to demonstrate to the Senate that we do not always do justice to the men we ought to do justice to, and that the suspicion which attaches to every claim that comes here is not a just suspicion and ought not to be indulged in.

I will send up my amendment, and, after I have made a few remarks, I know I shall not succeed in having it passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The Secretary. It is proposed to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Mary Shannon, administratrix of the estate of Joseph R. Shannon, deceased, formerly of the State of Louisiana, for the loss of the steamer A. W. Quarrier, impressed into the service of the United States in the year 1862, and destroyed in such service, the sum of $48,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, being the value of said steamer as ascertained and reported by the Third Auditor of the Treasury. of the Treasury.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, Mr. Shannon, who was a loyal citizen of Louisiana, was the owner of three steamboats. General Butler, when in charge of the city of New Orleans, seized this boat and sent it up the river on an expedition, and when it got into the Confederate lines the Confederates seized it and subsequently destroyed it.

There is not any controversy about Mr. Shannon's loyalty, because the Southern Claims Commission allowed him for another boat that had been taken from him by the Government and had been lost, and subsequently another boat which belonged to him he recovered possession of.

The bill for the relief of Mr. Shannon has passed the Senate twice. It has had the favorable report of the Committee on Claims at least three times. It has had the favorable report of the Committee of the House once or twice-once to my certain knowledge.

In a very brief statement I can show something of this case. Mr. Shannon made his claim and it was sent to the Treasury Department. The Treasury Department kept the claim there for several years and the auditor found the value of the ship. did not find that the Government was liable for it, but he found the value of the ship to be $48,300, according to my recollection. Then Mr. Shannon came to Congress, and he has been here more or less ever since. His attorney asked me to submit this amendment because of my knowledge of the case.

Mr. President, here is a case where the Government of the United States seized, as it might, and probably as it ought at the time, a vessel belonging to a citizen of the United States, whose loyalty had been recognized by the department of the Government itself, and has never been disputed that I am aware of by anybody. After having taken it and put it in the forces of the United States, they lost it and were unable to return it. I think I need not say that, according to the laws of war, according to the laws of decency and propriety, the Government of the United States should have made compensation for the ship. Nearly ever since I have been in public life this question has been before Congress in some shape. I do not think there has ever been an adverse report upon it from any committee. I do not think there has been an adverse report from any department of the Government against the claim. It is a large claim, the amount being $48,000.

I am tempted to say some things that perhaps I had better not say about the treatment we have given to some people in these matters. I want to make the facts apparent to the Senate. The man who owned the ship, who was entitled to its possession, or who, if he was not entitled to its possession, was entitled to be paid for it when it could not be returned to him, is dead long ago, and his widow is living, a claimant, still hoping that some day the Government of the United States will pay a debt just as honest and just as binding upon it as the bonds that have the seal of the Treasury Department on them.

Mr. President, I do not suppose she will live to see it paid. Neither do I think it will be specially to the credit of the Senate and the House of Representatives that it is not paid. I know frequently when a claim comes up here you will hear that it is an old claim. I remember, more than twenty years ago, when I reported from the Committee on Claims a claim that was at least 20 years old, a Senator rose and said: "We must be very careful about these claims; this is an old claim." It arose in this way, Mr. President, and I only mention it as an illustration: When Johnson was going to Salt Lake with his army he overtook two citizens of the State of Missouri with a train. Those of us who have lived in the West know what a train meant at that time. There were 50, probably there may have been 100, oxen in the train, and there were a large number of wagons containing goods of all kinds that were being transported to California and Salt Lake in that method. They had about six or seven horses in connection with the train. Johnson took possession of the train, and there never has been any fault found with the taking possession of it. He took the goods out of the train and used them.

When the claimants came down here and made their claim, they could not find any statute that would pay for the goods that had been taken nor for the oxen. They did find a statute under which they could receive pay for the horses. So they got about $700 for the horses. They got nothing for the oxen, nothing for the wagons, and nothing for the groceries and goods that they carried in them.

Every year one or both of those men came before Congress and presented their claims. Sometimes they got a report and some-times they did not. At last they got a report after more than twenty years. I think it was about 1879 when they got a report upon what occurred in 1857.

And what did they get, Mr. President? They got the full value of the property when it was taken. They got nothing else. The Government had the advantage of it and the benefit of it. It had saved the Government from buying goods. It had added to the comfort and power of the army. Yet, Mr. President, it was looked upon askance because it was an old claim, because there was no statute under which the Government could pay for it. We were finally able to get through a bill, and those people were paid for the goods that they ought to have been paid for at least in a year from the time they were taken.

Mr. President, I have had much experience upon the Committee on Claims. It is a most thankless task. The Senator from Oregon has served very efficiently and faithfully on that committee, and I do not wonder he said, as he did, that if he were to remain in the Senate he would decline to serve further upon the committee.

The senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] served many years on the committee as its chairman. He knows how many claims come there that are fraudulent or false. how many claims come there that are right and just. The claim assailed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] to-day has the report of the senior Senator from Wyoming recommending its payment.

Mr. President, I wanted to say this in defense of the committee, and in defense of the men who have just and fair claims and come here and present them, and who come here under a suspicion that they are endeavoring to get something out of the Government of the United States, when, in fact, they are only coming here for their own. I repeat what I said yesterday: After more than thirty years' connection with these matters, in my judgment more men go away unpaid than are paid who ought not to be paid.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I hope this claim will not be allowed.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I withdraw the amendment. I only offered it that I might say something and that some one would not say later that Mrs. Shannon had not pressed her claim.

Mr. FULTON. I am grateful to the Senator for taking that course. I want to say to Senators now that I hope further amendments will not be offered and that the bill will not be I am anxious that it shall come to a vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado withdraws the proposed amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. I offer an amendment, which I send to the

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 78, at the end of the North Carolina items, at the bottom of the page, insert:

To George H. Bellamy, administrator of the estate of John H. Thees, late of Brunswick County, $1,800.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to make only a very brief statement regarding this claim. I sincerely trust that the Senator from Oregon will not object to it, although I presume he will.

This is a claim against the Government for salt. has found that John H. Thees was a loyal citizen of the United States. The court has found that by proper military authority the decedent's salt was taken by the military forces and was used by the Federal Army.

The only possible objection that can be made to the claim is the same that was made to the amendment I offered a little while ago, namely, that it was never presented to a military officer or any of the departments of the Government before the bill was introduced in Congress for its payment.

I want to say, Mr. President, to the chairman of the Committee on Claims, if-after the court has found that a claim is justthat the claimant was a loyal citizen—the committee proposed to oppose its payment simply because it was not presented to an officer or to a department before the bill for its payment was introduced in Congress, the Senate ought not to consent to refer a claim of that sort to the court. It ought not to put the claimant to the unnecessary expense of litigating the claim, and it ought not to put the Government to the unnecessary expense of defending against the claim.

The chairman of the committee said a little while ago, when we were considering his amendment to repeal certain provisions of the Bowman and the Tucker acts, that it was his purpose during the present session of Congress to report to the Senate an omnibus resolution referring all claims now pending before the committee to the Court of Claims. I assume that at least one-half of those claims are in exactly the same category which this claim is in.

If that is so, Mr. President, I suggest to the chairman of the committee that if he should report such a provision as that to Congress he would be doing both the claimants and the Government a grave injustice.

Mr. President, I do not believe it was the purpose of Congress, when it permitted this class of claims to be referred to the Court of Claims under either the Bowman or the Tucker acts, after the claim had been passed upon by the court and found a just obligation against the Government, and after the court had declared that the claimant was in no wrong or rebellion against the Government, to refuse to pay the claim simply because it had not been presented to a department of the Government or to a military officer.

I trust the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Fulton] will not be so relentless with reference to this claim as he was with reference to the other. I know that if the Senator from Oregon shall put his veto upon this amendment, of course, it will not be adopted. If he opposed it, I should hardly ask for a vote of the Senate on it. I would not even have offered the amendment, or the one which I offered previously, if it had not been for the fact that, although there was an implied understanding that there were to be no amendments accepted to this bill, the Senator from Oregon had, I believe, interposed no very serious objection as to two or three claims, and the Senate had allowed them to go into the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Simmons].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. I now offer an amendment that I overlooked at the time I should have offered it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 95, after line 11, it is proposed to insert:

To Aitcheson Pollock, John G. Pollock, and Matthew B. Pollock, heirs at law of William Pollock, deceased, $18,060.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, in order that Senators may know that I am not trifling with them, I will say that the Court of Claims held that William Pollock was loval and that the Government took that amount of money. I suppose, however, under the position taken by the chairman of the committee I can not expect to get the amendment into this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CARTER. On behalf of the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose], who is temporarily absent from the Chamber, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted as indicated on the margin thereof.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana on behalf of the Senator from Pennsylvania will be stated.

The Secretary. Under the Pennsylvania items it is proposed to insert:

To Clayton G. Landis, administrator of the estate of David B. Landis, deceased, late of Lancaster Pa., the sum of $11,112.22 and to Peter E. Slaymaker, administrator of the estate of Jacob F. Sheaffer, deceased, late of Lancaster, Pa., the sum of $34,055, as found due and reported by the Court of Claims in Senate Document No. 86, Fifty-eighth Congress, third session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana on behalf of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McENERY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana will be stated.

The Secretary. Under the Louisiana items it is proposed to insert:

To Gertrude Nolasco, the sum of $540.

Mr. McENERY. Mr. President, I will read the findings of the Court of Claims in this case, which are as follows:

the Court of Claims in this case, which are as follows:

It appears from the evidence that Gertrude Nolasco, the person alleged to have furnished such supplies or stores, or from whom the same are alleged to have been taken, was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout said war.

II. There were taken from the claimant, in Feliciana Parish, State of Louisiana, during the war of the rebellion, by the military forces of the United States, for the use of the army, stores and supplies of the kind and character above described which were then and there reasonably worth the sum of $540.

No payment appears to have been made therefor.

III. The claim was never presented to the Southern Claims Commission or to the Commissioners of Claims or to any department of the Government prior to its reference to this court under the act of March 3, 1887, known as the "Tucker Act."

The claimant was a married woman at the time the property was taken and owned the property in her own right. Her husband, being a northern man, left Louisiana in the early part of the war for the North, and died in 1871.

It seems to me, Mr. President, the Government of the United States having taken this amount, no technical objection should stand in the way of this poor woman recovering the sum due

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it will be remembered that in the early part of the day I took exception to an amendment which was put on the bill yesterday, which was supported by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller]. I have not changed my mind about the character of that amendment. believe it ought not to have been put on the bill. I know that if it becomes a law it will result in the District of Columbia that kind. I think I said then that I should resist it, but as Senators are so anxious to have this bill passed, and believing, as I do, that the conferees of the two Houses will never agree to an amendment of that kind, I am willing to withhold any further contention and let it go to conference.

The amendments made, as in Committee of the Whole, were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Fulton, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the 'Bowman' and the 'Tucker' acts, and for other purposes."

EXPLORATIONS IN ALASKA.

Mr. MILTON. I desire to make a favorable report from the Committee on Printing on Senate resolution 268. I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida asks permission, out of order, to report from the Committee on Printing a resolution which will be read.

Mr. FULTON. I object to present consideration, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the reso-Intion.

The Secretary. Senate resolution 268, by Mr. Foraker, providing for the printing of 3,000 copies of "Explorations in Alaska," by First Lieut. Joseph S. Herron (S. Doc. No. 689).

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. FORAKER subsequently said: It is my desire to call up a resolution which was reported a moment ago by the Senator from Florida [Mr. Milton]. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution introduced by Mr. FORAKER on the 28th instant and reported to-day by Mr. MILTON was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That 3,000 copies of Explorations in Alaska, 1899, for an all-American Overland Route from Cook Inlet, Pacific Ocean, to the Yukon, by First Lieut. Joseph S. Herron, Eighth Cavalry, commanding expedition, War Department, Adjutant-General's office, Document No. 138, M. I. D., be printed for the use of the Senate.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask that Senate bill 5729 may be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks that the bill referred to by him may be laid before the Senate. The bill will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5729) to correct the records and authorize the reenlistment of certain noncommissioned officers and enlisted men belonging to companies B, C, and D of the Twenty-fifth U. S. Infantry, who were discharged without honor under Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, November 9, 1906, and the restoration to them of all rights of which they have been deprived on account thereof.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Ohio yesterday to give notice that he would make a motion. Is this in the form of a unanimous-consent request or is it a motion?

Mr. FORAKER. This is in the form of a request simply. expected to make a motion, and I gave notice to that effect, but without considering the unfinished business that I might displace by it. I do not want to displace the unfinished business, and I called the bill up now for a specific purpose. I do not think the Senator from Texas will have any objection to the bill being laid before the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. Very well; I did not understand what was the purpose of the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be considered as being before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, as requested by the Senator from Ohio, in the absence of objection.

Mr. ALDRICH. I beg leave to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill.

Mr. KEAN. Let it be also a substitute for the bill of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNEE].

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the substitute which I propose may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island proposes a substitute, which will be read.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and to insert what I send to the desk.

Mr. WARREN. I want to ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question. As I understand, this is a substitute for all being called upon to pay at least a million dollars for claims of | of the bills on the calendar in reference to this matter—the three items; that is, the bill of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], the bill of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], and the report that is on the calendar recommending the passage of ome bill of relief. It is proposed to close out the entire matter.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is to close out the entire matter. The some bill of relief.

Senator from Wyoming is correct. This is intended as a substitute for all pending Brownsville legislation.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, if I mistake not, the purpose of the Senator from Ohio in calling the matter up at this time is merely to give an opportunity for the presentation of a substitute, and is not to make it the order of business or anything of that kind so far as the present occasion is concerned.

Mr. FORAKER. No; not at this time. I shall ask in a moment for an agreement to vote upon a day to follow,

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the substitute which I send to the desk may be read

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the substitute offered by the Senator from Rhode Island.

The Secretary. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of Senate bill 5729 and to insert:

acting clause of Senate bill 5729 and to insert:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to appoint a court of inquiry to consist of five officers of the United States Army, not below the rank of colonel, which court shall be authorized to hear and report upon all charges and testimony relating to the shooting affray which took place at Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13-14, 1996. Said court shall within one year from the date of its appointment make a final report and from time to time shall make partial reports to the Secretary of War of the results of such inquiry, and such soldiers and noncommissioned officers of Companies B, C, and D of the Twenty-fifth Regiment U. S. Infantry, who were discharged from the military service as members of said regiment under the provisions of Special Order No. 266, dated at the War Department the 9th day of November, 1906, as said court shall find and report as qualified for reenlistment.

SEC. 2. Any noncommissioned officer or private who shall be made eligible for reenlistment under the provisions of the preceding section shall, if reenlisted, be considered to have reenlisted immediately after his discharge under the provisions of the special order hereinbefore cited, and to be entitled, from the date of his discharge under said special order, to the pay, allowances, and other rights and benefits that he would have been entitled to receive according to his rank from said date of discharge as if he had been honorably discharged under the provisions of said special order and had reenlisted immediately.

Mr. FORAKER. While that does not agree with my views as

Mr. FORAKER. While that does not agree with my views as perfectly as I should have been glad to have them met by the proposed legislation, yet, in so far as I have power to do so, I accept the amendment. If there is any objection to my accepting the amendment, I will ask that a vote be taken and that it may be substituted for the bill introduced by me and all other bills on the subject.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.
Mr. McLAURIN. I should like to make a parliamentary in-If this is accepted as substitute for all the other bills, will it then be susceptible of amendment?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly. As I understand, it can be amended.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio, as I understand, accepts the proposed substitute so far as the measure presented by him is concerned, but I have not heard from the majority of the committee.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.
Mr. WARNER. As partially answering the inquiry of the Senator from Texas, I will say that I fully accept the amendment as a substitute for the bill I introduced as having in view

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the parliamentary situation to be this: The proposed substitute is offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] to one bill, and that is the bill reported by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Foraker], being Senate bill 5729. If the amendment shall be adopted by the Senate, the other bills on the same subject can be subsequently indefinitely postponed.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is correct.

Mr. WARREN. That is the parliamentary status. Mr. ALDRICH. That is a correct statement.

Mr. WARNER. Let it be understood, however, that the amendment presented by the Senator from Rhode Island is to be considered a substitute for all pending legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands, but the proposed substitute will be considered only in connection with the bill reported by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Foraker].

Mr. WARREN. I think there is no misunderstanding about the matter. My question of the Senator from Rhode Island was merely to get at the essentials and find what the ultimate result

The Chair ruled properly, of course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the substitute will stand in lieu of Senate bill 5729, reported by the Senator from Ohio, and the bill (S. 6206) for the relief of certain former members of the Twenty-fifth Regiment of U. S. Infantry, without objection, will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. FORAKER. Now that the bill has been amended by the adoption of the substitute, I want to inquire whether or not we can not agree upon a date when we can take a vote on the substitute for the bill. I will ask, Mr. President, in the absence of suggestions, that we take a vote next Monday, I will say, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I have not been able to be in the Chamber much to-day on account of service on a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, but I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that my information is that at least several Senators on this side of the Chamber desire to speak on this subject, and I do not think any agreement to vote at any particular date can be entertained at this time. This bill, of course, has not yet been taken up by the Senate, and, as I understood, was called up merely for the purpose of this substitution.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I was hoping that we might be able to agree upon an early date when a vote could be taken, and that I would not have to make a motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill in the ordinary way, but, of course, unless we can agree, I shall renew the notice I have heretofore given that I will make that kind of a motion, and I will suggest that next Monday, after the routine morning business, I shall move to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President-

Mr. FORAKER. Upon the suggestion of Senators about me, if the Senator from Mississippi will bear with me a moment, in order to accommodate everybody, I suggest that we vote on this bill at 4 o'clock next Wednesday. That will, I think, give every Senator time to speak who desires to be heard.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to make a suggestion, the substitute presents an entirely new phase of this matter. The substitute has not been printed. It is true some few of us have seen a draft or copy of the substitute, but it has not been printed, and there has been no opportunity for us to examine it. It is almost the same as if there were a new bill introduced. It seems to me that there ought not to be any request for a vote at any time until we have had an opportunity, after this substitute shall have been printed, to examine it.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator would not be able, I imagine from his remarks, to agree to any date this afternoon?

Mr. McLAURIN. No, sir; not this afternoon.
Mr. FORAKER. Then I will give notice that on Monday morning I shall call up the bill. If we can agree upon a date when we can vote, I can ascertain that on Monday morning; and if we can not agree, I shall then make a motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. OWEN. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8510) to extend the time of payments on certain homestead entries in Oklahoma, to report it with an amendment. It is a local bill extending the time for the payment on certain purchases of land in Oklahoma. It has the approval of the Interior Department, and I ask for its immediate consideration, as the time will expire on the 1st of February, only a few days off.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to add to the bill the following:

add to the bill the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to extend the time of payments to the purchasers and their assigns applying therefor upon the lots sold, or to be sold, in pursuance of an act entitled "An act providing for the platting and selling of the south half of section 30, township 2 north, range 11 west of the Indian meridian, in the State of Oklahoma, for town-site purposes," approved March 27, 1908, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to permit the unpaid purchase money for such lots to be paid in such installments and at such times as he may deem proper: Provided, however, That said purchasers or their assigns shall be required to pay interest on all such deferred payments sufficient to pay the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians 4 per cent interest on the payments so deferred, and to pay the local authorities entitled to receive the same the equivalent of the state, county, city, and school tax at the legal rate, upon such valuation as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, and to which the lots would be liable if patented, such extension of time not to exceed four years from the date of the approval of this act: Provided further, That not exceeding one-half of the amount which may be set aside by the Secretary of the Interior, under the act above referred to, for the construction of two school buildings may be applied by the Secretary of the Interior to such other improvements as he may deem for the public welfare.

SEC. 2. That the extension provided for in section 1 of this act shall not apply to the following-numbered lots in the official plat: Lots 4 to 14, inclusive, in block 5; lot 7 in block 9, lot 12 in block 10, lot 4 in block 12, lot 12 in block 13, lot 9 in block 14, lot 9 in block 19; lots 1, 10, and 11 in block 20; lot 5 in block 21, lot 11 in block 24, lots 8 and 16 in block 27, lot 10 in block 29, lots 9 and 10 in block 30; lots 8, 9, and 10 in block 32; lot 5 in block 33, lots 5 and 8 in block 34, lots 3 and 12 in block 35; lots 2, 3, and 4 in block 36; lots 6 and 7 in block 37, lot 6 in block 38, lot 13 in block 39, lot 9 in block 40; lots 2, 3, and 11 in block 42; lots 1 and 2 in block 44, lot 12 in block 44; lots 4, 11, 12, 15, and 16 in block 45; lot 8 in block 46; lots 4, 5, 7, and 13 in block 47; lots 9, 10, and 11 in block 50; lot 9 in block 51; lots 3 to 7, inclusive, in block 53; lot 9 in block 54; lots 9, 10, and 12 in block 57; lots 1, 2, 3, 9, and 16 in block 58; lot 2 and 3 in block 59, lot 9 in block 60; lots 1, 4, 5, 6, and 7 in block 61; lot 15 in block 66, lot 4 in block 2; lot 15 in block 38; lot 2 in block 61.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAWSON M. FULLER.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5461) for the relief of Lawson M. Fuller, major, Ordnance Department, United States Army.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection.

the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to reimburse Maj. Lawson M. Fuller, Ordnance Department, United States Army, for loss incurred by him of his personal effects during their transportation on board the U. S. chartered transport Morgan City to the Philippine Islands, by paying to him a sum equal to the loss so sustained by him.

Mr. KEAN. I inquire is there not any amount stated in the bill ?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; not to exceed $1,325.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN SCHOOL AT FORT LEWIS, COLO.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8223) turning over the Indian school at Fort Lewis, Colo., to the State of Colorado for school purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado what is the area of the land that the Government is going to give to the State? Does he know?

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. I think it is 200 acres. However, I am not sure of the fact.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is not very much. I was afraid it might be 2,000. I will not object to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH IN PORTO RICO.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 8601) to provide for the payment of claims of the Roman Catholic Church in Porto Rico.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $120,000, to be paid to the bishop of Porto Rico, as the representative (and trustee) of the Roman Catholic Church in that island, to be used exclusively for the benefit of the Roman Catholic Church in Porto Rico, in full satisfaction of all claims of every nature whatsoever relative to the properties claimed by the Roman Catholic Church in Porto Rico now in possession of the United States.

Mr. KEAN. I ask that the report be published in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report referred to is as follows:

The Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico has had under consideration the following bill:

[S. 8601, 60th Cong., 2d sess.]

A bill to provide for the payment of claims of the Roman Catholic Church in Porto Rico.

Church in Porto Rico.

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $120,000, the same to be paid to the bishop of Porto Rico, as the representative (and trustee) of the Roman Catholic Church in that Island, to be used exclusively for the benefit of the Roman Catholic Church in Porto Rico; and that the acceptance of said sum, paid under the provisions of this act, shall be in full satisfaction of all claims of every nature whatsoever relative to the properties claimed by the Roman Catholic Church in Porto Rico which are now in the possession of the United States, to wit, the building known as the "Santo Domingo Barracks" and the land pertaining thereto, and the site of the building formerly known as the "Ballajā Barracks," now known as the "infantry barracks," both properties in the city of San Juan, Porto Rico; the Roman Catholic Church to relinquish all rights and actions regarding said properties, and the said properties to belong exclusively to the United States: Provided further, That upon the acceptance of this sum the Roman Catholic Church shall relinquish all claims of any kind whatsoever against the United States arising in Porto Rico prior to the approval of this act.

In view of the following report of Mr. Robert Bacon, Assistant Secretary of State, and Maj. Frank McIntyre, relative to their mission to Porto Rico to adjust the questions pending between the people of the insular government and the Roman Catholic Church, it is recommended that the bill do pass without amendment:

[House Doc. No. 1204, 60th Cong., 2d sess.]

THE WHITE HOUSE, Washington, December 14, 1908.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from Mr. Robert Bacon, Assistant Secretary of State, and Maj. Frank McIntyre, U. S. Army, of their mission to Porto Rico, under my oral instructions, to meet with representatives of the insular government of Porto Rico and of the Roman Catholic Church in that island, with a view to reaching some equitable settlement of the questions pending between that church, on the one hand, and the United States and the people of Porto Rico, on the other.

settlement of the questions pending between the first and the United States and the people of Porto Rico, on the other.

The nature of these questions and the conditions of the controversy at the time of the meeting of the commission at San Juan are fully and clearly stated in the report, as is the basis for an equitable and complete settlement of all the questions in controversy unanimously agreed on by the members of the commission in a memorandum signed on August 12, 1908.

It will be seen that under the terms of this memorandum the United States is to pay to the Roman Catholic Church in Porto Rico the sum of $120,000 in full settlement of all claims of every nature whatsoever relative to the properties claimed by the church which are now in the possession of the United States and which are defined in the report.

The properties specifically in question form part of the land reserved for military purposes in San Juan and are now occupied by United States troops. I am informed that they are well suited to such purposes and that to provide for the garrison of San Juan elsewhere would require the expenditure of many times the sum involved in the proposed settlement.

ment.

This basis of agreement has received my entire approval, and I trust that the Congress will see the great importance of the matter and will at its present session pass such legislation as is necessary to give the basis of the agreement effect on the part of the United States.

The legislative assembly of Porto Rico has already, by a joint resolution approved September 16, 1908, ratified the basis of agreement recommended by the commissioners in so far as it affects that government and enacted the necessary legislation to make it effective.

Theodore Roosevelly.

· DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, September 22, 1908.

Department of State,
Washington, September 22, 1908.

Mr. President: In compliance with your oral instructions to meet with representatives of the insular government of Porto Rico and of the Roman Catholic Church in that island, and come to some equitable agreement which might form the basis of a final settlement of the questions pending between that church on the one hand and the United States and the people of Porto Rico on the other, we have the honor to submit the following report:

In the transfer of sovereignity of territory from Spain, where the church and state were closely united, to the United States, where such union was incompatible with the institutions and laws of the country, many questions arose as to the ownership of properties held by the Roman Catholic Church, as well as to other properties held by the Government but claimed by the church.

In all other cases where the United States, as distinguished from the municipalities and insular governments, has been a party to these questions, the settlement has been made amicably without reference to the courts. Referring to this, the Supreme Court, in the case of the Municipality of Ponce, appellant, v. The Roman Catholic Apostolic Church in Porto Rico, in its decision of June 1, 1908, says:

"The properties of the church in Cuba and the Philippines at the time of the ratification of the treaty were far more considerable than those in Porto Rico. And he controversies or questions arising as to those properties have been quite generally adjusted, in both Cuba and the Philippines, partly with and partly without recourse to the courts.

In Cuba, a commission was appointed to consider the whole question, and its report contains much interesting and pertinent information. It begins with the fundamental proposition that, 'The church, as a juridicial person, has held and holds the right to acquire, possess, or transfer all kinds of properties. The church has never been denied this right in Spain; rather, on the contrary, in all the provisions covering th ble, yet there arose in that island, with respect thereto, several involved questions.

Questions as to title to the churches and temples in the peaceful possession of the church at the time of the withdrawal of Spain from the island are settled by the decision in the case of the Municipality of Ponce v. The Roman Catholic Church, above referred to, in which the Supreme Court held that the ownership of such property was and remained in the church, notwithstanding the fact that the municipalities may have furnished some of the funds for building or repairing the churches. Other questions in Porto Rico remained unsettled, and after several years spent in efforts to have these controversies adjusted as they had been adjusted in Cuba and as somewhat similar questions have recently been adjusted in the Philippine Islands by negotiations outside of the courts, the church brought suit against the people of Porto Rico under an act of the legislative assembly of Porto Rico giving original jurisdiction for the trial and adjudication of such questions to the supreme court of Porto Rico.

In the brief of the plaintiff the properties claimed as held by the people of Porto Rico and belonging to the church are enumerated as follows:

the other properties which are the subject of the reclamation made in this suit.

Briefly, the title of the United States to the property in question held by it is identical with that of the People of Porto Rico to the property which the court directed should be returned to the church.

The estimated values of these two properties, as approved by the supreme court of Porto Rico, are as follows: The convent of Santo Domingo and the lands appertaining thereto, $73,000; the site on which the Ballaja Barracks are erected, $51,000. The annual rentals of these two properties were estimated at $4,380 per annum, and $1,000 per annum, respectively, or a total to October 18, 1908, of $54,400. The court in its decision in directing the return of the properties held under identical title by the People of Porto Rico, directed also the payment of rentals from October 18, 1898. From the decision of the court the People of Porto Rico has appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The foregoing briefly gives the condition of the controversy at the time of the meeting of the commission in San Juan, P. R. The church was represented by the bishop of Porto Rico and Juan Hernandez Lopez, the attorney for the church; the People of Porto Rico was represented by its attorney-general, Henry M. Hoyt, and José de Diego, the speaker of the house of delegates.

We had, prior to the meeting, carefully examined the real properties in question, and believe that the estimated values given are not excessive. In fact, the assessed value of these properties, as shown by attached copies of letters, is considerably in excess of the estimated values approved by the court.

After sessions extending over a good part of the days of August 11 and 12, all the members of the commission united in signing as an equitable and complete settlement of all matters in dispute between the Roman Catholic Church in Porto Rico, on the one part, and the United States of America and the people of Porto Rico on the other part:

Being considered desirable to bri part:

It being considered desirable to bring to an end the controversies relative to certain property situated in the island of Porto Rico, claimed to be the property of the Roman Catholic Church of Porto Rico, and held in part by the United States of America and in part by the people of Porto Rico, the undersigned, consisting of two persons appointed by the President of the United States, of two persons representing the Roman Catholic Church in Porto Rico, and two persons representing the people of Porto Rico, appointed by the governor thereof, have reached the following basis for a settlement of such controversies, and have agreed to recommend the same to their respective sources of authority, for their approval and ratification, and for submission to such legislative and governmental bodies as may be necessary for the full legalization thereof.

First. The United States to pay to the Roman Catholic Church in legalization thereof.

First. The United States to pay to the Roman Catholic Church in Porto Rico the sum of $120,000 in full settlement of all claims of every nature whatsoever relative to the properties claimed by the church, which are now in the possession of the United States, and are specified and described in the judgment rendered by the supreme court of Porto Rico in a certain suit No. 1, brought by the church against the people of Porto Rico, in the supreme court of Porto Rico, the church to relinquish all rights and actions regarding said properties, the said properties to belong exclusively to the United States.

Second. The people of Porto Rico to pay to the Roman Catholic Church in Porto Rico the sum of $180,000 in full settlement of all claims of every nature whatsoever relative to the properties claimed by the church, which are now in the possession of the people of Porto Rico, and are specified and described in the judgment rendered by the supreme court of Porto Rico in said suit No. 1, hereinbefore mentioned, and the church to relinquish all rights and actions regarding such properties, which properties shall belong exclusively to the people of Porto Rico.

Rico, and are specified and described in the judgment rendered by the supreme court of Porto Rico in said suit No. 1, hereimbefore mentioned, and the church to relinquish all rights and actions regarding such properties, which properties shall belong exclusively to the people of Porto Rico.

Third. The people of Porto Rico to turn over to the Roman Catholic Church the chapel situated in Santurce, described in suit No. 10 between the Roman Catholic Church and the people of Porto Rico, the said chapel, together with the land surrounding it in the form of a rectangle, the outer lines of which shall be at least 3 meters distant from the eastern, southern, and western outer walls thereof, and which shall extend to the Carretera on the northern slid, to be the exclusive property of the church in Porto Rico.

Fourth. The people of Porto Rico to return to the Roman Catholic Church in Porto Rico all censos claimed and enumerated in the judgment rendered by the supreme court of Porto Rico in the aforesaid suit No. 1, together with all interest the principal of such censos as may have been collected since Occide with all interests the principal of such censos as may have been collected since Occide with all interests the principal of such censos as may have been collected since Occide with all interests the principal of such censos as may have been collected since Occide with all interests the principal of such censos as may have been collected since of the principal of such censos as may have been collected since of the principal of such censos as may have been collected since of the such and after said October 18, 1898.

Fifth. The people of Porto Rico to return to the Roman Catholic Church in Porto Rico to paid of the brief dated February 24, 1906, submitted to the supreme court of Porto Rico to the submerment of the property marked "No. 16" and "No. 17" in said statement.

Under the terms of this memorandum the United States is to pay the Roman Catholic Church in Porto Rico the sum of $120,000, in full settlement of all claims of every nature whatsoever relative to the properties claimed by the church which are now in possession of the United States. These properties are:

First. The site now occupied by the Ballajā barracks, or, as the building is now known, the "infantry barracks," in San Juan, and the Santo Domingo barracks and the land pertaining thereto. Both of these are on the lands reserved for military purposes in the city of San Juan. The values of these properties as estimated by the supreme court of Porto Rico, are:

The assessed values are:

The site of the Ballaja barracks______ Convent of Santo Domingo and adjacent land___

As has been stated heretofore, the United States title to this property is identical with that of the people of Porto Rico to the several properties which were the subject of the suit above referred to.

The opinion of the court was that the property was the property of the church, and adjudged to the church the possession of that held by the people of Porto Rico and a rental of 6 per cent per annum on the estimated value of said property from October 18, 1598. This rental in the case of the property held by the United States amounted to $54,400 on October 18, 1908.

The settlement now recommended requires payment to the church of a lump sum in full settlement of claims to ownership, rental and all other claims of any nature whatsoever which it may have against the property held by the United States. The property is to belong exclusively to the United States, the church to guarantee the title thereto.

The Roman Catholic Church is further to relinquish all claims of every kind whatsoever arising in Porto Rico priog to the date of the ratification of this settlement either against the United States or the people of Porto Rico. In other words, a final and full settlement of all controversies is provided for.

The character of the claim of the church to the ownership of this property is reviewed in the oplainon. Briefly, the facts of this control of the claim of the church to the ownership of this property is reviewed in the oplainon. Briefly, the facts of this control of the control of Porto Rico, in so far as the property held by the United States is concerned, are as follows:

Don Juan Ponce de Leon, the conquerer and first governor of the island of Porto Rico, donated to the Dominican friars a piece of land situated in the northern part of the city of San Juan, extending to the wall looking to the sea, in order that they might establish and found a convenient of the Dominican friars.

Late in the year 1838 the religious communities of men in the Island of Porto Rico were suppressed and all of their properties were selzed by the government without payment of damages or indemnification. They were expelled from their convents by public forces, and the convents were converted into barracks for the lodging of the troops of the 2The Government continued disposing freely of the properties thus selzed, allenating some of them and using all of their products, until the signing of the treaty or concordat of March 16, 1851, between His Hollness Pope Plus IX and Queen Isabella II, which concordat has since that time formed a part of the public law of Spain. Among other things, this concordat provided that the properties which belonged to the suppressed religious orders, then in the possession of the Government of 1851, there was entered into an additional concordat of 1859 between the same authorities. This concordat spectifically recognized the right of the church to acquire, that such the suppressed religious orders, ment in 1855. Drieny, this is the statement of facts on which the courch held the property in question to be the property of the Roman Catholic Church.

The dissenting opinion held that in no case could the claim for rental be justified prior to May 1, 1900, the date on which the people of Porto Rico became a body politic under the organic act passed by Congress on the 12th of the previous April. It further held that the court could not properly take judicial notice of the authority of the diocesan prelate, or bishop of Porto Rico, to represent the Roman Catholic Church in litigation nor to ascertain by any other means than by evidence properly introduced the relations of the Franciscan and Dominican friars to the Roman Catholic Church, and that it may be that they held their own lands and property entirely independent of the church, and that neither the Pope nor the bishop had any control over them whatever, and that there was no evidence in the case to show that the church had any right to represent these monastic orders or authority to bring a suit in their behalf; that any claim which the church may have had for the nonfulfillment of the terms of the concordat of 1859 was one against the Crown of Spain for what was justly due, but even as against the Crown of Spain the church could not claim the property itself, much less from a purchaser who acquired the same in good faith long after the concordat had been made.

It was further recited in the dissenting opinion that it is judicially known to the court from the public laws of Spain and the Province of Porto Rico that annual appropriations were made for the support of the clergy and public worship and for pensions to the dispossessed friars, altogether amounting, during some of the years prior to the American occupation, to nearly $200,000. That this large and liberal appropriation made from year to year by the Spanish Government and the provincial government of Porto Rico was probably accepted in lieu of the bonds or certificates of the public debt which co to these brotherhoods.

The defendant pleads the statute of limitations, which, in Porto Rico in real actions, requires the lapse of thirty years to bar the action. The friars were, as shown by the testimony of three aged witnesses, beyond a doubt, ejected in the year 1838, and ever since that time, it is claimed by the defendant, the Government, either Spanish, American, or insular, has been in adverse, peaceable, and uninterrupted possession of all the properties claimed. The dissenting opinion agrees with the defendant as to this.

The above very briefly outlines the points of difference. A full understanding of the case may be obtained from the following documents:

Senate Report No. 2977, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session.

Transcript of Record, Supreme Court of the United States, October term, 1908, No. 151. "The People of Porto Rico, appellants, v. The Roman Catholic Church in Porto Rico. Appeal from the supreme court of Porto Rico."

Briefs of plaintiff and defendant in the supreme court of Porto Rico. The Senate report gives, on pages 11 et seq., the report of the commission of judges, in accordance with which was settled the identical question in Cuba. The commission reported that the property then in question was the property of the church.

Your commissioners believe that the settlement recommended is a wise one and in accordance with the precedents of terminating similar controversies in Cuba and the Philippines. It is essentially a compromise, and no effort has been made to forecast what might be the decision of the highest court in the case.

While the report of the commission of judges in Cuba and the decision of the supreme court of Porto Rico have both been in favor of the church, its representatives have expressed themselves as favoring a compromise, receiving but part of their claim, rather than proceeding with litigation which they have entered into unwillingly and as a last resort short of yielding what they conceive to be rights that they can not sacrifice without being unfaithful to their trust.

Your commissioners earnestly recommend your approval of the basis of agreement, and that you recommend the necessary appropriation to make it effective.

Attached hereto is the draft of a bill which will, it is believed, carry into effect the proposed agreement.

Yery respectfully,

Robert Bacon,

Assistant Secretary of State.

SAMUEL W. CAMPBELL.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to call up, by unanimous consent, for immediate consideration the bill (S. 7971) for the relief of Samuel W. Campbell.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate the sum of $696 to the credit of Samuel W. Campbell, Indian agent at Lapointe Indian Agency, Wis., on account of money paid by him to Delia M. Rabideau for clerical services. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make such payment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

L. B. WYATT.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I ask for the present consideration of the

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to L. B. Wyatt, late postmaster at New Decatur, Morgan County, Ala., $135.60, in full compensation for fumigating the mails during the yellow-fever epidemic between September 22 and November 12, 1888, made under proper authority. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ELWOOD, IND.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 7742) to increase the limit of cost for purchase of site and erection of a post-office building at Elwood,

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that the limit of cost fixed by the act of Congress for the purchase of site and erection of a post-office building at Elwood, Ind., be extended from $50,000 to $75,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT PECK INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

Mr. DIXON. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 8273) to amend an act approved May 30, 1908, entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all the surplus lands after allotment."

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend section 17 of the act referred to so as to read:

SEC. 17. That the lands allotted, those retained or reserved, and the surplus lands sold or otherwise disposed of shall be subject for a period of twenty-five years to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country, and that the Indian allottees, whether under the care of an Indian agent or not, shall for a like period be subject to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the sale or other disposition of intoxicants to Indians.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCES F. CLEVELAND AND MARY LORD HARRISON.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 25019) granting a franking privilege to Frances F. Cleveland and Mary Lord Harrison.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOLOMON M. BENNETT.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5756) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Solomon M. Bennett.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Solomon M. Bennett, late of Company C, Third West Virginia Cavalry, and to grant him an honorable discharge.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPROVEMENT OF LAKE MICHIGAN.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I desire to call up Senate concurrent resolution 62.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. SMITH of Michigan on the 7th instant, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made on the shores and waters of Lake Michigan at Leland. Leelanau County, Mich., with a view to determining the advantage, best location, and probable cost of a breakwater to form a harbor of refuge at that point, and submit a plan and estimate for such improvements.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BOISE, IDAHO.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 4090) to provide for the acquiring of additional ground and for the enlarging of the government building at Boise, Idaho.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $125,000, for the purpose of acquiring, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, additional land and grounds for the extension of and for the enlargement of the government building at Boise, Idaho.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AUGUSTUS BANNIGAN.

Mr. KEAN. There is a small bill on the calendar, involving only $414, which I should like to call up. It is the bill (H. R. 16191) to refund certain moneys paid into the Treasury of the United States through mistake by Augustus Bannigan.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to repay Augustus Bannigan $414, paid into the Treasury of the United States by mistake by him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONUMENT TO BRIG. GEN. JAMES SHIELDS.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 6554) for the erection of a monument to the memory of Brig. Gen. James Shields in St. Mary's Cemetery, Carrollton, Mo.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Library with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a suitable monument to be erected over the grave of Brig. Gen. James Shields in St. Mary's Cemetery, at Carrollton, Mo., and for this purpose the sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the erection of a monument over the grave of Brig. Gen. James Shields in St. Mary's Cemetery, Carrollton, Mo.'

LIGHT-HOUSE SERVICE ON HAWAIIAN COASTS.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6145) to refund to the Territory of Hawaii the amount expended in maintaining light-house service on its coasts from the time of the organization of the Territory until said light-house service was taken over by the Federal Government.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $23,393.69, to be paid to the Territory of Hawaii to reimburse it for money paid, laid out, and expended by it in maintaining light-houses, bell buoys, and light-house service on its coasts from the time the Territory became territory of the United States until such aids to navigation were transferred to and taken under the management and control of the Light-House Board.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS UNDER THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. FULTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4033) to satisfy certain claims against the Government arising under the Navy Department.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. KEAN. Is there a provision in the bill for the Mayflower claims?

Mr. FULTON. There is no provision in the bill for the Mayflower claims. I did not wish to take up the time in offering the amendment. There should be, however, a provision for it. Has the Senator the amendment at hand?

Mr. FULTON. I have one here I intended to offer, but I am going to yield to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. He has an amendment that he wishes to offer.

Mr. BACON. I offer an amendment, to be inserted at the proper place in the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Pacific Pearl Mullet, administratrix of the estate of the late Alfred B. Mullett, the sum of $2,062.06, in full for the balance due her husband, the said Mullett, on account of compensation and his actual expenses incurred as commissioner appointed from civil life on the navy-yard commission under the provisions of the act of August 5, 1882, making appropriations for the naval service, said balance being based upon vouchers heretofore issued and approved by the Secretary of the Navy and now in the possession of the widow of said Mullett.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. After the amendment just agreed to, insert the following:

That the sum of $12,315.27, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay, upon the presentation of satisfactory evidence in each instance, the claims arising out of the collision between the U. S. S. Mayflower and the schooner Menawa in Long Island Sound on July 22, 1908, the same being in full for and the receipt of the sums to be taken and accepted in each case as a full and final discharge of the respective claims.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WARREN. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4931) to correct the military record of Corwin M, Holt.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 9, after the words "eighteen hundred and sixty-five" to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of being absent without authority now standing on the rolls of the army against the name of Corwin M. Hoit, late a first lieutenant of Company B, One hundred and third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and grant him an honorable discharge as of May 1, 1865: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

WILLIAM J. SCOTT.

Mr. OWEN. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8839) for the removal of restrictions from the third selection or allotment of lands selected by William J. Scott, a minor member of the Osage tribe of Indians, and for other purposes, to report it without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 888) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. KEAN. I do not know that I object to the bill, but I think it ought to be explained.

Mr. OWEN. I will explain it. This particular land lies at the junction of two railways and is intended for a town site. It is recommended by the Interior Department and would do harm to the minor if he were not permitted to take advantage of the opportunity. The town otherwise would go elsewhere.

Mr. KEAN. But the town would probably go where the

Mr. OWEN. It would occupy other land, being only a small town possibly, and this minor would lose the opportunity.

Mr. KEAN. I do not object to the bill, but I should like to have bills on the calendar a little beforehand so that I can see the reports.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEAMSHIP MONTARA.

Mr. PILES. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8429) to refund certain tonnage taxes and light dues levied on the steamship Montara without register.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to refund $1,695, assessed and collected under sections 4219 and 4225, Revised Statutes, in the case of the steamship Montara, entered at Seattle on July 9, 1906, from Yokohama without register, upon application by the Pacific Coast Steamship Company.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time. and passed.

STANDING ROCK INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. GAMBLE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 7641) setting apart certain lands in the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, for cemetery purposes.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consider-

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, in line 9, after the word "Reservation," to

And the same shall not be subject to taxation so long as the same may be used for cemetery purposes.

So as to make the bill read:

That the following-described tract of land situated in Boreman County, in the State of South Dakota, and described as follows, to wit: The west 10 chains of lot 3, in section 26, of township 20 north, of range 25 cast, of the Black Hills principal meridian, be, and the same hereby is, reserved for cemetery purposes for the perpetual use of the Indians of the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, and the same shall not be subject to taxation so long as the same may be used for cemetery purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GAMBLE. I offer an amendment. On page 1, line 5, I move to strike out the words "the west 10 chains," and to insert in lieu thereof, "a strip of land 10 chains wide on the west side."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF MARK S. GORRILL.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 18744) for the relief of the estate of Mark S. Gorrill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to issue to the estate of Mark S. Gorrill, late of Methuen, Mass., duplicates in lieu of United States 4 per cent bonds of the funded loan of 1907, or to pay to the estate of Mark S. Gorrill the principal and interest due upon the bonds therein described. But the legal representatives of the estate shall first file in the Treasury a bond in the penal sum of $12,500, with good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, with condition to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the bonds and interest coupons.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KEAN. I was going to move an executive session, but the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] is very anxious to be recognized, and therefore I withhold the motion.

NORFOLK COUNTY WATER COMPANY.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask the Senate to consider the bill (H. R. 4836) granting to the Norfolk County Water Company the right to lay and maintain a water main through the military reservation on Willoughby Spit, Norfolk County, Va.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. KEAN. The bill has the approval of the Secretary of War, I suppose?

Mr. DANIEL. Yes, sir; and it has all the customary restrictions in it. It has passed the House and is recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from New Jersey withhold the motion for a moment that I may have a short bill passed? Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

GEORGE M. VOORHEES.

Mr. WARREN. With the courtesy of the Senator from New Jersey, I ask leave to call up the bill (H. R. 17572) for the relief of George M. Voorhees.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

That is a queer bill. Mr. KEAN.

Mr. WARREN. There is an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 9, after the word "Infantry," to insert:

And to issue to said George M. Voorhees an honorable discharge as of date October 13, 1862.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and instructed to interpret and consider Special Orders, No. 59, date February 5, 1863, approved February 10, 1863, equivalent to the honorable discharge of George M. Voorhees, late captain Company D. Ninety-third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and to issue to said George M. Voorhees an honorable discharge as of date October 13, 1862: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.
The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 29, 1909.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D. The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REPRINT OF REPORT, AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw House Report No. 1919, being the report accompanying the agricultural appropriation bill, in order that certain typographical errors contained therein may be corrected, and that the same be reprinted.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from further consideration of it and to recommit the report?

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, it seemed to me that that was hardly necessary. I simply desire to have a reprint made of the same report in order that certain typographical errors contained therein may be corrected.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to withdraw House Report No. 1919, accompanying the agricultural appropriation bill, make certain corrections in the same, and that it be reprinted. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BANKRUPTCY LAW.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following order, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That for the remainder of this session the bill (H. R. 21929) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, as amended by an act approved February 5, 1903, shall have the privilege of bills reported by committees having the right to report at any time: Provided, That in the consideration of the said bill no procedure shall be permitted to interfere with the offering of an amendment in the nature of a substitute which shall provide for the repeal of the existing bankruptcy law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if the object of this order is to make that bill privileged, so that it will take preced-order is to make that bill privileged, so that it will take precedence of everything except matters in the nature of appropriation bills?

Mr. SHERLEY. It would give the same status to this that bills reported from committees having the right to report at any time have, which, interpreted, practically means that it would have a privilege subject to appropriation bills and conference reports.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Would not that order place it on an equality with appropriation bills that come from committees?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think not; and it would be always within the privilege of the House upon calling up the matter to determine whether it would or would not consider it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is true of appropriation bills.
Mr. SHERLEY. I understand; but appropriation bills, in my judgment, would take precedence over this, if the order were agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I feel I shall have to object.
Mr. SHERLEY. I think the gentleman is mistaken in his view. It is not going to interfere with the bill that he has in mind, and which is the reason for his objection. This order would not give the bill any higher dignity than rests with the bill the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then what is the object of the gentleman's asking for this special privilege, if he can take it up on a par with all similar measures?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not think that is the exact status.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The gentleman from Michigan does not object, does he?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do object, but I will withhold it if the gentleman does.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that there are a number of us on the Committee on the Judiciary who do not agree to all of these amendments, but if the bankruptcy law is to remain on the statutes we think there are some features of it that might well be amended. This simply puts the measure in such a situation that it can be considered when appropriation bills and conference reports are not in the way. We have reserved the right to offer an amendment repealing the bankruptcy law, and other amendments can be offered, and as a member of the Judiciary Committee, I see no reason why it should not be considered by Congress at this session anyway. Therefore I do not feel like objecting, and I do not think any member of that committee does

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan objects.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 24833.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the consideration of the following bill, and to consider the same in the House at this time. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 24833) to declare and enforce the forfeiture provided by section 4 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1875, entitled "An act granting to railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States."

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to hear a little something about this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill is an exact copy of the bill of June 26, 1906, providing for the cancellation of railroad rights of way where the grantees had not complied with the provisions of the law under which the rights of way were granted. While those rights of way are conditioned upon the performance of certain acts, they can not be canceled and the public lands unencumbered of those rights except by act of Con-This bill is intended to bring down to date the act of June 26, 1906, of which it is a copy.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will ask the gentleman if he has furnished a copy of this bill to the gentleman from Missouri

[Mr. CLARK].

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to the gentleman I have furnished a copy to the gentleman from Missouri and discussed the matter with him.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman what is the need of this proviso—
Mr. HENRY of Texas. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

DONATING CANNON TO MARSHALL COUNTY, W. VA

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 24151) to authorize the Secretary of War to donate two condemned brass or bronze cannon or fieldpieces and cannon balls to the county court of Marshall County, W. Va., with amendments, which were read.

Mr. HUBBARD of West Virginia. I move that the House agree to the amendments proposed by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia moves that the House agree to the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The bill is on the Union Calendar, and the request of the gentleman is to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill and to consider the same at this time. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 25155) to amend an act approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands and for other purposes."

Whereas section 7 of the act of Congress of July 1, 1902, provides as follows: "The legislature shall hold annual sessions, commencing on the first Monday of February in each year and continuing not exceeding ninety days thereafter (Sundays and holidays not included): Provided in the control of the contro vided, That the first meeting of the legislature shall be held upon the call of the governor within ninety days after the first election;" and Whereas in practice such contingencies may arise as will make impossible the holding of the regular annual sessions on the first Monday of February in each year, as provided in the said section of the act of Congress of July 1, 1902: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the seventh section of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1902, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 7. The legislature shall hold annual sessions, commencing on the first Monday of February in each year and continuing not exceeding ninety days thereafter (Sundays and holidays not included): Provided, however, That the Philippine legislature may by law fix the date for the commencement of its annual sessions: And provided further, That the first meeting of the legislature shall be held upon the call of the governor within ninety days after the first election: And provided further, That if at the termination of any session the appropriations necessary for the support of government shall not have been made, an amount equal to the sums appropriated in the last appropriation bills for such purposes shall be deemed to be appropriated; and until the legislature shall act in such behalf the treasurer may, with the advice of the governor, make the payments necessary for the purposes aforesaid."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The-Chair hears none.

The preamble was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Cooper of Wisconsin, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MONONGAHELA RIVER, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 25552.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

bill (H. R. 25552) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Monogahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania, by the Liberty Bridge Company,' approved March 2, 1907," approved March 16, Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same: H. R. 21957. An act relating to affairs in the Territories;

H. R. 26606. An act to authorize the Lewis Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Missouri River;

H. R. 26920. An act to repeal section 12 of an act entitled "An act to provide for a union railroad station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1903, and to provide for the location and erection of a substation on the parking at the corner formed by the intersection of the east side of Seventh street and the south side of C street SW., in the city of Washington, D. C., by the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company, and to provide for the approval of the same by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 26709. An act to amend an act to provide for the re-organization of the consular service of the United States.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. R. 118. Joint resolution to enable the States of Tennessee and Arkansas to agree upon a boundary line and to determine the jurisdiction of crimes committed on the Mississippi River and adjacent territory.

NEW JUDICIAL DIVISION, TENNESSEE.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 24635, which send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Hull] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill on the House Calendar, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 24635) to create a new division in the middle judicial dis-trict of the State of Tennessee.

A bill (H. R. 24635) to create a new division in the middle judicial district of the State of Tennessee.

Be it enacted, etc., That a new division of the middle judicial district of the State of Tennessee, to be known as the northeastern division of the middle judicial district of Tennessee, be, and the same is hereby, established, to be composed of the following counties, to wit: Putnam, Jackson, Clay, Overton, Pickett, Fentress, Cumberland, White, Van Buren, Dekalb, Smith, and Macon; and said counties be, and the same are hereby, transferred to said northeastern division of said middle district of Tennessee, but no additional clerk or marshal shall be appointed in or for said district.

SEC. 2. That terms of the circuit court and of the district court of the northeastern division judicial district of Tennessee shall be held at Cookeville, in said State, each year on the first Mondays in April and October, after the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. That the clerks of the district and circuit courts for the middle district of Tennessee, and the marshal and district attorney for said district, shall perform the duties appertaining to their offices, respectively, for said courts of said northeastern division judicial district, and except when court is in session and a judge present the clerk's office of said courts may be at Nashville, where all records for said courts may be kept as of the same court and all duties performed as though the clerk were at Cookeville; but should, in the judgment of the district judge and the clerk, the business of said courts hereafter warrant the employment of a deputy clerk as Cookeville, Tenn., new books and records may be opened for the court herein created and kept at Cookeville.

SEC. 4. That all suits not of a local nature in said circuit and district courts against a single defendant, inhabitant of said State.

SEC. 4. That all suits not of a local nature in said circuit and district courts against a single defendant, inhabitant of said State, must be brought in the division of the district in which he resides; but if there are two or more defendants residing in different divisions of the district such suits may be brought in either division.

Sec. 5. That all prosecutions for crimes or offenses hereafter committed in either of the divisions of said district shall be cognizable within such division, and all prosecutions for crimes or offenses here-tofore committed in the middle district as hereofore constituted shall be commenced and proceeded with as if this act had not been passed.

Sec. 6. That all grand and petit jurors summoned for service in each division shall be residents of such division. All mesne and final process subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, issued in either of said divisions, may be served and executed in either or both of the divisions, Sec. 7. That in all cases of removal of suits from the courts of the State of Tennessee to the courts of the United States, in the middle district of Tennessee, such removal shall be to the United States courts in the division in which the county is situated from which the removal is made, and the time within which the removal shall be perfected, in so far as it refers to or is regulated by the terms of the United States courts, shall be deemed to refer to the terms of the United States courts, shall be deemed to refer to the terms of the United States courts held in said northeastern division of the middle judicial district.

Sec. 8. That each of said courts shall be held in a building to be district.

SEC. 8. That each of said courts shall be held in a building to be provided for that purpose by the county or municipal authorities and without expense to the United States.

SEC. 9. That this act shall be in force from and after the 30th day of June, A. D. 1909, and all acts and parts of acts so far as inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Also the following committee amendment:

In line 2, on page 2, strike out the words "first Mondays in April and October" and insert in lieu thereof the words "second Mondays in May and November.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will say this is a class of bills to the consideration of which I have uniformly objected in the House. Mr. PAYNE.

Notwithstanding that, the Judiciary Committee seem to be unanimous in their desire to create new divisions in different parts of the United States. During the time that we had a call of the calendar a number of these bills were reached after the hour had been set, and were passed by the House. The House seems to have a disposition to pass these bills. I do not think it fair to single out the bill of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Hull] as one of the bills to be objected to; and therefore, while I do not believe the bill ought to pass, the Judiciary Committee seem to have a contrary opinion, as I understood from some of the members, from the universal desire to create new districts and new judges. This being a safety valve out of that dilemma—and to give new judges and new districts would create a large and additional expense—I shall not object to this bill.

Mr. JENKINS. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] a question, if he will permit it, by way of expla-

Mr. MANN. I want to ask the gentleman, or the gentleman from Tennessee, a question, simply as to whether this bill makes any new offices

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. None.

Mr. KEIFER. Does it not create new clerks and assistants? Mr. HULL of Tennessee. No, sir, I would say to the gentle-

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to ask how many counties are included?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Twelve counties.

Mr. KEIFER. What particular things connected with those twelve counties make it necessary for a new judicial district?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Well, there is quite a variety of litigation, violations of the United States internal-revenue laws in one section of this territory to a considerable extent, and a considerable amount of land litigation between nonresident citizens and citizens of the State.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so for the purpose of making a statement somewhat in ando so for the purpose of making a statement somewhat in answer to my friend from New York [Mr. Payne]. I want to say to the House that the Judiciary Committee in its wisdom did report the bill unanimously, as they have many other bills. I would rather infer from my friend from New York that he is casting some reflection upon that committee.

Mr. PAYNE. Not at all. I hope the gentleman will not so understand it. I disagree with the gentleman's committee, but that does not cast any reflections. I may be wrong and the committee right.

Mr. JENKINS. I want to say to my friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] that there is going to be a large opening in that committee next session, and I trust that he will be placed there in order to do justice on these several matters.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I trust not.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, this bill has the approval of the judge who is interested and the United States attorney. It has been considered by the Department of Justice, and with so many demands upon it the committee did not feel like refusing their request, and in the judgment of that committee this bill should pass. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Hull] to what is evidently a typographical error in line 17, page 2, before the word "Cookeville."

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the necessary correction may be made, by striking out the word "as," before the word "Cookeville," in line 17, page 2, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "at."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Hull of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN THE NAVY.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, I move to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the blil H. R. 6252, and ask that the same be considered in the House at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6252) to promote the administration of justice in the navv.

Be it enacted, etc., That courts for the trial of enlisted men in the Navy and Marine Corps for minor offenses may be ordered by the commanding officer of a naval vessel, by the commandant of a navy-yard or station, by a commanding officer of marines, or by higher naval authorite.

Bet the enacted, etc., That courts for the trial of enlisted men in the Navy and Marine Corps for minor offeness may be ordered by the commanding officer of a naval vessel, by the commandant of a navy-yard or station, by a commanding officer of marines, or by higher naval authority.

That such courts shall be known as "deck courts," and shall consist of one commissioned officer only, who, while serving in such capacity shall have power to administer oaths, to hear and determine cases, and to impose, in whole or in part, the punishments prescribed by article 30 of the Articles for the Government of the Navy: Provided, That in no case shall such courts adjudge discharge from the service or adjudge confinement or forfeiture of pay for a longer period than thirty days.

SEC. 3. That any person in the navy under command of the officer period than thirty days.

SEC. 4. That the officer within whose command a deck court is sitting shall have full power as reviewing authority to remit or mitigate, but not to commute, any sentence imposed by such court; but no sentence of a deck court shall be carried into effect until it shall have been so approved or mitigated.

SEC. 5. That the courts hereby authorized shall be governed in all details of their constitution, powers, and procedure, except as herein provided the courts hereby authorized shall contain such matters only as are necessary to enable the reviewing authorities to act intelligently thereon. Such records, after action thereon by the convening authority, shall be forwarded directly to, and shall be filled in, the office of the Judge-Advocate-General of the Navy, where they shall be reviewed, and, when necessary, submitted to the Secretary of the Navy for his action.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Reserving the right to object, it was impossible for me to hear the reading of the bill, and I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts wherein it changes the present law in regard to courts-martial in the navy?

Mr. ROBERTS. Under the present law, in order to try a man in the navy for a petty offense, there must be a summary court, which requires the presence of four commissioned officers. This bill provides what is known as a "deck court," to be held by one commissioned officer, which is exactly on all fours with the so-called "garrison court" of the army that has been in operation some ten years. The navy is short now in the matter of commissioned officers, and it seriously interferes with the routine and discipline of ships to take four commissioned officers from their regular duties to sit on these little petty cases that are now under the jurisdiction of summary courts.

Mr. MACON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. ROBERTS. One moment. I want to make another statement. The bill provides for the holding of courts in territory outside of the United States by a single officer, thereby doing away with the keeping men in prison for months awaiting trial for petty offenses. One instance I may cite, of two men who deserted from a ship in Guam. Shortly after the ship sailed the deserters were apprehended and put in prison. recommendation for a court-martial was made by the officer in It had to be sent to Washington. The department approved the court-martial; the papers were sent back; the men were tried; then the findings of the court had to be transmitted to Washington for approval and return.

Now, the sentence of the court was four months' imprisonment; but before the papers got to Washington for final approval the men had been in confinement six months. As in all cases of that sort, the department remitted the four months' imprisonment and ordered the rest of the sentence carried out.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. How does his bill remedy that particular evil that occurred in that case?

Mr. ROBERTS. It allows the commanding officer of the station to constitute a deck court.

Mr. MACON. Now, a deck court, from the provisions of the bill, I take it, is a kind of "unanimous-consent" court, that everybody had to consent to it.

Mr. ROBERTS. I will state for the benefit of the gentleman that every man liable to a deck court, under the provisions of this bill, has the right to object to it and to insist upon trial by a summary court or by general court-martial. All rights are fully guarded in that respect.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. ROBERTS. I shall be very glad to yield.
Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. In discussing the trial of offenses out of the United States by this one officer, the gentleman confined it to offenses committed not in the United States. For instance, under the bill a member of the navy might commit an offense just as the ship was going away, and might be tried in a foreign country. Now, ought not your bill to confine the trial of offenses in other places than the United States to offenses committed while the person is outside the United States? In other words, your bill does not confine the trial of offenses in foreign countries by this officer to offenses committed while the ship is away from the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON. I make the point of order that the House is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken, and the House will be in order.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I did not notice that the bill, as read at the Clerk's desk, contained any limitation as to the power of this one-man court to try for offenses committed solely while the offender was in a foreign country. It might be construed, very properly, to give the right to try also in a foreign country, and to try for an offense committed while the offender was in the United States; but I apprehend that is not the purpose of the bill.

Mr. ROBERTS. Why, Mr. Speaker, it may not always be possible to try a man immediately after he commits the offense and try him on the spot where the offense was committed-

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I understand that.

Mr. ROBERTS. In naval practice-

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. But suppose it is not possible. The man is on board ship and carried to a foreign country and tried under the provisions of your bill. How are you going to obtain the witnesses if the ship has left the country?

Mr. ROBERTS. That, Mr. Speaker, is one of the difficulties that is inherent in all trials of criminal or semicriminal cases. You must always be able to produce the witnesses to convict the man of the offense of which he is charged.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. And he might be able to produce witnesses that would not allow conviction. We ought not to make a law to convict people, but to give them a trial and an opportunity to show that they are not guilty.

Mr. ROBERTS. I understand, but there are cases that come up where you are not able to get your witnesses to determine the question of guilt or innocence, and it is conceivable that such cases might happen as the gentleman from Georgia cites; but on the average, in the long run, the administration of justice in the navy would be much better served by adopting the provisions of this bill, with perhaps an occasional case, such as the gentleman refers to, escaping just punishment.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. They have occurred within my knowledge not occasionally, but frequently.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. ROBERTS. Yes. Mr. KEIFER. I think objection had better be made. would not object to considering this bill section by section; but it is too important to pass in this way, by unanimous consent.

Mr. ROBERTS. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes; I object.

CALENDAR TRANSFERS OF BILLS.

The SPEAKER announced the transfer from the House Calendar to the Union Calendar, in accordance with the rules of the House, of the bill (H. R. 15463) providing for changing the title of warrant machinist, United States Navy, to machinist, for the promotion of machinists after six years from date of warrant, according to law governing the promotion of other warrant officers, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER also announced the transfer from the Union

Calendar to the House Calendar, under the rules of the House, of the bill (H. R. 26984) extending the time for the construction by James A. Moore or his assigns of a canal along the government right of way connecting the waters of Puget Sound with Lake Washington.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 26915) making appropriations for the support of the army for

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that the next legislative day after the completion of the army appropriation bill be substituted in lieu of to-day for the consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar in order under the rule.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it the intention of the chairman to give up claims day to-day?

Mr. BARTLETT. This is war-claims day.
Mr. MORSE. It is his intention to give up war claims to-day? The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not the power to give it up or to refuse to give it up.

Mr. HASKINS. I do not care to stand in the way of appropriation bills. I want those hurried over to the other end I following telegram, and ask that it be read.

of the Capitol as rapidly as possible, but I want the next legislative day after the conclusion of the army bill for the consideration of bills in order under the rule to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that in this, as in all other cases, the business of the House is subject to the vote of a majority. If the House votes down the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the army appropriation bill, which is in order, then, of course, automatically, this being private bill day, it would be in order to consider private bills.

The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HASKINS] asks unanimous consent that the next legislative day after the completion of the army bill be considered as Friday, for the consideration of business in order to-day. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Morse], as well as other Members, to the fact that a single objection would prevent that request being granted, and then the House could determine the question between the army bill and private bills to-day.

Mr. MORSE. Then I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HASKINS. Now, I move that the next legislative

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I raise the point of order that there is one privileged motion already pending.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the gen-tleman to the fact that the motion to consider the army bill has precedence under the rules of the House. The gentleman can arrive at what he desires if a majority of the House see proper to vote down the motion. If the House does that, then, without a motion, under the rule, the business in order on Friday would come up automatically.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Haskins] is trying to substitute another day for this one.

The SPEAKER. He asks unanimous consent, and to that unanimous consent the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Morse]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I thought he was objecting to what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] was trying to do. I was trying to help them all out.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The motion of Mr. Hull of Iowa was agreed to. Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the army appropriation bill (H. R. 26915), with

Mr. Perkins in the chair.
Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Illinois on yesterday for information, I desire to submit to the House the reply from the Paymaster-General, and I ask that the Clerk may read it, that it may go into the RECORD. The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE PAYMASTER-GENERAL,

To the Chairman Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives.

House of Representatives.

Sir: In response to your telephone message of this date, I have the honor to submit to you a statement regarding the increase in the item. "Pay of enlisted men." Of course you will understand that these figures represent only the proposed appropriation, $1,550,000, and not the number of men estimated for, viz, $16,748,010. Neither are the enlisted men of the staff departments, the Hospital Corps, the Porto Rico regiment, nor the Philippine Scouts Included.

For your information, I might add that the enlisted strength at the present time, inclusive of all the above-named forces, is about $2,000 men, while the authorized strength at the present time is $5,961.

Respectfully,

C. H. WHIPPLE, Paymaster-General, U. S. Army.

Statement regarding increase in appropriation "Pay of enlisted men."

The proposed appropriation represents the new rate of pay for 65,410 enlisted men_____

The appropriation for the present fiscal year represents the old rate of pay for 54,128 enlisted men.
65,410 less 54,128 equals 11,282 enlisted men, which, if appropriated for at the old rate of pay, would amount to Difference between old and new rate of pay, as established by the act of May 11, 1908, for 65,410 men.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] if he will not use some of his time.

Mr. HAY. I will yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

The Clerk read as follows:

[Cable message.]

HABANA, January 27, 1909.

Congressman RAINEY, House of Representatives, Washington:

assume you have been misled into uttering the sheer and absolute I assume you have been misled into uttering the sheer and absolute falsehoods concerning me you are reported to have spoken yesterday. I have never had any business association of any kind or description, past, present, or prospective, with William Nelson Cromwell, nor any interest of any kind or with anybody, past, present, or prospective, on the Isthmus of Panama, and I confidently rely upon your loyalty to the truth to retract what you said about me in the same high place where you made yourself responsible for those misstatements.

CHARLES P. TAFT.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I have not the slightest desire to controvert in any way the statement of Mr. Charles P. Taft, which has just been read. On the contrary, I congratulate him upon his absolute and complete repudiation of William Nelson Cromwell and his methods. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It, however, does not become necessary for me to retract anything I said in my speech. I do not desire, at the present time, to add anything to what I said, nor to change it in any way. In order that what I said about Mr. Charles P. Taft may appear here in the Congressional Record, in connection with his telegram, I desire now to read from my speech of January 26, and I read now, from the first column on page 1470 of the Congres-SIONAL RECORD for this session, the following:

On Sunday night, the 27th day of December, Obaldia called to his palace certain members of the General Assembly, and they then and at that time demanded of him to know who the men were back of John Ehrman, representing that John Ehrman had no particular financial standing; and at that time they were told that the men who were back of this infamous, outrageous scheme were William Nelson Cromwell, Roger L. Farnham, his confidential clerk, W. S. Harvey, and Charles P. Taft.

The country will be glad to know that Mr. Taft's name is being used there without his consent. I desire to say, in this connection, that Mr. Taft could render a great service, and his denial will be of greater value, if he should without delay address a telegram to the general assembly of Panama denying his connection with the scheme I have described, and repudiating Mr. Cromwell on the Isthmus of Panama with as much enthusiasm as he has in his telegram to me repudiated all connection with that gentleman. [Applause.]

I think I might also with propriety suggest that the President-elect could, at the present time, render no greater service to his country than he can render by withdrawing his frequent public indorsements of William Nelson Cromwell. At the present time Mr. Cromwell and Mr. Farnham are proceeding under certificates of good character given them in the past by the President-elect. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The next President of the United States could render no greater service to his country in Panama matters than he could render by, immediately after his term of office commences, re-moving both Cromwell and Farnham from their present official positions and from the positions of trust and confidence they now apparently hold with reference to him, and I sincerely hope that his repudiation of Mr. Cromwell will be as enthusiastic and as complete as the repudiation contained in the telegram of Charles P. Taft, which has just been read. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In order that some other gentlemen who think they have denied something I said in my speech may attain the same prominence in connection with this matter, I send to the Clerk's desk to be read an extract from the New York Times of the date of yesterday.

The Clerk read as follows:

SAYS PANAMA DEAL WAS NOT CROMWELL'S--RANDOLPH G. WARD DECLARES RAILWAY PROPOSITION DENOUNCED BY RAINEY WAS ALTOGETHER HIS—WILL AID PANAMA, HE SAYS—W. S. HARVEY HAS NO INTEREST IN PANAMA RAILWAY BUILDING OR LAND GRANTS, SAYS SECRETARY.

In regard to the remarks made in the House of Representatives on Tuesday by Henry T. Rainey, of Illinois, in which William Nelson Cromwell, Charles P. Taft, and others were accused of complicity in a scheme involving the grant of 1,000.000 acres of land by the Government of the Republic of Panama to float a railroad less than 200 miles long, the following letter has been received by the New York Times from Randolph G. Ward:

To the Editor of the New York Times:

To the Editor of the New York Times:

In the press dispatches from Washington published in all the leading New York papers of this date Representative Rainey, of Illinois, is quoted as having charged that Mr. William Nelson Cromwell and other well-known gentlemen are in some way or other responsible for what he terms the "most infamous railroad proposition ever submitted to any government."

As I am the individual who alone, and unassociated with any other person or persons, submitted to the Government of the Republic of Panama the railroad proposition thus characterized, but which, I am confident, will stand the test of competent and conscientious criticism. I take this opportunity of exonerating Mr. Cromwell and each and all of the other gentlemen named from any connection whatever with such proposition, and I unhesitatingly assume the entire responsibility for having submitted it, and challenge Representative Rainey to submit a fairer proposition or one better calculated to promote the welfare of the people of the Republic of Panama.

In the years which have gone by the people on the Isthmus have depended almost wholly for support upon the business developed by the traffic in transit from ocean to ocean. In the future, when, owing to the completion of the canal, this source of livelihood will be cut off in part, if not entirely, they must depend upon the development of their own territory and the advantages of their commercial location. The building of railroads and the development of the port of Panama contemplated in the proposition submitted by me will do more than anything I know of to give employment to and provide support for the people of the Republic of Panama, and to prevent the "bread line" of idleness and want pictured by Representative RAINEY.

RANDOLPH G. WARD.

NEW YORK, January 27, 1909.

New York, January 27, 1909.

J. F. Scott, secretary to William S. Harvey, made public yesterday a statement in which it was denied that Mr. Harvey was in any way interested in land grants in the Republic of Panama.

"Mr. Harvey," says the statement, "is away on a business trip, and probably will not return until February 4.

"Respecting the statements made by Mr. Rainey in his speech yesterday, as published, in relation to contracts in Panama, I will state that the Congressman is very much in error. Mr. Harvey is in no way connected with or interested in any contract or proposal for railroad building or land grants in the Republic of Panama nor with any parties who may be. Nor is he associated, directly or indirectly, in the remotest manner with William Nelson Cromwell or Charles P. Taft in any enterprise of any sort in Panama or elsewhere.

"Some time ago Mr. Harvey and certain friends engaged in the lumber business in this country made a proposal to the Panama Government to buy certain standing timber on a part of the wild lands in Panama. This proposal was not approved by the national assembly, and, I believe, the matter was dropped. With this proposal neither Mr. Cromwell nor Mr. Taft had the slightest connection, and I doubt if either gentleman ever heard of the proposal until they read of it in the newspapers."

Mr. Cromwell himself continues to refuse to renly to Mr. Rainey. He newspapers."

Mr. Cromwell himself continues to refuse to reply to Mr. RAINEY. He sent out a statement to all reporters who called yesterday, which was, briefly, as follows: "I have nothing to say at present about the matter."

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not have the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with Mr. Randolph G. Ward. In addition to his other characteristics, whatever they are, he is evidently a humorist. The immunity bath he attempts to give Mr. Cromwell, coming from him, will not do that gentleman any good. If Mr. Ward had challenged me to suggest a more outrageous proposal than he has suggested, I would have been absolutely unable to accept his challenge. It is impossible to suggest a railroad plan that would not be fairer than his, and he surely is laboring under the impression that I have not succeeded in getting a copy of it. I have, and I have printed it in the Congressional Record of this session, at page 1476, and it speaks there for itself.

The trouble with these gentlemen is they take particular pains to deny things I did not say. I expressly stated in my speech that I did not know who was back of Randolph G. Ward. On account of the fact that these two projects—the timber scheme and the railroad scheme-were proceeding with such absolute harmony, on account of the fact that neither of them impinged upon the other, I thought the same persons might be behind both of them. This scheme of Ward's is outrageous enough in its character to be fathered by William Nelson Cromwell, and is entirely worthy of that gentleman. The Ward project takes everything on one side of the Republic of Panama, and the timber proposal takes everything on the other, and they do not impinge anywhere, either of them, upon the plans of the other. Now, with reference to W. S. Harvey, I did not say he had anything to do with the proposed railroad contract. His secretary gives out the statement, probably with his consent, that at one time he was interested in a timber contract which was refused by President Amador, and I made that statement in my speech. President Amador did refuse to sign it; but President Obaldia, after his election was brought about, signed it, and he and his administration are pushing it at the present time. I have inserted in the Congressional Record at page 1475 a letter from Señor Ramon M. Valdes, a member of the cabinet of Obaldia in the Republic of Panama—a public letter printed in the Spanish edition of the Diario, a newspaper published in Panama. I had it translated by a competent person and have inserted it here in the Record. In that letter this member of Obaldia's cabinet states that he is writing the letter and making it public on behalf of the President of Panama. The letter contains the following statement, referring to the present pending timber contracts:

Those interested in this business of the purchase of timber are Messrs. W. S. Harvey, Alfred E. Drake, and Jonas E. Whitley, of the United States.

[Applause.]

I present that as a complete denial to anything Mr. Harvey, through his secretary, has said in this connection.

Mr. Chairman, when any of these gentlemen care to deny any of the facts I have stated in my speech, I want to serve notice on them now that I am ready with the proof. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I have here a clipping from the New York Herald of the day following the delivery of my speech in the House, and as that great paper has not yet been charged with libeling the Government, what it says may still be of value.

With much enterprise, after the delivery of my speech the New York Herald obtained from its correspondent on the Isthmus of Panama the following statement with reference to some of the things to which I called attention. I offer it as a complete answer to the statement that these timber contracts are dead and are no longer being discussed on the Isthmus of Panama. As a matter of fact, they are very much alive; and the President and his Cabinet are pressing them, and meetings are being held in the public parks protesting against them. I now send to the Clerk's desk this clipping from the New York Herald of January 27, 1909, and ask that it be read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

[New York Herald, January 27, 1909.]

PANAMA EXCITED AT TIMBER PROJECT—PRESIDENT OBALDIA TRYING TO FORCE "CROMWELL GRANT" THROUGH AN UNWILLING CONGRESS.

(Special Correspondence of the Herald.)

PANAMA, January 27, 1909.

Panama is in a ferment of excitement on account of the project of the present administration to make what is termed "a gift" of the entire Caribbean coast of the Republic to an American syndicate. President Obaldia has sent two special appeals to the Chamber of Deputies urging the ratification of the timber concession, and the result has been the stormlest sessions held by the legislative body since it came into existence.

istence.

One of the members of the cabinet was grossly insulted by a deputy because he appeared for the President, and in the debates there have been open allegations of dishonesty. There is a grave question now whether the concession will be ratified. It is the pet measure of President Obaldia, and the opposition to it is supposed to indicate that he has lost ground in the Chamber, as some of those who are bitterest in their denunciation have hitherto been on his side in politics.

The concession has been designated on the Chamber floor as the "Cromwell grant," and an effort has been made to create the impression that William Nelson Cromwell will be the chief beneficiary if the bill should pass.

FEELING RUNNING HIGH.

The speeches in the Chamber have roused intense feeling throughout the Isthmus. The syndicate seeks a timber concession on all the land on the Caribbean side from low water to the divide, or top of the watershed, from Costa Rica to Colombia; in other words, about two-thirds of the Republic. It is alleged by the deputies that the Republic could obtain millions of dollars in cash for this land by dividing it into large sections and offering them to the highest bidders. The prospective value is terrific, as practically all the land is suitable for fruit growing, and the owners could start new growths as soon as they had cleared away the existing ones.

One point accentuated in the Chamber is that the agitation for the fortification of the canal is increasing in the United States, and that all Mr. Cromwell's friends apparently indorse the plan. It is assumed that the United States may seek to obtain the Chiriqui lagoon, which has been mentioned by Capt. A. T. Mahan as one of the strategic naval bases of the Caribbean. The concession includes the lagoon, and the American Government might find itself called upon to pay a fancy price for a fraction of what Panama has given away.

price for a fraction of what Panama has given away.

TOOK OBALDIA'S SIDE.

Several peculiar features of the transaction have been discussed in the debates. During the presidency of Doctor Amador application was originally made for the concession. President Amador, after consulting his personal attorney, Doctor Valdez, declined to grant it.

Mr. Cromwell admitted in an interview published by the New York Herald that he had suddealy taken sides with Señor Obaldia before the last presidential election. Obaldia triumphed and Doctor Valdez is now in his cabinet and at the head of the department of justice. There have been many comments upon Doctor Valdez's change of front, as he is actually a strong advocate of the bill. As the official legal adviser of the Government his position has changed radically from that he held as the unofficial counsel for the former President.

Speakers have sarcastically inquired why the Government does not find another set of Americans and grant them the Pacific slope of the Republic, so as to complete the transaction at the same time, and have each company administer affairs on its own side under Mr. Cromwell's guidance.

During the reading of the above the time of Mr. RAINEY expired and he was granted five minutes more by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time, if I have any left. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], in charge of the bill, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Lovering]

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Chairman, after what the gentleman has said with regard to the Panama contracts, I desire to be heard for a moment with respect to one of the gentlemen named in his address. I can not tell where the gentleman obtained all the sensational facts with which he has regaled this House, but I have this to say in behalf of Mr. William Nelson Cromwell. I asked Mr. Cromwell what were his relations to these Panama contracts and received the following answer:

49 AND 51 WALL STREET, New York, January 28, 1909.

Hon. WM. C. Lovering,

Washington, D. C.

MY Dear Mr. Lovering: Although the affairs of the Panama Government are not properly a subject of consideration by the American Congress, I wish to waive all technicality and say at once that I never have had, and have not now, any interest of any kind, direct or indirect, present or prospective, in any concession, contract, proposition, or other business affair in any part of the Republic of Panama, save only a small stock interest in the local electric light company of Panama City, which I joined some years ago at the request of Panama citizens to encourage a local industry, the conditions of which investment were fully stated by me before the so-called "Morgan inquiry."

Thanking you in advance for any courtesy you may be able to extend, I am,

Very truly, yours,

WM. Nelson Cromwell.

WM. NELSON CROMWELL.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that all this talk here in the House is of little avail. If I understand correctly, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Rainey] did early in this session offer man from lilinois [Mr. KAINEY] did early in this session oner a resolution of inquiry to investigate the transfer of the Panama Canal to the United States Government. Such an investigation would include this whole business. I am heartily with him, and I believe that every gentleman he has named in connection with this is with him. We hope that the investigation will take place immediately, and not a man will shrink from it, as I understand. It would seem as though the gentleman had hear filled an with a lot of material that comes from a wellbeen filled up with a lot of material that comes from a wellknown source, much of which has already been exploited here.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?
Mr. LOVERING. I have but a moment.
Mr. RAINEY. I ask the gentleman to explain further and say what the source is to which he refers.

Mr. LOVERING. I will say the New York World. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say—
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the floor. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. LOVERING. I yielded and answered the gentleman's question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield again? Mr. LOVERING. Yes.

Mr. RAINEY. I want to say that never-Mr. LOVERING. Is this a question?

Mr. RAINEY. No.
Mr. LOVERING. I yield only for a question.
Mr. RAINEY. Then, I shall ask the gentleman from Virginia to yield me two minutes after the gentleman from Massachusetts is through.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Chairman, I have nothing more to say, except that I hope the gentleman will push his resolution, and I will help him in every way possible. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey.
Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, I yield fifty-five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will permit me to yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was in error and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Virginia on this side.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say in the most emphatic manner I never have received from the New York World or from any person connected with that great newspaper or from any other newspaper in all the world the slightest assistance in the investigations I have made, and they have furnished me with none of these documents I put in the RECORD; nor have they furnished me with the slightest information that enabled me to obtain any one of them. Whatever evidence the New York World may have they have not revealed to me in any particular, and I can not make this denial too strong. I have consulted the New York World in no possible way and have received not the slightest assistance from them. [Ap-I desire also to say that I have extended to the repplause.] I desire also to say that I have extended to the representatives of that paper no courtesies that I have not extended to all the other gentlemen of the press. I might also say that I have conducted my investigations at my own expense and have received no financial assistance from any source and expect to receive none. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire to occupy some time now or does he yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. HAY. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I now yield fifty-five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Jenkins].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for fifty-five minutes.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I propose this morning to discuss a very important question, and in presenting my individual views to this House I purpose to say that I am doing it in the discharge of what I conceive to be an important duty. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on the Judiciary, and at times this House, has been charged with failure to pass certain what have been called "important" measures, and the control of the Library in what is not the control of the c one that I have in mind is one of considerable importance to many; and as I have read different newspaper statements in regard to the same and as I have heard individuals expressing themselves, I have made up my mind that as a general proposition the most important question has never been considered by those who have been talking so readily and so hurriedly in regard to it. Mr. Chairman, the only thing that has prompted me with reference to the matter I propose to discuss has been an important constitutional question.

If there had been no constitutional question involved, I think the House might possibly, as far as my vote is concerned, have been permitted to pass upon it; but I have felt, in my position, that I owed a certain duty to the House and to the country, and I have not been favorable to reporting certain measures because of the very grave importance of the constitutional questions involved. I do not want it understood, as far as I am concerned, that there has been any desire upon the part of myself or the committee on which I have so long served to smother or prevent consideration of these important questions; but, as I have said, I felt that the questions were not only constitutional, but of very great importance to this country, and it evidences how little the average man of this country knows with reference to those great questions. In discussing it, I simply propose to present to the general public the bills themselves and the nature of the bills and the important questions lying within them. want the people of this country to judge for themselves, and at least give the Committee on the Judiciary of this Congress credit for being at least honest with reference to these great matters. I know a great many of our friends say, as they pass along, that it is useless to inject a constitutional question. But a few days ago I sat and listened to a gentleman, who has obtained fame in the Supreme Court of the United States, discussing one of those questions, and he made this remark. He said:

I am absolutely sick and tired of hearing about a constitutional question. They have forgotten that the American people are in power in this country and that it is a question for the American people, and not for any individual, not for any committee or any Congress of the United States, to say what is constitutional or not. I say—

Said he, speaking for himself and, I trust, himself onlythat the American people are greater than the Constitution of the United States.

I could not possibly agree with that gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I have been brought up to believe, and my education in this House has been such, that the Constitution of the United States is the highest law in this country, a supreme law that ought to control each and every gentleman when he comes to act with reference to the Federal Government and with reference to the States. I have no sympathy with any attack in favor of the States as against the Federal Government, and I am bitterly and unalterably opposed to any attempt on the part of the Federal Government to interfere with the rights of the States.

But as this question comes to us to-day we are confronted with grave constitutional questions. The labor interests of this country, that are very dear to us all, come here and say, "We have certain propositions which we have prepared, which we submit for the consideration of the Congress of the United States, and we insist upon having those views written into the statute books of this country." As a Member of this House, I have felt like giving consideration to the very deep and important constitutional questions involved, and I have no interest in this question beyond the great constitutional question involved. I want the people of this country who are interested in the perpetuity of American institutions to know what questions have been presented to the Committee on the Judiciary. I want them to know that every gentleman upon that committee has carefully, conscientiously, and earnestly considered each and every one of these propositions for himself. I am not at liberty to reflect the views of any gentleman upon that committee. I speak for myself only. I want to leave behind me the reasons that have actuated my vote and my actions with reference to these very important questions.

Mr. Chairman, I am one of those in this country that believe that these great and important questions have long since been neglected by the American people. Since the civil war we have heard nothing with reference to these important matters. I do not want it understood that by reason of the settlement of the vexed questions involved in that war we no longer have a dual system of government, that we no longer have a federal government, and no longer have a government of the States. can not perpetuate this country except we preserve the rights and powers of the Federal Government and the rights and powers of the States, and when we depart from these constitutional lines anarchy will result.

We have had these great and momentous questions pressed upon us. I have earnestly and seriously considered them, and I speak for myself only. I do not want it understood for a moment that I reflect the views of a single gentleman upon the floor of this House. I have earnestly considered every bill brought into the House affecting this great question. I have brought here every single bill that involves the great questions between labor and the capital of this country, and I desire, Mr. Chairman, in the brief time allotted to me to rapidly present my views upon this important question.

The bills are as follows:

[H. R. 69, 60th Cong., 1st sess.]

A bill in relation to restraining orders and injunctions.

Be it enacted, etc., That no writ of injunction or temporary restraining order shall be granted in any case without reasonable previous notice to the adverse party, or his attorney, of the time and place of moving for the same: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be held to authorize the issuance of any injunction or restraining order not now authorized by law.

[H. R. 94, 60th Cong., 1st sess.]

A bill to regulate the issuance of restraining orders and injunctions and procedure thereon and to limit the meaning of "conspiracy" in certain cases.

and procedure thereon and to limit the meaning of "conspiracy" in certain cases.

Be it enacted, etc., That no restraining order or injunction shall be granted by any court of the United States, or a judge or the judges thereof, in any case between an employer and an employee, or between employers and employees, or between employers and employees, or between employers and employees, or between persons seeking employment as laborers, or between persons seeking employment as laborers, or involving or growing out of a dispute concerning terms of conditions of employment, unless necessary to prevent irreparable injury to property or to a property right of the party making the application, for which injury there is no adequate remedy at law, and such property or property right must be particularly described in the application, which must be in writing and sworn to by the applicant or by his, her, or its agent or attorney. And for the purpose of this act no right to continue the relation of employer and employee or to assume or create such relation with any particular person or persons, or at all, or to carry on business of any particular kind. or at any particular place, or at all, shall be construed, held, considered, or treated as property or as constituting a property right. SEC. 2. That in cases arising in the courts of the United States or coming before said courts, or before any judge or the judges thereof, no agreement between two or more persons concerning the terms or conditions of employment of labor, or the assumption or creation or termination of any relation between employer and employee, or concerning any act or thing to be done or not to be done with reference to or involving or growing out of a labor dispute, shall constitute a conspiracy or other criminal offense or be punished or prosecuted as such unless the act or thing agreed to be done or not to be done would be unlawful if done by a single individual, nor shall the entering into or the carrying out of any such agreement be restrained or enjoin tempts of court, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc. That no agreement, combination, or contract by or between two or more persons to do or procure to be done, or not to do or procure not to be done, any act in contemplation or furtherance of any labor dispute between employers and employees in the District of Columbia or in any Territory of the United States, or between employers and employees who may be engaged in trade or commerce between the several States, or between any Territory and another, or between any Territory or Territories and any State or States or the District of Columbia, or with foreign nations, or between the District of Columbia and any State or States or foreign nations, shall be deemed criminal, nor shall those engaged therein be indictable or otherwise punishable for the crime of conspiracy, if such act committed by one person would not be actionable, nor shall such agreement, combination, or contract be considered as in restraint of trade or commerce. Nothing in this section shall exempt from punishment, otherwise than as herein excepted, any persons guilty of conspiracy for which punishment is now provided by any act of Congress, ment, otherwise than as herein excepted, any persons guilty of conspiracy for which punishment is now provided by any act of Congress, but such act of Congress shall, as to the agreements, combinations, and contracts hereinbefore referred to, be construed as if this section were therein contained.

Sec. 2. That no restraining order or injunction shall be granted by any court created by Congress, or any judge or judges of such court, restraining or enjoining any person or persons from entering into or carrying out any agreement, combination, or contract referred to in section 1 of this act.

Sec. 3. That no restraining order or injunction shall be granted by any court created by Congress, or any judge or judges of such court, in any case without reasonable previous notice to the adverse party, or his attorney, of the time and place of moving for the same.

Sec. 4. That contempts of court are divided into two classes, direct and indirect, and shall be proceeded against only as hereinafter prescribed. That contempts committed during the sitting of the court or of a judge at chambers, in its or his presence, or so near thereto as to obstruct the administration of justice, are direct contempts. All others are indirect contempts. That a direct contempt may be punished summarily, without written accusation against the person arraigned, but if the court shall adjudge him guilty thereof a judgment shall be entered of record in which shall be specified the conduct constituting such contempt, with a statement of whatever defense or extenuation the accused offered thereto and the sentence of the court thereon. That upon the return of an officer on process or an affidavit, duly filed, showing any person guilty of indirect contempt, a writ of attachment or other lawful process may issue and such person be arrested and brought before the court; and thereupon a written accusation setting forth succinctly and clearly the facts alleged to constitute such contempt shall be filed and the accused required to answer the same, by an order which shall fix the time therefor, and also the time and place for hearing the mater; and the court may, on proper showing, extend the time so as to give the accused a reasonable opportunity to purge himself of such contempt. But pending the trial, and until the final trial and termination of the case, the accused shall be admitted to bail in such sum as the court may direct. After the answer of the accused, or if he refuse or fail to answer, the court may proceed at the time so fixed to hear and determine such accusation upon such testimony as shall be produced. If the accused answer, the trial shall proceed upon testimony produced with the witnesses against him; but such trial shall be by the court, or upon application of the accused a trial by jury shall be had as in any criminal case. If the accused a trial by jury shall be had as in any criminal case. If the accused be found guilty judgment shall be entered accordingly, prescribing the punishment. That the testimony taken on the trial of any accusation of direct contempt may be preserved by bill of exceptions, and any judgment of conviction therefor may be reviewed upon direct appeal to or by writ of error from the Supreme Court, and affirmed, reversed, or modified as justice may require. Upon allowance of an appeal or writ of error execution of the judgment shall be stayed upon the giving of such bond as may be required by the court or a judge

[H. R. 19745 (in part), 60th Cong., 1st sess.]

A bill to regulate commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, and to amend the act approved July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies."

Nothing in said act approved July 2, 1890, or in this act, is intended, or shall any provision thereof hereinafter be enforced, so as to interfere with or to restrict any right of employees to strike for any cause or to combine or to contract with each other or with employers for the purpose, of peaceably obtaining from employers satisfactory terms for their labor or satisfactory conditions of employers for any cause to discharge all or any of their employees or to combine or to contract with each other or with employees for the purpose of peaceably obtaining labor on satisfactory terms.

The only question is as to their constitutionality.

Those interested for and against the several bills have very ably presented their respective views upon the merits; and I very much regret that the important constitutional question that I believe disposes of all the bills alike has not been discussed. What is said with reference to the bills has no relation whatever to the District of Columbia or the Territories.

Congress is asked to surrender its protective power over trade and commerce, in order that crime if committed may go unpunished; to deprive the court of the power to protect the citizen in the enjoyment of life, liberty, and property; to declare that what is now a crime against persons and property shall not be criminal, in order to permit persons so disposed to interfere with the constitutional right of the citizen to enjoy life, liberty, and property; to declare that what has always been considered vested, valuable, personal, and property rights, guaranteed by the Constitution, shall not be entitled to protection; to deprive the citizen of the power to protect his property; to tear away the very substructure of government erected to protect the citizen in the enjoyment of life, liberty, and property. The bills present several important questions of constitutional law.

Is the judicial department of government coextensive in power with the legislative department of government?

Can Congress deprive the courts of judicial power, conferred by the Constitution?

Does Congress possess the power to prevent the judicial branch of government from administering the law of the States for the protection of personal rights and property rights between citizens of different States when not in conflict with the Constitu-tion or the laws of the United States?

Does Congress possess the power of preventing the citizen from enforcing in the courts of the United States personal and property rights derived from state laws not in conflict with the Constitution or laws of the United States, whether the case be commenced in the courts of the United States or commenced in the courts of the State, and removal into the courts of the United States?

Is not every citizen entitled to the full protection of the judicial power of the United States, both at law and in equity, in all cases not in conflict with the Constitution or laws of the United States, except as to rights conferred by a rule of law?

Does Congress possess power to deny to any citizen the full protection of the full judicial power of the United States for his life, liberty, property, and rights, and subject his life, liberty, property, and rights to the will of any person?

Does Congress possess the power to subject the life, liberty, property, and rights of any citizen to the will of any other person?

Does Congress possess the power to take from the citizen rights and remedies given by state law when not in conflict with the Constitution or laws of the United States?

Is it not both possible and probable that if a court is prevented from issuing an injunction it may place it beyond the power of a court to pronounce a judgment that can be made effective? Therefore, does it not follow that to refuse a party an injunction, it might amount to a denial of justice and deprivation of rights, rendering a judgment ineffectual?

Is not the granting of an injunction an exercise of judicial power vested in the courts and extended as provided in the Constitution?

Does Congress possess the power to prevent a citizen from obtaining from the courts, state or national, protection to life, liberty, or property according to the due course of law as administered in the courts of law and equity?

Does Congress possess the power to provide that any person or class of persons shall be denied the same protection of the laws which is enjoyed by other persons or other classes in the same place and in like circumstances?

Does Congress possess the power to discriminate to such an extent that the legislation would be a denial of the equal protection of the law? Can Congress deny one that is allowed another under like circumstances?

Does Congress possess the power to say that no contract en-tered into between different parties, no matter what it may provide for, shall be deemed to be criminal?

Does Congress possess power to legalize crime? Does Congress possess the power to surrender its protective power over trade and commerce? Does Congress possess the power to surrender its protective power over trade and commerce in order that personal and property rights may be destroyed and the citizen deprived of the power of protection to life, liberty, and property? Does Congress possess the power to regulate or in any manner interfere with contracts, unless the same in enforcement would regulate or operate as a restraint upon interstate Does Congress possess the power to deny to citizens of the United States equal protection of the law? Does Congress possess the power to deny to citizens any remedy in law or in equity for any injuries or wrongs which they may sustain to person or property?

A great many of the ablest students of history and constitutional law agree that "every government must, in its essence. be unsafe and unfit for a free people where a judicial department does not exist with powers coextensive with those of the legislative department."

Montesquieu said:

There is no liberty, if the judiciary power be not separated from the legislative and executive powers.

In every well-organized government, with reference to the security both of public rights and private rights, it is indispensable that there should be a judicial department to ascertain and decide rights, to punish crimes, to administer justice, and to protect the innocent from injury and usurpation.

As a general proposition, I apprehend it will be conceded that Congress can not change the law of any State, not intending to include a case of a State exercising a concurrent power in aid of commerce, when the subject of the power is local, but according to the rule given us by Hamilton-

This exclusive delegation, or rather this alienation of state sovereignty, would only exist in three cases; where the Constitution in express terms granted an exclusive authority to the Union; where it granted in one instance an authority to the Union and in another prohibited the States from exercising a like authority; and where it granted an authority to the Union to which a similar authority in the States, would be absolutely and totally contradictory and repugnant.

The bills seek to deprive citizens of the constitutional right to the enjoyment of life, liberty, and property and seek to pre-vent the courts from protecting the citizen in the enjoyment of life, liberty, and property.

It is a fundamental proposition of free government, an elementary principle of law older than our Government and older than any State in the Union, a constitutional right given to every citizen by his State, that he is entitled to a certain remedy in the law for all injuries or wrongs which he may receive to his person or his property, completely and without denial, promptly and without delay, conformable to the laws. And this valuable right is guaranteed and protected by the Constitution of the United States, and there is no power in Congress to prevent the exercise of the remedy or take it away or abridge it or deny him the equal protection of the law, and is not in conformity with the constitutional requirements of equality of all men before the law.

It will be important and valuable to learn how far Congress can go in depriving the courts of judicial power conferred by the Constitution.

To a proper understanding of this question it will be necessary to ascertain the extent of the power of the courts of the United States and the power of Congress over these courts. This will have to be learned from the Constitution. Believing as I do that Congress can not erect a court of equity and then deprive it of its judicial power, I shall at the outset invite attention to some cases requiring notice to be given on an application for an injunction.

The question first arose in the case of the State of New York v. State of Connecticut (4 Dallas, 1). The case was decided at the August term, 1799.

First Statutes at Large, chapter 22, page 333, approved March 2, 1793, section 5, provided that no writ of injunction shall be granted in any case without reasonable previous notice to the adverse party or his attorney of the time and place of moving for the same. And the court held an injunction will neither be granted by the court nor a single judge without reasonable notice to the adverse party or his attorney.

The same ruling was made in Mowrey v. Indianapolis and Chicago Railroad Company (4 Bliss., 78, 17 Federal Cases, No.

9891, p. 930), where the court said:

The injunction ordered on the 28th of May was decreed without much *nonsideration on my part. I followed a practice which has long prevailed in the courts of the State of Indiana. But, on further reflection, I think my order for a temporary injunction was premature. Equity would seem to demand that, in cases of emergency, where irreparable injury would follow unless an immediate injunction were ordered, the national courts should have power to grant temporary injunctions without notice of the application for them to the party enjoined. But the act of Congress of March 2, 1793, forbids that any writ of injunction shall "be granted in any case without reasonable previous notice to the adverse party, or his attorney, of the time and place of moving for the same." (1 Stat., 335.)

In view of this act, as well as of the fifty-fifth rule in equity of the Supreme Court, it should seem that no special injunction can be granted by this court but on due notice. And in the case of New York v. Connecticut (4 Dall.; 4 U. S., 1) the Supreme Court has decided that an injunction can neither be granted by the United States courts nor any judge thereof without due notice to the adverse party or his attorney. I therefore dissolve the injunction ordered on the 28th of May.

The same ruling was made by Mr. Justice Daniel, when holding court in the State of Arkansas in 1855, in the case of Wynn v. Wilson Hempst (698, 30 Federal Cases, No. 18116, p. 751).

The constitutional question now presented was not raised, therefore not considered in these cases.

The material provisions of the Constitution are as follows: All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives. (Art. I, sec. 1.) The Congress shall have power to constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court. (Art. I, sec. 8, subdivision 9.)

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. sec. 1.)

The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution, laws of the United States, and treaties made or which shall be made under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States, between a State and citizens of another State, between citizens of different States, between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States, and between a State or the citizens thereof and foreign States, citizens, or subjects.

In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls, and those in which a State shall be a party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all the other cases before mentioned the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make.

It will be important and necessary to understand what is meant by the words "judicial power." Much has been written in defining the meaning of the same. Many writers agree that it is authority to hear and determine rights between persons, and the State and persons.

Mr. Justice Miller, very carefully considering this subject in his valuable work on the Constitution, page 314, in part said:

It will not do to answer that it is the power exercised by the courts, because one of the very things to be determined is what power they may exercise. It is indeed very difficult to find any exact definition made to

But he comes to this conclusion:

It is the power of a court to decide and pronounce a judgment and arry it into effect between persons and parties who bring a case before It for decision.

The entire constitutional provision on this subject might just as well be considered together. Mr. Justice Story said:

That the enumerated power found in Article I, section 8, subdivision 9, is but a repetition of what is contained in Article III. The framers of the Constitution not only provided a judiciary, but declared that the national judiciary ought to possess powers coextensive with those of the legislative department. (Journal of Convention, 69, 98, 121, 137, 186, 188, 189, 212; Federalist, Nos. 77, 78; 2 Elliot's Debates, 380, 394, 404.)

This branch of the subject can be better understood by referring to the leading case of Martin v. Hunter (1 Wheat., 304), in an opinion rendered by Mr. Justice Story in 1816. After discussing the constitutional provisions herein cited, the learned jurist said:

Such is the language of the article creating and defining the judicial power of the United States. It is the voice of the whole American people solemnly declared in establishing one great department of that Government which was in many respects national and in all supreme. It is a part of the very same instrument which was to act not merely upon individuals, but upon States; and to deprive them altogether of the exercise of some powers of sovereignty and to restrain and regulate them in the exercise of others.

Let this article be carefully weighed and considered. language of the article throughout is manifestly designed to be mandatory upon the legislature. Its obligatory force is so imperative that Congress could not, without violation of its duty, have refused to carry it into operation. The judicial power of the United States shall be vested (not "may be vested") in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as Congress may, from time to time, ordain and establish. Could Congress have lawfully refused to create a Supreme Court or to vest in it the constitutional jurisdiction? "The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behavior, and shall at stated times receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office." Could Congress create or limit any other tenure of the judicial office? Could they refuse to pay, at stated times, the stipulated salary or diminish it during the continuance in office? But one answer can be given to these questions. It must be in the negative. The object of the Constitution was to establish three great departments of government—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial department. ments. The first was to pass laws, the second to approve and execute them, and the third to expound and enforce them. Without the latter it would be impossible to carry into effect some of the express provisions of the Constitution. How, otherwise, could crimes against the United States be tried and punisher. ished? How could causes between two States be heard and de-termined? The judicial power must therefore be vested in some court by Congress, and to suppose that it was not an obligation binding on them, but might, at their pleasure, be omitted or declined, is to suppose that under the sanction of the Constitution they might defeat the Constitution itself. A construction which would lead to such a result can not be sound.

The same expression "shall be vested" occurs in other parts of the Constitution, in defining the powers of the other coordinate branches of the Government. The first article declares that "all legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States." Will it be contended that the legislative power is not absolutely vested? That the words merely refer to some future act, and mean only that the legislative power may hereafter be vested? The second article de-clares that "the executive power shall be vested in a Presi-dent of the United States of America." Could Congress vest it in any other person, or is it to await their good pleasure, whether it is to vest at all? It is apparent that such a construction, in either case, would be utterly inadmissible. then, is it entitled to a better support in reference to the judicial department?

If, then, it is a duty of Congress to vest the judicial power of the United States, it is a duty to vest the whole judicial power. The language, if imperative as to one part, is imperative as to all. If it were otherwise, this anomaly would exist, that Congress might successively refuse to vest the jurisdiction in any one class of cases enumerated in the Constitution, and thereby defeat the jurisdiction as to all, for the Constitution has not singled out any class on which Congress are bound to act in preference to others.

The next consideration is as to the courts in which the judicial power shall be vested. It is manifest that a supreme court must be established; but whether it be equally obligatory to establish inferior courts is a question of some difficulty. If Congress may lawfully omit to establish inferior courts it might follow that in some of the enumerated cases the judicial power could nowhere exist. The Supreme Court can have original jurisdiction in two classes only, viz, in cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls, and in cases in which a State is a party. Congress can not vest any portion of the judicial power of the United States except in courts ordained and established by itself, and if in any of the cases enumerated in the Constitution the state courts did not then possess jurisdiction, the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court-admitting that it could act on state courts—could not reach those cases, and consequently the injunction of the Constitution that the judicial power "shall be vested" would be disobeyed. It would seem, therefore, to follow that Congress are bound to create some inferior courts in which to vest all that jurisdiction which, under the Constitution, is exclusively vested in the United States, and of which the Supreme Court can not take original cognizance. They might establish one or more inferior courts; they might parcel out the jurisdiction among such courts from time to time at their own pleasure, but the whole judicial power of the United States should be, at all times, vested, either in an original or appellate form, in some courts created under its authority.

This construction will be fortified by an attentive examination of the second section of the third article. The words are, "The judicial power shall extend," etc. Much minute and elaborate criticism has been employed upon these words. It has been argued that they are equivalent to the words "may extend," and that "extend" means to widen to new cases not before within the scope of the power. For the reasons which have been already stated, we are of opinion that the words are used in an imperative sense; they import an absolute grant of judicial power. They can not have a relative signification applicable to powers already granted, for the American people had not made any previous grant. The Constitution was for a new government, organized with new substantive powers, and not a mere supplementary charter to a government already existing. The confederation was a compact between States; and its structure and powers were wholly unlike those of the National Government. The Constitution was an act of the people of the United States to supersede the confederation, and not to be ingrafted on it, as a stock through which it was to receive life and nourishment.

If, indeed, the relative signification could be fixed upon the 'extend," it could not (as we shall hereafter see) subserve the purposes of the argument in support of which it has been adduced. This imperative sense of the words "shall extend" is strengthened by the context. It is declared that "in all cases affecting ambassadors, etc., the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction." Could Congress withhold original jurisdiction in these cases from the Supreme Court? The clause "In all the other cases before mentioned the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress The very exception here shows that the framers of the Constitution used the words in an imperative sense. What necessity could there exist for this exception if the preceding words were not used in that sense? Without such exception Congress would, by the preceding words, have possessed a complete power to regulate the appellate jurisdiction, if the language were only equivalent to the words "may have" ap-It is apparent, then, that the exception pellate jurisdiction. was intended as a limitation upon the preceding words to enable Congress to regulate and restrain the appellate power as the public interests might from time to time require.

Other clauses in the Constitution might be brought in aid of this construction, but a minute examination of them can not be necessary, and would occupy too much time. It will be found that whenever a particular object is to be effected the language of the Constitution is always imperative and can not be disregarded without violating the first principles of public duty. On the other hand, the legislative powers are given in language which implies discretion, as from the nature of legislative power such a discretion must ever be exercised.

It being, then, established that the language of this clause is imperative, the question is as to the cases to which it shall The answer is found in the Constitution itself. The judicial power shall extend to all the cases enumerated in the Constitution. As the mode is not limited, it may extend to all such cases, in any form in which judicial power may be exercised. It may therefore extend to them in the shape of original or appellate jurisdiction, or both, for there is nothing in the nature of the cases which binds to the exercise of the one in preference to the other.

In what cases, if any, is this judicial power exclusive, or exclusive at the election of Congress? It will be observed that between which a distinction seems to be drawn. The first class includes cases arising under the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States; cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, and cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. In this class the expression is that the judicial power shall extend to all cases; but in the subsequent part of the clause, which embraces all the other cases of national cognizance and forms the second class, the word "all" is dropped, seemingly ex industria. Here the judicial authority is to extend to controversies (not to all controversies) to which the United States shall be a party, etc. From this difference of phraseology, perhaps, a difference of constitutional intention may with propriety be inferred. It is hardly to be presumed that the variation in the language could have been accidental. It must have been the result of some determinate reason; and it is not very difficult to find a reason sufficient to support the apparent change of intention. In respect to the first class, it may well have been the intention of the framers of the Constitution imperatively to extend the judicial power, either in an original or appellate form, to all cases; and in the latter class to leave it to Congress to qualify the jurisdiction, original or appellate, in such manner as public policy may dictate.

It is useless to spend time trying to establish a line of demar-cation between jurisdiction and judicial power. The Constitution calls it judicial power, and says:

This authority to hear and determine rights between persons and between persons and their governments shall be vested in one Supreme Court and such inferior courts as Congress may ordain and exablish, and shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under the Con-

It will simplify matters to state a few unanswerable propositions. The Supreme Court is created by the Constitution; the inferior courts by Congress, by authority of the Constitution, with a limitation and a duty. It is the duty of Congress to create a court or courts with powers coextensive with those of the legislative department, in which every person can have any legal or equitable right arising under the Constitution protected.

If more than one court is ordained and established, it is for Congress to say what causes, case, subject-matter, or rights each inferior court shall take cognizance to decide and determine-in other words, what is commonly known as and called "jurisdiction of the cause." But when the particular court is given jurisdiction of the particular cause, the court can exercise over this cause full judicial power at law or in equity, and it would be not only unconstitutional, but revolutionary, for Congress to attempt to deprive the particular court of judicial power over the cause it has been given jurisdiction over-that is, one court may have judicial power over all cases at law; another may have judicial power over all cases in equity; another may have judicial power over all criminal cases; another judicial power over all cases of bankruptcy-and anything short of this would over an cases of bankrupicy—and anything short of this would be a denial by Congress of rights the people are entitled to, pro-vided for in the Constitution. As the Constitution could not erect the inferior courts and provide judicial power for each, the authority for it was given to Congress with the expectation that it would be exercised; and when the inferior court is ordained and established there is vested in it by the Constitution judicial power at law or in equity without any limitation, and there is not a line or word in the Constitution that will justify the thought that Congress can take from a court any judicial power at law or in equity over any cause placed by Congress within its judicial power.

In other words, Congress names the subject over which the court shall exercise judicial power, but the Constitution fixes the extent of the judicial power, and Congress can not limit or impair it. If Congress could in one particular, it could in more or in all, and we would have an equitable case confided to a court that could not, by an act of Congress, exercise equitable power and try and determine the case according to equitable It would be revolutionary in Congress to fail or refuse to ordain and establish a court or courts to exercise all judicial power conferred by the Constitution. And when the court or courts have been ordained and established and the subjects separated and assigned to each court, Congress can not interfere and limit the judicial power of the courts, for, as Justice Story "It is the duty of Congress to vest the whole judicial power." Take away the power of the court to issue a writ of injunction when the moving papers disclose a case of absolute emergency and it may prevent a complainant from recovering what he is legally and equitably entitled to, and the whole judicial power would not be vested in the courts. If a court If a court can be prevented from issuing a writ of injunction without previous notice-ten days' notice may be required-and the court may be prevented from issuing an injunction in any case. there are two classes of cases enumerated in the Constitution | right to an injunction in a proper case is a constitutional right, and it is a constitutional right that it should issue whenever it is made to appear that irreparable injury will follow a failure to have an immediate injunction.

The right to issue an injunction in a proper case is a part of the judicial power of the United States. All legislative power is not conferred upon Congress; only such legislative power as is granted in the Constitution—that is, if there is a legislative power in the Constitution it must be exercised by Congress and as far as this judicial question is concerned the only legislative power is to ordain and establish a court or courts that can exercise all judicial power of the United States and not to take from the courts a power to exercise judicial power over a case confided to it.

In Riggs v. Johnson County (6 Wall., 166) the court said:

Process subsequent to judgment is as essential to jurisdiction as process antecedent to judgment, else the judicial power would be incomplete and entirely inadequate to the purposes for which it was conferred by the Constitution.

And in the same case the court further said:

Authority of the circuit courts to issue process of any kind which is necessary to the exercise of jurisdiction and agreeable to the princi-ples and usages of law is beyond question.

In other words, Congress can not deprive a court of judicial power over a subject or case if the subject or case is placed within the judicial power of the court by Congress, as in cases removed by act of Congress from state courts to federal courts. Congress, in the discharge of its constitutional duty, has provided for the removal of a certain class of cases, and, when removed, Congress can not prevent the court from exercising all judicial power, except by abolishing the court.

If Congress can prevent the issuing of an injunction in a proper case without notice, Congress can prevent the issuing of an injunction in any case. A citizen of a State may derive his right from a state law, and may attempt to enforce his right in a state court. It may be a proper case for removal to the federal court, and either party may find it necessary, in order to protect their rights, to have an injunction. It certainly would be unjust to any litigant to deprive him of the right to an injunction in the federal court.

To advocate taking away power from courts of equity and preventing a person from obtaining certain rights from the court is to concede that same person has a right to the protection of such power, and it is a step toward anarchy to suggest that a person shall be denied his constitutional rights in a court created by the Constitution to aid him to obtain his constitutional rights.

On February 28, 1793 (1 U. S. Stat., 324), Congress passed an act to require judges of the United States courts to execute an act of Congress

The United States judges, entertaining great doubt under the circumstances to proceed, and appreciating that a grave constitutional question was involved, communicated to the President of the United States their reasons for declining to execute an act of Congress.

The circuit court for the district of New York, consisting of Jay, chief justice; Cushing, justice; and Duane, district judge, proceeded on April 5, 1791, to consider the question, and were unanimous of opinion and agreed-

That, by the Constitution of the United States, the Government thereof is divided into three distinct and independent branches, and that it is the duty of each to abstain from and to oppose encroachments on either; that neither the legislative nor the executive branches can constitutionally assign to the judicial any duties but such as are properly judicial and to be performed in a judicial manner.

The circuit court for the district of Pennsylvania, consisting of Wilson and Blair, justices, and Peters, district judge, made the following representation to the President on April 18, 1792:

To you it officially belongs to take care that the laws of the United States be faithfully executed. Before you, therefore, we think it our duty to lay the sentiments which on a late painful occasion governed us with regard to an act passed by the legislature of the Union. The people of the United States have vested in Congress all legislative powers granted in the Constitution. They have vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress shall establish, the judicial power of the United States. * * This Constitution is the supreme law of the land. This supreme law all judicial officers of the United States are bound by oath or affirmation to support. It is a principle important to freedom that in government the judicial should be distinct from and independent of the legislative department. To this important principle the people of the United States in forming their Constitution have manifested the highest regard. They have placed their judicial power not in Congress, but in courts.

The circuit court for the district of North Carolina, consisting of Iredell, justice, and Sitgreaves, district judge, made the following statement to the President on June 8, 1792:

That the legislative, executive, and judicial departments are each formed in a separate and independent manner, and that the ultimate basis of each is the Constitution only, within the limits of which each department can alone justify any act of authority.

Frederic Jesup Stimson in his recent work on the Law of the Federal and State Constitutions of the United States, chapter 4, Chancery and the Injunctions, says, page 28:

There has, of course, been no constitutional limitation of the powers of equity in England, nor is there in the Federal Constitution, which clearly contemplated giving all judicial power which then existed in England to the federal judiciary in cases where they had jurisdiction; but the state constitutions are beginning to deal with the subject and several States have attempted statutes. * * They have so far been adopted in the constitution of seven States. Whether in the absence of a constitutional provision a statute to that effect would be valid is a matter so untouched as yet by any decision of a high court that the author can only hazard his own opinion.

Independent of any constitutional question, Congress is asked to reverse its policy of protection to trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and go on record as now being opposed to the letter and spirit of the title to the so-called "Sherman Act," to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies, passed July 2, 1890.

The Supreme Court of the United States has closed the door to further argument. In Kansas v. Colorado (206 U. S., 46,

p. 42) that court said:

In article 3, which treats of the judicial department, * * we find that section I reads: "That the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish."

By this is granted the entire judicial power of the Nation. Section 2, which provides that the judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, etc., is not a limitation or enumeration. It is a definite declaration, a provision that the judicial power shall extend to—that is, shall include—the several mat-ters particularly mentioned, leaving unrestricted the general grant of the entire judicial power. There may be, of course, limitations on that grant of power, but if there are any they must be expressed, for otherwise the general grant would vest in the courts all the judicial power which the new Nation was capable of exercising.

When the Constitution was adopted the issuing and granting of injunctions was a part of the judicial power which was adopted and planted in the Constitution. The recognized power in equity was the issuing of injunctions before the adoption of the Constitution. The judicial power extended to and included the issuing of injunctions and was included in the Constitution,

and can not be taken out by any act of Congress.

It is believed to be one of the chief merits of the American system of written constitutional law that all the powers intrusted to government, whether state or national, are divided into the three grand departments—the executive, the legislative, and the judicial. That the functions appropriate to each of these branches of government shall be vested in a separate body of public servants, and that the perfection of the system requires that the lines which separate and divide these departments shall be broadly and clearly defined. It is also essential to the successful working of this system that the persons intrusted with power in any one of these branches shall not be permitted to encroach upon the powers confided to the others, but that each shall by the law of its creation be limited to the exercise of the powers appropriate to its own department and no other. (Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S., 168–190.)

Congress can not annul private contracts not designed to restrain or Congress can not annul private contracts not designed to restrain or regulate interstate commerce. (Railroad Co. v. Richmond, 19 Wall., 584; Addystone Pipe and Steel Co. v. U. S., 175 U. S., 211.)

The proposed legislation is not in accord with either the letter or the spirit of the Constitution. That instrument was created to protect the citizen in person and property, according to the preamble to establish justice, promote general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty. The very object and purpose of government is protection to the citizen in his person and property. This is a natural right, and governmental relations were intended to strengthen rather than weaken this right, and it would not be seriously considered for one moment that a government could by legislation deny to a citizen the equal protection The power of Congress to legislate is to be found of the law. in the Constitution. Not one of the enumerated powers can be relied upon expressly or by construction to deny a citizen the protection of the law. It was not necessary to provide that Congress should not deprive a citizen of the protection of the law, for it is so opposed to the object and purpose of government. Such legislation certainly would deprive a citizen of life, liberty, and property without due process of law. This is a limitation upon the power of Congress. No further limitation is needed.

The only power Congress has is to be found in the Constitution. Certain express provisions are therein enumerated. Not one of the express powers disclose any authority upon the part of Congress to pass the proposed legislation. Is it inferable from the construction given by Marshall, Chief Justice, in McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat., 316)?

But we think the sound construction of the Constitution must allow the national legislature that discretion, with respect to the means which the powers it confers are to be carried into execution, which will enable that body to perform the high duties assigned to it in the manner most beneficial to the people. Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited, but consist with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional.

The proposed legislation is not only at variance with the views of the great Chief Justice, but does violence to the letter and spirit of the Constitution, taking from the people inalienable rights. What express power of the Constitution can be relied upon to support the contention that the proposed legislation is necessary and proper to carry that or any power into execution? Is such legislation most beneficial to the people? Is the end legitimate? Is it within the scope of the Constittion? Is it an appropriate means to carry any express power into execution? Does it consist with the letter and spirit of the Constitution? If it is the constitutional duty of Congress to create courts so that personal and property rights can be adjudicated, can it be inferable from any express power in the Constitution that Congress can prevent a citizen from enjoying the protection of the courts, to life, liberty, and property? For Congress to deprive persons of legal rights and of the protective power of the courts is to deprive them of rights given them by the Constitution.

I concede there is no express power in the Constitution to prevent Congress denying any person or class of persons the equal protection of the law, and I insist that it is not necessary. The power resides with the people, the States, and the Federal Government, and as the people are the power creating the Government it would be unnecessary to say in express terms that a government created by the people, for the people, should not deny to any person or class of persons the equal protection of the law, and as long as there is no affirmative power there is no necessity for a negative. A negative power would only be necessary when some affirmative power should be limited.

It might very properly and justly be said that all such private rights are not created by government at all, but that government was created to protect the right to life, liberty, and property, yet we can most certainly say, the power to acquire rights of any and all descriptions, the right to acquire property to do with it at will, to make contracts to carry on business, to enforce rights and protect life, liberty, and property, and the right of protection of and to the same, is derived from the laws of the State and not from Congress, and is older than the Constitution itself, that instrument giving additional security. In other words, created by the police power of the State other words, created by the police power of the State.

The right of personal liberty, the right of property, the right of protection to person and property, is a fundamental maxim of free government, restrained only so as to prevent the infliction of injury upon others.

Congress can not enlarge or impair these rights or interfere with their protection or enforcement. They are vested rights, not rules of law subject to change. Congress does not possess the power to confer these valuable rights or to impair them, but they are under protection of the Constitution of the United States. The right of the one is given by the State, and the wrong of the other is declared by the State.

Congress can not deprive the citizen of his rights or the court of the power to protect the citizen, or say that what has always been regarded as vested rights shall not be considered in the enforcement of rights. The letter and spirit of the Constitution of the United States protects the people in the enjoyment of life, liberty, and property, and it would be a violation of that instrument to attempt by legislation to deprive the people of those valuable rights and of the security for the same, afforded by the police power of the States. From a constitutional standpoint no more dangerous invasion of the police power of the States and usurpation of unconstitutional power by the Nation, seriously affecting the rights of every citizen, has ever been suggested.

That part of article 5 of the amendments to the Constitution providing no "person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law" has strong application, for the Supreme Court of the United States, in Kilbourn v. Thompson (103 U.S. 108), says:

the Supreme Court of the United States, in Kilbourn v. Thompson (103 U. S., 168), says:

It has been repeatedly decided by this court, and by others of the highest authority, that this means a trial in which the rights of the party shall be decided by a tribunal appointed by law, which tribunal is to be governed by rules of law previously established. An act of Congress which proposes to adjudge a man guilty of a crime and inflict a punishment would be conceded by all thinking men to be unauthorized by anything in the Constitution.

If the Congress can not do that, Congress can not punish a man by refusing to protect him in his person and property, therefore the rights of a person can not be impaired by the legislation asked for, for it would be a plain attempt to deprive a person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

It is true Congress may declare what shall be crimes, and as there are no common-law crimes in the United States, nothing done or omitted is a crime under national law until so declared by Congress, but Congress can not pass a law the effect of which would be to protect a person from prosecution for interfering with the life, liberty, property, and rights of a citizen granted by the police power of the State and not in violation of the Constitution or laws of the United States, or permit a person to interfere with the vested rights of any person or take from any person the protection of the law afforded by the Constitution and the police power of the States. Congress can not do indirectly what is forbidden to do directly. No one will dispute the proposition that Congress can not take the property of one person and give to another. By a parity of reasoning Congress can not pass any law that will permit one person to so conduct himself as to prevent some other person from acquiring property and enjoy his property and enforce his rights or that will permit one person to molest another person in person, property, or rights.

As well might Congress point out how one person might murder another without being punishable therefor.

Within the limited power of Congress it is absolutely within the exclusive power of Congress to say what shall be a crime against the United States. Therefore, speaking generally, it might be said that Congress would not be guilty of a violation of duty if it refused to make certain acts or omissions criminal, for Congress must be permitted in the interest of good government to exercise an honest discretion in such matters of legislation, for instance, as the sale of goods by a peddler on an Indian reservation. But is it not, according to Story, J., obligatory upon Congress to make all laws necessary to protect the citizen in his constitutional right to enjoy life, liberty, and property, whether a man of labor or leisure? And would not Congress be guilty of a violation of duty if it refused, by appropriate legislation, to protect the citizen in the enjoyment of life, liberty, and property? How much greater would be the violation of duty for Congress to withhold from the citizen his constitutional right of protection and legalize an invasion of those constitutional rights by others.

The National Government was organized to protect the citizen in the enjoyment of life, liberty, and property; promote the general welfare and secure the blessings of liberty, not to prevent general welfare and destroy the blessings of liberty. To create courts, to protect the citizen in the enjoyment of those rights; not to prevent a constitutional court from protecting the citizen in those rights. Congress is clothed with power to make all laws necessary and proper to protect the citizen in the enjoyment of life, liberty, and property; not to make laws that will refuse protection and legalize an invasion of those rights. The letter and spirit of the Constitution creates a protection to the citizen, not a denial of protection.

It is a far more reaching question than one between labor and capital. It is one that vitally affects the very substructure of Government and will so seriously shock it that the superstructure of our Government will totter and fall; and this great Government, constructed upon the broad basis of the equality of all before the law, will be a mass of ruins, impoverishing labor as it may impair capital. There is no power to compel Congress to legislate. The framers of the Constitution proceeded upon the theory that when a given power was conferred upon Congress, that power would be exercised whenever the public interest required it, and then legislate for the public interest, and it is unconstitutional not to so legislate. If conditions are such that the demanded legislation is necessary, let the Constitution be amended to meet the requirement.

The Congress in its legislative action must proceed in accordance with a constitutional duty, not according to a sentimental demand. Legislation must not only be constitutional but with reference to the common good of all; not class or sectional in its nature, giving to the citizen the greatest constitutional liberty possible. The rights sought to be limited are civil rights of great moment to the citizen, no matter what his standing in life or calling may be, and Congress must approach the responsibility of such legislation with great care. The first question of constitutionality must be disposed of by Congress. Congress has a constitutional duty to perform and can not shirk it. On the question of constitutionality, the danger in legislation is rather to pass unconstitutional measures than to refuse to pass constitutional ones. Congress has limited legislative power and can not exceed that power. When that power is challenged, it is the duty of those charged with the responsibility to examine that question and pass upon it. It is not fair or just for a body with limited power to act without limitation according to wish and will. If Congress can and ought to pass every measure without reference to its power, what was the use of limiting that power?

No one interested in good government, willing to concede constitutional rights to all, can be unmindful of the importance of the subject or fail to appreciate the deep and earnest feeling pertaining thereto. Earnestly striving to protect the rights of all, appreciating the importance, the right, and power of the labor of this Nation; anxious at all times to advance their rights, believing their cause to be the cause of humanity, I am of the opinion that their interests can not be advanced or their rights protected by such unconstitutional measures. The strained relation betwen the laborer and the capitalists of the Nation must not be increased, but lessened. Certainly do not let us in an unconstitutional way add a greater burden to the labor of this country, to the detriment of the Nation.

It is the constitutional duty of the courts of the United States to administer the laws of the several States between citizens of the different States. And this, Congress is asked to prevent. "State statutes are enforcible in the courts of the United States." (Case of Broderick's Will, 21 Wall., 503; Holland v. Challen, 110 U. S., 15; Frost v. Spitley, 121 U. S., 552.)

As so often said, that which does not belong to commerce is statistically the state of the said.

within the jurisdiction of the police power of the State. principal object of the commerce clause of the Constitution is to protect the interstate product when in transit. That power was by the Constitution taken away from the States and given to Congress, the great object being to protect the interstatecommerce product from interference by State or individual. It can not be possible that Congress, to whose care interstate commerce is confided by the Constitution for the purpose of protecting it in transit from any interference, has the power to clothe one person with the power to deprive another person of rights given by the police power of the State, while undertaking to exercise his right of shipment; for, in order to exercise a right under the commerce clause of the Constitution he would be compelled to be shorn of rights conferred by the police power of the States. In order to obtain one right he would have to lose another. Congress can not annul private contracts or usurp the police powers of the States to interfere with any contract unless the same, when put into effect, will operate to restrain or regulate interstate commerce. And certainly Congress can not, for want of power, provide that no agreement, combination, or contract shall be deemed criminal, no matter who are parties thereto, even if engaged in inter-state commerce, for in effect it is asking Congress to legalize

Regarding the question involved of great importance, I have given the entire subject very careful consideration. I appreciate the delicacy of passing upon the constitutionality of a proposed measure, but duty must be performed. No one charged with the duty can shrink from it. The question must and can be answered yes or no. I have no hesitancy in saying that no doubt exists in my mind but that each one of the bills referred to is unconstitutional.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Hughes] for a moment.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to ask the gentleman a ques-

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I was very much interested in this address on the law delivered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, and I listened to it with a good deal of care. Perhaps I was a little stupid in not clearly getting the gentleman's idea, and I would like to ask him the concrete question now: Whether he believes that Congress has the power to enact a law to the effect that a temporary injunction shall not issue without first giving notice to the adverse party? That exact question.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I have no hesitancy in answering the gentleman from New York by saying that my views are, as I expressed them, that Congress has no power. I want to answer him by saying that if Congress can say that an injunction can not issue except upon an hour's notice, Congress is given absolute power to insist that an injunction shall not issue at all.

Mr. DRISCOLL. In other words, Congress has no power to alter or to regulate the practice or procedure of issuing injunc-

Mr. JENKINS. Congress has no power to interfere with the constitutional power of the courts, as I have endeavored to explain. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr.

Mr. HUBBARD of West Virginia. I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin whether the exercise of judicial power does not assume the existence of a controversy between parties who have a right to be heard, and who must therefore have an opportunity to be heard, which opportunity can only be secured to them by giving of notice?

Mr. JENKINS. Why, I say to my friend from West Virfor whom I have a very great respect, that is a very difficult question to answer after my argument. But I am insisting all the time we have three great departments of government, and the Constitution of the United States says that all judicial power, both at law and at equity, shall be vested in these courts.

Mr. HUBBARD of West Virginia. And I fully agree with that statement, and I accept unreservedly the definition, restated by the gentleman, of judicial power-that it is a power to hear and determine; but it is a power to hear, as well as to determine.

Mr. JENKINS. I yielded to a question, not to an argument.

I now yield to the gentleman from New Jersey for a question.
Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I do not know whether I can state the situation and confine my remarks strictly to a question, but I will try. The gentleman stated, and with great vehemence, that he insists upon the three branches of the Government being kept absolutely separate and distinct, and decries the desire of the legislative to encroach upon the judicial branch. Now, I want to ask the gentleman this question. Of course he is familiar with the Blackstone definition of lawrule of conduct prescribed by the superior, and which the inferior is bound to obey.

Mr. JENKINS. I yielded for a question.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Now, when a judge issues an injunction, I ask the gentleman if he is not setting up a standard of conduct for everybody who comes within the purview of the injunction, and as he may punish anyone not obeying it, is the judge not then legislating?

Mr. JENKINS. I do not think the gentleman from New Jersey asked me that question in candor, I want to say to him, because I want to be honest. I say to him in all candor the difference between the gentleman from New Jersey seeking votes and me is that I am speaking of what is absolutely right, and it is impossible for any gentleman to answer his question. yield back my time to the gentleman from New Jersey. Mr. HAY. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, taking advantage of the latitude of general debate, I want to call the attention of the House to the provisions of a bill that challenged the attention of the House for a few minutes on last Monday, and which will probably again come before this House during the present I desire to call attention to the provision of that bill now, because when the bill itself is before the House, under the peculiar rules which have been so much discussed here, I am fearful that I will not have the time to present my views then. Therefore I desire briefly to present some views on that bill in order that they may be printed in the RECORD and that this House may have no excuse for enacting into a law what, in my opinion, is the most outrageous measure that I have met with during my short service here.

It is true, Mr. Chairman, that the bill itself does not pretend to deal with matters which we generally consider of very grave importance, but it does strike at the very foundation of the Government itself. It strikes at the most sacred right, I think, which the Government does confer and undertake to protect.

I refer to the bill H. R. 12898, a bill introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Olcott]. It is a bill which undertakes to regulate admission into the Government Hospital for the Insane. The bill purports upon its face to do nothing more or less than abolish jury trial in those cases. But the bill goes further than that. I will not say that the bill is artfully worded; I will not say that it is adroitly constructed; I will not say that it is drawn purposely to conceal its meaning; but I do say that if that had been the purpose of it, it could not have been better drawn.

This is a bill which seeks to change the practice in court procedure in certain cases and ought, by every rule of orderly parliamentary practice, it seems to me, to have gone to the Committee on the Judiciary. It went to the Committee on the District of Columbia. As I say, being a bill to regulate procedure in the courts, it occurs to me it ought to have gone to the Judiciary Committee. It certainly ought not to have gone to the Committee on the District of Columbia, because it is not local in any sense of the word.

I want to say to the House that this hospital for the insane was originally established for only one class of patients—the insane of the army and navy. As the years have come and gone, we find new that three classes of patients are admitted to that institution—the insane of the army and navy, the indigent insane of the District of Columbia, and the federal criminal insane from all over the country.

In the Fifty-ninth Congress I introduced a resolution for the appointment of a special committee for the investigation of the affairs of that institution. The committee was appointed, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Olcott], who is the proposer of this bill, was made chairman. That committee was appointed on April 21, 1906. It took testimony covering 2,247 pages of printed matter and reported its findings and recommendations on February 18, 1907, almost twelve months after its appointment and just thirteen days before the Congress expired by limitation, too late for the House to become conversant with the facts; too late for anything to be done toward remedying the errors that were found in its management.

I shall not take time to read any of the testimony. It is printed and Members can secure it; but I want to say that the testimony taken by that special committee established mismanagement, incompetency, and cruel treatment of inmates during the administration of Dr. William A. White, the present superintendent. I want to say that the testimony in that case will show that the criminal insane were intermingled with the innocent insane; and every alienist in the land, every person in this country who has ever had anything to do with the management of that unfortunate class of our people, agrees that that ought not to be done. Only a few months ago, if gentlemen will remember, the newspapers of this city published the fact that a negro man, an inmate of that institution, running at large among the other inmates, murdered a white woman patient, murdered a guard or an attendant, and disabled two or three other persons before he was finally captured and put under control.

Now, I want to call attention to the bill itself. If any lawyer in this House will read it, he will agree with me that a more outrageous bill, a bill more far-reaching in its consequences in the direction of deprivation of rights of the citizen, has never come into this House in my limited experience. This bill, as I say, seeks to prevent jury trial; but it goes further than that. It abolishes jury trial in insanity cases, involving both liberty and property. And without going minutely into the details, I want to say that if a citizen of the State of California or the State of Washington should be found in this city and this bill was the law, and some designing person desired to incarcerate him in that asylum and administer upon his estate and dispose of his property, it could be done within twenty-four hours, without notice to anybody interested in him, without the opportunity to have a witness summoned, without an opportunity to have a jury, without the opportunity to have counsel, without the opportunity to be represented in the slightest degree.

The bill is vague, indefinite, and uncertain as to the requirements, as to statements of fact in the preliminary petition. It is provided that the petition shall be presented to one of the judges of the supreme court of the District, stating the facts necessary for admission to said hospital as heretofore provided by law; not as now provided by law, not the facts necessary under the law as it exists to-day, but the facts as necessary under some law that existed heretofore. At what time the bill does not state, and the time intended can not be ascertained from a reading of the bill.

Further, the bill provides that the petition shall not be filed until the court shall be satisfied as to the responsibility of the persons, and so forth. There is no provision as to the measure of testimony which shall satisfy the court, no provision as to how he shall be satisfied, but simply that the court shall be satisfied by some peculiar rule which each individual judge will establish or adopt for himself.

The bill provides for service on the alleged lunatic and the District Commissioners. How much service? "At least one day before the hearing." So, if this bill is enacted into law, a man is to be given at least one day's notice before he is carried before the court and his right to liberty investigated, his property sequestered, his whole estate administered on.

It is further provided in the bill that service also is to be had on the husband or the wife, father or mother, or next of kin of such insane person. It may be they are the very people who are trying to get him into the asylum; the person with whom such alleged insane person may reside, or at whose house he may be, or such other person as the justice in his discretion may name, at least one day preceding the time fixed for such hearing.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is one other feature of this bill to which I desire to call attention, and I shall not have the opportunity to discuss it at all, but that is the feature which is the crux of the whole bill. It is this: In section 5, on page 4, of the bill, you find this:

SEC. 5. That the order of the court on the hearing of the application on the petition and the evidence shall be made without an inquisition by jury, and all the proceedings under the petition shall be entered in the minutes of the court: Provided, however, That the justice to whom application is made may, if no demand is made for a hearing, proceed forthwith to determine the question of insanity, and if satisfied that the alleged insane person is insane may immediately issue an order for commitment to the Government Hospital for the Insane.

Now, then, when a petition is filed in open court, if no demand is made for hearing then, the bill presupposes when the petition is prepared and presented to one of the justices that the alleged insane person, or some one for him, will be in the judge's chamber ready to make application for a hearing. he is not there, if some one is not there, at the very moment that the petition is presented to the judge, then the judge may, if no demand is made, proceed forthwith, without a jury, without a witness being summoned, without service being had, without notice of any character, he may proceed forthwith to determine the question of sanity or insanity and commit the party to the asylum if he believes he is insane on that hearing. No measure of testimony is prescribed, no method of procedure is laid down, no notice to the person whose rights are involved is provided, no opportunity to make demand for hearing is allowed; but if the demand for hearing is not made, right then and there, the judge may proceed forthwith to investigate and commit the person to the asylum, and there is no possible escape. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that in the face of this testimony, which has been taken openly, the committee spending nearly twelve months in hearing evidence, a condition of affairs was shown to exist in that institution which shocked the moral sense of this Nation, and yet we find bills introduced here to strengthen the hands of this incompetent and unfit superintendent of that asylum. We find bills introduced here, referred to and reported favorably by the District Committee, changing the procedure of the courts in certain cases, changing the practice of the courts in most important cases, and undertaking to hurry them through the House, giving this man more power instead of stripping him of the power which he has abused, and which ought not to be in his keeping.

Now, I want to put these statements of fact and criticisms of the evidence in the Record, simply that the House, if the membership cares to make an investigation of this question, may act on this bill with full knowledge as to its real character. It is not a local bill; it affects the whole Nation; it affects persons from one end of the country to the other; it affects the most sacred right of liberty; it affects the right of property and the right to dispose of property as the owner may see fit,

As I have said, there is nothing local about this bill, which has been favorably reported by the District Committee. It should never have gone to that committee; it should have gone to the Committee on the Judiciary and should have been considered by a committee of lawyers. As I have said, no rule of testimony is prescribed; no power to summon witnesses is given; jury trial is taken away; and the whole method of procedure, so far as can be ascertained, is locked up in the breast of the individual judge to whom the petition may be presented.

I shall not go further at this time, Mr. Chairman; and with the permission of the committee to put the statements and comments on the testimony which I have prepared in the Record, I. yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record by the insertion of the papers referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. The matter referred to is as follows: SOME INCIDENTS OF DOCTOR WHITE'S MANAGEMENT AND SUPERVISION.

Over 30 witnesses testify to failure of the superintendent to visit the building and inspect the wards for long intervals. For instance, the following witnesses, all hospital attendants and employees, describe his visits as follows:

Mr. C. W. Teates (p. 1262). Four visits in one year.
Miss Rose Herbert (p. 615). Four visits in fifteen months.
Mrs. Mary McLaughlin (p. 273). Two visits in ten months.
Albert C. Hayden (p. 344). Two visits in twenty months.
C. J. Harbaugh (p. 299). Four visits in two and one-half years.
Arthur Nabors (p. 294). Three visits in two and one-half years.
W. J. Lyon (p. 1158). Not once in fifteen months.
Albert Ball (p. 289). Not in kitchen for past eighteen months.
N. R. Harnish (p. 1138). Never comes at all.

And many others testified to same effect.

The superintendent lives in one of the buildings and has to pass most of them on his way to and from his office in the grounds,

Over 50 witnesses, nearly all hospital employees, testify to the food being bad, unclean, tough, poorly cooked, unpalatable, and sometimes not sufficient of that; no butter and unsavory quality of oleomargarine; shortness in sugar; no fruit, such as oranges, lemons, bananas, apples, and so forth; poor tea and coffee; meals served cold; no poultry, eggs, or milk, except in sick and special diets; old soldiers eating black molasses on their oatmeal.

And yet the superintendent has the largest per capita of any of the large institutions-$220 plus pensions (p. 857), private boarders, and ex-officers' allowance of $1 per day, bringing per capita to about $315 (p. 895).

Over 60 witnesses have testified to the cruel and brutal treatment of patients.

Nearly one-half of these are hospital employees, who admit harsh and brutal handling of patients as a matter of necessity because of lack of sufficient or the right kind of help or the obstinate character of the patients.

These occurrences were denied when the charges were first made public and before this investigation started.

So was the use of strait-jackets, bed saddles, handcuffs, and other restraints.

But the frequent use of these appliances for restraint were proven beyond question, then admitted and explained and excused.

Of course the superintendent knew nought of all this. Why should he? He rarely, if ever, saw any of these wards and patients. He had his own private table and special cook and waitress; his meals are first class and well served. And what he did not see he had no knowledge of, and his admitted attitude discouraged talking upon part of those who did see and endeavored to inform him.

The witness, Burroughs (p. 17), told the superintendent of the continuous cruelty to patients in the laundry and of the drunkenness of the foreman, Maenche, and wrote to him repeatedly before the charges were made public by the Medico-Legal Society, after which he started an "investigation," but he did not discharge Maenche. When Doctor White was testifying (p. 881), he explained that he did not give attention to Burroughs, because he thought it a bad principle of administration to give attention to complaints of subordinates against their superiors. Burroughs is now United States meat inspector, Agricultural Department, Philadelphia.

The experienced attendant, Thornton O. Pyles, complained to the superintendent frequently about the poor food, and cruelty to patients, and other matters relating to their treament and comfort. But Doctor White explains (p. 862) "that he did not think Mr. Pyles's mental condition was such as to warrant any particular action on his part."

(Testimony of three physicians and two prominent lay witnesses was offered by Mr. Evans, attorney for the Medico-Legal Society, to prove Mr. Pyles's good mental condition at that time, but the committee refused to hear them (p. 1267).

Mr. Pyles subsequently formulated his complaints in a petition, which was signed by 52 attendants (pp. 91, 936), and he got discharged for his pains. (Petition, p. 931.)

What happened to Pyles" satisfied the rest that to keep mum was the best policy.

Mr. Pyles is now chief guard of the boys' department at the Reform School, District of Columbia, under Department of Justice.

And the superintendent gives the same reason (p. 927) for ignoring the complaints of Mr. McKnight (p. 357) of cruel and abusive treatment.

Then, when funds were running short this superintendent sought to economize by taking experienced attendants from their duties on the wards, short handed as they were, and making them do laborers' work on the grounds, cleaning brick, sweeping and shoveling the dirt from the roadways and wheeling it away.

In consequence of this Milton Berry (p. 1053) and Clarence Pendleton (p. 1041), and Bernard Allen (p. 196), and Thomas Seaton, and some 12 or 15 other experienced attendants (p. 1097), quit or were discharged for "insubordination" because they refused to leave the wards and become street sweepers, etc.

Their places were filled by new fellows-young men from the farms-at $15 per month.

Good for the hospital exchequer, but bad for the unfortunate patients on the wards. And yet this superintendent, and all the other superintendents who have testified, and the supervisors, bemoan and be-wail scarcity of and difficulty in securing competent attendants for the patients, and ward service. OLD AND INFIRM PATIENTS WALK IN SLIPPERY PLACES.

Many black eyes, bruises, broken arms, legs, and hips among particularly the older and more infirm patients are ascribed to and explained by the slippery floors of the wards, which are polished and waxed to a mirror and ballroom surface.

The testimony of John A. Shearer, who was put on as an enthusiastic champion for the superintendent, states in his own language (p. 1255):

They talk a great deal about broken hips and broken arms. I have seen broken arms and broken hips, but it was not done by attendants by a long shot. One good old lady, 80 years old, fell and broke her arm, and she had hardly gotten rightly over it until she slipped and broke her hip. The floors are very slippery. In fact, I have got to be very careful in walking over them. * * Another lady by the name of Fannie Redmond fell a few weeks ago and broke her arm. That is not done by the attendants. This is done because they fall. He also speaks very flippantly of the epileptics slipping and falling right and left and cutting their heads and blacking their eyes. But this was not the fault of the attendants.

The testimony of C. W. Teates, a witness for the hospital, shows, at page 1258-

Question by Mr. Hay. A great deal has been said here this morning about people falling down and breaking their legs and hips. Is that caused by the floors being so slippery?—Answer. To a certain extent;

The testimony of Mrs. Cole (p. 751), Miss Griffin (pp. 100-488), Mrs. Carraher (p. 184), Mrs. Pavey (p. 1146), Mrs. Washburn (p. 180), and others describe how the patients are tied in bed, under indescribable conditions, for long periods of time to prevent their wandering around on the slippery floors and injuring themselves, while the single attendant or nurse, or perhaps two of them, are engaged elsewhere washing windows, cleaning the lawns and walks, and so forth.

But what business was this of the superintendent? He did not fall and break his leg on a slippery floor, so why should he bother about these minor incidents?

It is true that these floors might have been protected and these patients might have been dressed and put in easy chairs on the attractive porches overlooking the beautiful lawns, but this would have occasioned some attention and thought upon the part of the superintendent and diverted his mind from the finances, landscape gardening, architectural features, and farming problems, and from his literary labors, social functions, automobile trips, and other important interests devolving upon this "Pooh Bah," as he describes himself.

And then the subject of employment and recreation for the patients not bedridden, especially for the old soldiers in the bull pen," was above his notice and troubled him not at all.

The testimony from all the superintendents from other institutions shows great stress laid upon these important features of treatment.

Field days and athletic sports, athletic grounds with grand stands for the patients, and prizes for all the contestants; picnics in the woods; social visits between different wards; games—croquet, lawn tennis, baseball; employments not in line of the patient's trade or profession, but with a view to his physical and mental uplift; all these at other institutions. But at St. Elizabeth, what? Personal observation and information show very little, indeed, of any of these.

One croquet set used by colored male patients near the main entrance.

One incomplete croquet set for all the female patients.

One lawn-tennis court on the male side for two sets of players, used by the male physicians and attendants principally.

A so-called "baseball field," with one diamond, used principally by the physicians and attendants.

No seats or accommodations for the patients generally, but those on parole could sit around on the grass and look on if they chose.

In the "bull pen," nothing whatever but stagnation and dry rot, and same conditions generally prevail. Some 500 or 600 old soldiers, without employment or recreation, confined in an inclosure of about 2 acres, surrounded by brick buildings and high walls.

It is true that during the winter there are some entertainments at night, and a dance now and then.

But only a few can enjoy these, principally the young male and female attendants. There is also a band, composed of attendants; patients are not permitted to take part, as they might make discords.

This band plays occasionally around the grounds, as well as Whether the patients are edified is a question. it can.

And the epileptics, light and severe, sane and insane, herded together, dined together, with the old soldiers. No special diets and no treatment save "custodial care," as Dr. Harry R. Hummer testifies (p. 1186), although he seems to be waking up to possible improvement of conditions.

The largest per capita cost, the worst food, least thought and attention, and poorest percentage of employment and means for stimulating the minds of these patients is the record of this hospital as compared with other institutions.

Automobiles and carriages the superintendent has galore, for his use and the entertainment of his guests.

Two vehicles for the use of the patients-in driving them out, and so forth.

These two vehicles accommodate about 20 patients and make two trips a day. There are 2,500 patients. Deducting the bedridden and criminal classes, there would be left some 1,800 patients to have these outings. It is an easy calculation to make as to how often the individual patient, exclusive of the favored ones, gets a ride outside of the walls of that institution.

But why should the superintendent consume valuable time or thought over these matters? He does not have to bother with such trivial details. He is otherwise busy and interested and entertained.

After this investigation began he started some "long contemplated" improvements, and the visiting superintendents appear to concur in the opinion that when he gets these ideas and improvements in practice he will have a model institution. But why did he wait three years, and then have to be stirred up with an investigation to stimulate his thoughts in lines for benefit of the patients?

FAVORITISM.

Maenche, unquestionably a drunken, abusive, vulgar person, but for some reason the superintendent could not discover any evidences of this, although it was well known to insiders, including a physician, Doctor Glascock-and outsiders as well. own testimony convicts him.

R. L. Browning and W. Green, attendants, can come into their wards drunk and fight each other and endeavor to tear the telephone down so the watchman could not phone to the night doctor. (Hedges, 1122.)

A reprimand was sufficient in these cases.

But others not with the pull nor with such manifestations of indulgence, as the testimony shows, had to surrender their keys and be discharged peremptorfly for trivial reasons.

One of the attendants—Curry Thrift—who left because his promised increase of $2.50 each six months, as a graduate nurse, was not given him as promised, described how the superintendent transacts business (p. 1093). He says:

I let it go for the next six months, and there was no increase then. So I waited on Doctor White concerning it, and he advised me to go and see the financial secretary, as he had nothing to do with it. I went to see Mrs. Hardy (the financial secretary), and she advised me to see the supervisor. I went to see the supervisor, and he advised me to see Doctor Logie, the physician I was working under. He said he would talk to Doctor White, and he would refer it to the financial secretary and see what could be done. I waited two years and a half for it; I didn't get it at all.

The lack of personal inspection and attention to the wants of the patients, in all respects, and to the ward service and the comfort and satisfaction of the attendants and nurses exhibited by the superintendent is only exceeded by that of the board of visitors, as shown by all the testimony.

Every superintendent of insane asylums brought from other States criticised the hospital in one way or another-too large.

poor service, and so forth.

CRITICISMS BY SUPERINTENDENTS OF OTHER ASYLUMS.

While the numerous superintendents and officials brought from outside institutions were, of course, complimentary to Doctor White, there was not one who did not, inadvertently perhaps, criticise his management in some particular detail, better conditions being shown to prevail in their own institutions in either quality, preparation and service of food, character of clothing, employment and recreation for patients, treatment of the epileptics, use of restraints, the "bull pen," separation of criminal insane, classification of patients, supervision of the wards, and so forth.

With reference to the supervision of the various departments wherein Doctor White rarely, if ever, visits, as shown by the testimony, these outside physicians all show necessity for constant personal supervision and visits by the superintendents.

For instance:

Doctor Hutchinson, of Dixmont, Pa., says (1544):

I am on my wards with my assistants every day.

Doctor Wolfe, of Norristown, Pa. (1603):

I try to get around once every day.

Doctor Drewry, of Petersburg (1611):

The superintendent ought to get around to each and every department at least once a week.

Doctor Eyman, Massillon, Ohio (1626):

I am to see every patient at least every week.

Doctor Mabon, Ward's Island, N. Y. (1690):

I try to get all through the place once in two weeks.

And so on through the list.

Cruel and abusive treatment, testified to by many witnesses, principally former attendants and employees, is, of course, denied and attempted to be disproven. The following instance will furnish a shining example:

Joseph W. Belt, a former attendant, testified to numerous occurrences, among which was the case of an attendant named Hawkins, who was in the habit of using a doubled electric wire on the patients' heads (327) until they would get their "heads nearly to the floor and holler murder and fire and everything else before he quit."

Hawkins (712) of course denied the soft impeachment, but also denied that he ever had a wire for any purpose; but this was proven untrue by a witness, Harry Talbott (1104), who was an electrical worker in the hospital, and who testified that

Hawkins asked him for a piece of wire, and he gave it to Hawkins, who stated "it was a good thing to tan patients with."

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make some remarks in reference to the very practical question of the approaching revision of the tariff. We have now the question of revision in the hands of one of the committees of this House which will, ere long, make its report for the consideration of the House and of the country.

There are some of us, Mr. Chairman, that have often in the past years suggested that a revision of the tariff was required. Our suggestions have not always been met with the prompt favor that would have been agreeable, but at last the question has become one that must be dealt with practically. A bill is to be passed which will, I doubt not, conform to the pledges of the Republican party in its platform and recognize the changes that are required by changed industrial and commercial conditions.

It has been suggested that a revision of the tariff might mean a revision up as well as a revision down, but I think all recognize the fact now that, in view alike of business conditions and of popular sentiment, a revision of the tariff, in the opinion of a majority of the people of the country, means a revision down.

Now, Mr. Chairman, any tariff bill must necessarily deal with a great multiplicity of items. I have not thought it wise to occupy the time of this committee in the attempt to go through the details that will be required when the tariff bill comes up for discussion. But there are a few general propositions that I believe underlie this great question, which I desire very briefly to suggest to the House this afternoon.

We are, Mr. Chairman, the greatest manufacturing nation in the world, and for this there are good reasons. We have natural resources that can be equaled in no other land in the world. We have a laboring population that in intelligence and industry and inventiveness can be equaled in no other land, and we have in our business men a capacity for meeting new questions, for adopting new improvements not found, I believe, in any other country. So as a result of natural processes we have attained a position which I do not think I overstate in saying makes us country. a position which I do not think I overstate in saying makes us the chief manufacturing country of the world to-day. The great question before us, Mr. Chairman, the most important question in my belief which the American people have to meet is not only to continue, but to extend and perpetuate the com-mercial supremacy of the United States, and that that may be maintained and extended as the future will demand, it is necessary that the manufactures of the United States should be sold in the markets of all the world.

The control of our own markets we have and can easily have, but we have a population of 80,000,000. We have the facilities and the capacities for manufacturing which would supply with the articles of use and of desire not 80,000,000 people, but 800,000,000. If this country is to increase as its resources permit and its people expect, it is essential that what hold we have now on the world's markets we should retain, and that that hold should be largely increased. And if we are to sell our manufactured goods not only in Europe, but to 400,000,000 people in China, to 300,000,000 people in the East Indies, and to untold millions of people all over the world, we must meet in those markets the manufacturers of any other country on equal terms. We must be able to compete with the manufacturers of Germany or of England or of France or of any country to whom, just in the same extent as to us, the possible markets of the world are open, and if we are to sell our goods in those markets the American manufacturer must sell as good an article for as low a price as can be furnished by his competitor from any part of the world. Upon our ability to do that depends not only our present prosperity, not only our future prosperity, but our future extension and safety, because if the manufacturing energies of this country are to be controlled by the bounds of the land, if they can find no outlet for activity outside of the limits of the United States, broad as those are, great as is the population that lives within them and will live within them, still the potential manufacturing development of the country will come against a dead wall and be brought to a stop, with the sure result of commercial crises, of checks in the development of the country, which would be dangerous not only for our manufacturing prosperity, but for our social peace.

So the problem is, Mr. Chairman, What can be done to increase our hold, to give our manufacturers the fairest possible chance in their contention for the world's markets? There are two or three considerations which bear upon the importance of this question and which may be taken in mind by thought-ful men. The great volume of our exports during most of our past history has been from the products of the soil, from the articles with which life is sustained. It is as certain as that day follows night that the tendency in the future must be to a diminution of the volume of such exports from the country. While the population has not yet caught up with the product of the soil, it is much nearer to it than was the case twenty-With the growth of population that is before five years ago. us, and upon which we can rely with absolute certainty, the time will come, and not so very far off, when the production of the articles of the soil necessary for consumption for food in this country will not very largely exceed, if it exceeds at all, the demands of our own population. Then, necessarily, the importance of our exports of manufactures will be very greatly increased.

There is another consideration which it befits all thoughtful men to have in mind, and that is the great problem of the conservation of the natural resources of the land. Already we realize that those natural resources are not boundless, already we realize that the consumption of the potential wealth that is above the soil and still more underneath the soil is going on at a rate that not only can not continue forever, but can not continue for a long period, as periods go in the history of a nation.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that it is the part of wise legislation to draw so far as can be done from every other land in the world the raw material which we may take and manufacture and sell in the world's markets, and so far as can be done preserve our own. If there is a ton of coal, if there is a ton of lead in the United States that stays in the mines, it is not lost. It is as safe there as if it were money in a savings bank. Sooner or later the time will come when it must be used, and the value of a ton of raw product which is saved for twentyfive years will be greater at the end of the twenty-five years All of these reasons suggest that it is the it is to-day. part of wisdom so far as can be done to obtain from other countries what can be used by us in our manufacturing industries and to preserve our own resources. Doubtless, under any circumstances the contribution by other countries of raw material to be consumed in our manufactures will be comparatively small, and yet in the aggregate it may be of much importance.

As the problem is to improve the opportunities of our manufactures in obtaining possession of the markets of the world, this leads to a consideration of what are the things that make up the cost of a manufactured article and what is the situation of our country compared with other countries in reference to them.

Roughly speaking, there are two elements of cost.

One is raw material; the other is the work that is put on the raw material. What can be done by law in either of these directions to assist the manufacturer in the problem before him of being able to sell his goods in the world's markets at the lowest possible price? In reference to the cost of labor, all recognize the fact that the safety and prosperity of this country rests and must continue to rest upon well-paid labor. That no one contests or questions. And yet, Mr. Chairman, when considering the rivalry between us and other nations I think too much importance is sometimes paid to the relative price of our labor compared to that paid to the workmen of other lands, because the problem is not what you pay the man, but what you pay for the work the man does, and the differ-ence in the efficiency and skill between the average American laborer and the average laborer elsewhere is so considerable that the problem of relative cost is somewhat modified. But however important that may be, nothing can be done or should be done that in any way would tend to diminish the satisfactory system of wages upon which our country's prosperity is based. So, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me all the more important to see that the law does all it can to enable the American manufacturer to obtain the raw material he needs at the lowest possible price.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. May I ask the gentleman a question in that connection?

Yes Mr. PERKINS. Mr. SHACKLEFORD. What about the producer in this country, mainly the farmer?

Mr. PERKINS. Well, I will say something about him, too.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would like, if the gentleman does not mind an interruption

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, no. Mr. DOUGLAS. To ask one question, and that is in connection with the definition you have given of those things, the natural resources of other countries, being brought here and the salvation of our own; what are they, in your mind, other than mineral products?

Mr. PERKINS. I am going to refer in my remarks to three or four. Of course, Mr. Chairman, the term "raw material" is always an embarrassing one because there is some labor bestowed on everything. Nothing reaches the shop or reaches the individual so as to be of any value unless man's work has done something to it. The lumber of the forests does not by some force of nature tumble into the carpenter's shop, but some work must be bestowed upon it. The ore in the mine does not come out by any natural process, by any evolution, by any earthquake force, but some labor must be bestowed upon it, and yet when we come to deal with this question, as all such questions must be dealt with, as a practical question, I think we have little difficulty.

A certain amount of labor for which due consideration must be had has been given to the tree that has been chopped down and floated down the stream and comes to the market, and yet the amount of labor on that is insignificant compared with the percentage of labor that is given to the contents of that tree when finally it appears in the furniture of the house or in the building of the house itself for man's occupation. A certain amount of labor is given in the ore that is produced, but an infinitely greater amount of labor is bestowed on the ore when it is finally turned into some form fit for human use. said a moment ago, upon a sufficient wage rests our prosperity, and it is of special importance to see that our manufacturer, in his struggle all over the world, is aided by the cheapest possible raw material, because the cheaper he gets the material, the better able is he to see that fair wages shall be paid to his When we consider whether we shall adopt artificial measures to enhance the price of an article which receives a very small amount of labor, or shall assist the man, the manufacturer, in the production of whose goods a great amount of labor is bestowed, necessarily it is the part of wisdom to see that the law does not impose its burden upon the person who has the most important work to do and by whom the greatest body of laborers are employed.

And another consideration arises in reference to some of the articles of raw material. There is no branch of a tariff law that does not affect different people differently. It is hardly possible to conceive of a change in any schedule of the tariff which would not affect certain persons favorably and certain persons unfavorably. So where we find a duty, the result of which imposes a burden upon comparatively few, and of which the benefit is reaped by many, such a provision, it seems to me, should remain in the law; and where we find a provision the benefit from which is enjoyed by comparatively few and the burden of which falls upon comparatively many, then that is a provision of the tariff, Mr. Chairman, that it seems to me should be modified and where revision is needed.

Now, with these general considerations that I have suggested, I want to say a few words in reference to some particular items of detail. It would be impossible at this time to attempt any discussion of the multiplicity of items that must come before this House for its action, but I want to suggest two or three where it seems to me the principles that I have suggested have special application. They are all of them materials upon which a small amount of labor has been bestowed when they come to the manufacturers, in comparison with the great amount of labor that will be bestowed upon them before they come to the final consumer. They are all of them articles, the resulting benefit from the tariff imposed upon which is enjoyed by few, whereas the burden falls upon very many.

And so, under the considerations which, it seems to me, should guide us in any revision of the tariff, they are items which specially demand a proper and judicious revision in the way of reducing the imposts upon articles which constitute a burden upon our manufacturers and take some money out of the pockets of many to go in larger bundles into the pockets of a very few.

The first item which I care to discuss is the duty upon lumber. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman proceeds further I would like to ask him a question or two, if it will not break up the continuity of his speech.

Mr. PERKINS. Not at all. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, as to this question of raw material. It is absolutely true that what is a finished product to one man is raw material to another, is it not?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, take the woolen question, for instance. The farmer presents his finished product, so far as he is concerned, in the shape of raw wool. The next step in the process is what they call tops, and the next process is yarn, and the next process is the cloth. Now, if you are going to distribute the benefits of the tariff, I want to ask the gentleman this question: What is the reason that the first one has not as much right to assistance, if that is what you want to call it, as the second, the third, or fourth man in that chain?

Mr. PERKINS. Well, the point, and the only point, which I intend to discuss in the brief remarks which I shall make today is to suggest certain items of large importance to the manufacturing industries, where it seems to me that the benefits to be derived by the reduction will be shared by very many and the loss to be imposed by reduction will fall upon very few. and of those, and those only, do I intend to speak to-day. woolen question, suggested by my friend, is a very broad and complex one, which I have no time to discuss to-day.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. All right.
Mr. PERKINS. Now, take lumber. That any person should be opposed to a change in law which will render it more easy for us to obtain any amount of lumber from another land is certainly a thing that excites wonder. One of the great prob-lems before us, constantly dinged into our ears, and justly dinged, is the denudation and destruction of our forests. It is said, and truly said, that this may affect most injuriously the water supply of the country. There are portions of the world now as barren as the Desert of Sahara that once were fertile lands, that have been turned into deserts from an improper and unfortunate destruction of the forests, which has destroyed the water supply, until what once was fertile land is now barren land. And the same thing, Mr. Chairman, may occur in certain portions of our own country. We make appropriations, and I do not think any appropriations are more judicious, for preserving the forests on account of their great value. I do not think there is any money voted by this Congress that is voted more wisely, and yet when it is possible, to some extent, to lessen the unfortunately and inevitably rapid destruction of the forests by getting from foreign lands whatever relief we can, opposition is made.

Apart from any question of use for manufactures, apart from any question upon whom the burden falls, any process of law by which we get the wooded product of a single acre of land from any other land and save the wood that stands upon an acre of our own land would be a wise thing if it had no other explanation behind it. But, further, I state, and I think it can not be too often said, that we should consider in these laws where the burden falls and where the benefit goes. is no great industry, and it is still a great industry, that to so large an extent is in in the hands of a few men as the ownership of timber land. Of the available timber land of this country a great proportion is in the hands of a few great corporations or a few great owners. If the price of lumber is enhanced by artificial means, they get the benefit. Upon whom does the burden fall? It falls on every man in the United States who builds a frame house. There is no more important problem for us than that men of moderate means should be comfortably and with reasonable economy furnished with habitations. In the case of every frame house in the United States the price of lumber is enhanced by the tariff. The price of every fence put up by the farmer is enhanced by the tariff, and the price of the chair on which a man sits in his own house is enhanced by the tariff. Let us consider another thing. The price of lumber has increased enormously in the last four years. Hemlock, which was sold at $12 a thousand feet not so long ago, now sells at $25 a thousand, and perhaps more.

Now, that great rise, of course, is not due entirely to the action of the tariff. It is due in part to that and in larger part to the diminution in the supply of timber; but, Mr. Chairman, there is no man that owns timber land who has not seen the price of his products enormously increase. As the result of natural laws the hemlock he was selling a few years ago at $12 a thousand he is now selling at twice that price. He has reaped the benefit and an enormous enhancement in the price of his product has to be paid by every man in the United States that uses his product. It comes with a very poor grace for the owners of timber land who have profited so greatly from natural causes to insist on obtaining an additional $2 per thousand by retaining the duty on lumber. No men have prospered more in the last few years than the owners of timber land, and a duty for their benefit increasing the already greatly enhanced value of their property makes every man who builds a frame house pay them so much more. I do not believe that a duty, the benefit of which goes to a few men who are rich and the burden of which falls on many men who are poor, should continue on the statute book.

In this connection, considering where a change in the tariff will be to the advantage of the largest industry-to the industry which employs the greatest number of men-I wish to say a word in passing on the question of wood pulp. It has been discussed before in this House liberally, and will be again.

I call attention to the fact that the enhanced price of wood pulp is a burden upon one of the greatest industries of the land. and that is the news paper making industry. There is between the industry that makes news papers and the industry that makes pulp a great disparity. It may be safely said that the news-paper manufacturers employ 40 men where the manufac turers of wood pulp employ 1 man. It is a fact that the making of wood pulp in this country, as stated by the Census Bureau, in a single year strips bare an area of timber land as large as the State of Rhode Island; and so, both from the motive of conserving, as far as we can, our forests, and the motive of benefiting, so far as we can, a great industry, the abolition of this tax may well be considered by those who have in charge the duty of tariff revision.

Now, let us pass to another duty about which I wish to say a few words and which seems to be especially obnoxious, and that is the duty on lead. The lead mines of this country are owned by comparatively very few. They are owned for the most part by a few very rich corporations. I find no fault with them. But when the question is as to who gets the benefit of the tax and upon whom the burden falls, this may be well taken in account by our law revisers. Undoubtedly they are entitled to fair profits, but not to exorbitant gains that injure other branches of business. Considering the richness of our mines, I believe lead ore can be produced in this country as cheaply as in any other part of the world.

Let me suggest in passing that a very large proportion of this ownership is controlled, as I had occasion to say in this House two or three years ago (and what I said then has never been controverted to my knowledge), by the American Smelting Company. I have neither the time nor the desire to go into the history of that corporation; but as we have been told that there are good trusts and bad trusts, certainly there can be no question that the American Smelting Company belongs to the latter division.

Upon whom falls the burden? It falls first upon very many large manufacturing industries. The people who make telephone goods, for instance, a very great industry in this land, have to pay an additional price for their lead by reason of the tariff upon lead. Going to the other extreme, the man who puts a sink in his house and has a lead pipe to carry off the surplus water has also, to the small extent that it falls upon him, to pay an increased price for lead as a result of the tariff.

Now, there was put in the Dingley tariff (and as far as I can find out few even of those who are most emphatic in support of that law think it was wisely put in) a duty of 1½ cents per pound on lead, or $30 a ton, and 2½ cents, or something over $40 a ton when it appears in the shape of pig lead and other partially manufactured forms. What is the result? Lead enters largely into the uses of our great manufacturers, who are competing for the world's markets.

The manufacturer in London who uses lead in his goods, the manufacturer in Toronto who uses lead in his goods, can get it, taking an average price, for, we will say, 31 cents per pound. The dealer who makes his goods in Buffalo or Rochester, just across the line from Toronto, the dealer who makes his goods in New York or in any other part of this country, has to pay on an average 5 cents a pound, when his competitor in Canada or in England is paying 31 cents a pound. That imposes upon every American manufacturer who uses lead as a raw product a duty of pretty nearly 50 per cent when he comes to compete in the world's markets with other manufac-

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe in the protection of American manufacturing industries. I believe in their enhancement and their growth; and I believe in assisting their enhancement and growth by legislation that will help them and not check them by legislation that will harm them, and that is why I do most sincerely hope that in the revision of the tariff we shall see a large reduction in the duty upon lead.

One other item, and then I will weary the committee no longer, because I do not believe that a great amount of time should be taken in this discussion, which is to some extent premature; but I want before closing to say a few words more about a subject that has been so often discussed in this House and in which discussions I have sometimes taken a small part. That is the duty upon hides, which is paid by the manufacturers of boots and shoes, and also by the manufacturers of leather goods of every sort and by tanners.

I will take one branch only, the manufacturers of boots and shoes. Let us see to how large an extent a Congress that believes in protecting American industries and American manufactures, that believes in enhancing the volume of American goods to be sold in other markets, should listen to the claims of that industry. How important is that industry; how largely has it the right to ask, as it does ask, not affirmative legislation of its benefit, but at least that there shall not be imposed upon it any burdens that tend to cripple it?

May I ask the gentleman a question? Mr. SHEPPARD.

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Is not the industry to which he now refers practically dominated by a trust?

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman is entirely wrong. I do not know of any great industry which is more entirely free from trust control than the manufacture of boots and shoes. There are hundreds, I do not know but that there are thousands, of manufacturers of boots and shoes from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and there not only has never been a trust to control them, but there has never been any combination to control the price. In the city where I live there must be, I should say at a guess, 70 or 80 manufacturers of boots and shoes, larger or smaller, each one earning his own living by the sale of his own goods as best he may. My friend from Texas is wrong in that suggestion.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The gentleman from New York will do me the fairness to state my suggestion properly. I asked whether the industry was dominated by a trust. Now, I will ask him if the United States Leather Company is not a trust and if it does not control 75 per cent of the business?

Mr. PERKINS. That has nothing to do with the manufacture of boots and shoes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. They use hides.
Mr. PERKINS. Oh, yes; they use hides.
Mr. SHEPPARD. And you will be acting in the interest of this trust when you remove the duty on hides without at the same time removing the duty on leather.

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, I am not disturbed by any doubt that the manufacturers of boots and shoes will not get the benefit of it. Now, Mr. Chairman, that industry employs over 100,000 people. That 100,000 people probably furnish sustenance to four or five hundred thousand people. That is a large industry even in this great land, one that furnishes a livelihood to almost a half million people. It is an industry upon which it seems to me we do not want to impose any burdens that nature does not impose. If we do not protect them, whom shall we

Mr. REEDER. Will the gentleman from New York yield for a suggestion;

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.
Mr. REEDER. I should like to suggest to the gentleman that there are about three times 500,000 people in Kansas alone who are raising hides.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not profess to be an authority upon any economic question, but I sometimes can cite names which I think are recognized authorities. James G. Blaine, a good authority on protection-

Mr. KEIFER. Oh, no. Mr. PERKINS. Sufficient to be a candidate of the Republican party for President.

Mr. KEIFER. Not many years ago he was just the other

Mr. PERKINS. Was he? He said in reference to this tax, what history has verified, that the tax upon hides would be for the benefit of the butcher, the man who needed it least, and the enhanced cost would fall on every man who bought shoes for himself or his children.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. PERKINS. I will yield to the gentleman.

GARNER. If the burden falls upon the consumer, how would the manufacturer get the benefit if you took off the duty? Mr. PERKINS. I do not understand the gentleman.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman says that Mr. Blaine contended that the burden would fall on the consumer. I ask, if the burden falls on the consumer, how would the manufacturer get the benefit of the removal of the duty?

Mr. PERKINS. Because now he has to pay more for his

Mr. GARNER. How would the manufacturer get the benefit if the consumer finally pays?

Mr. PERKINS. By larger sales. The gentleman must remember always that the problem before us is not merely the sale of boots and shoes to 80,000,000 people, but to 800,000,000 people. Burdened as it is, such is the ability of American inventiveness and of American labor that boots and shoes can be made in the United States in competition with all the world, and are sold to some extent now in London, Paris, and the other great capitals, because, no matter what the price is, the American shoe is so much better a shoe than can be made anywhere else in the world that it sells, regardless of the

Let us give the manufacturer who by his skill is able to sell his shoes, no matter what the price is, to a certain extent, all the advantage he can have, that the American boot and shoe may be sold not only in London and Paris, but to the Chinese who live in that flowery land, and to the people of India. The possible development of the boot and shoe industry alone, I do verily believe, is of such importance that, with this duty on hides removed, its magnitude would confound us. I look forward to the time, and let Congress do all it can to hasten the time, when the boots and shoes that are now sold to 80,000,000 people will be sold in all lands, to the benefit of those who will wear them and to the profit of those who will sell them.

Mr. BANNON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. BANNON. The gentleman referred to a letter written by Mr. Blaine.

Mr. PERKINS. I think it was a statement.

Mr. BANNON. No; it was a letter. Is not the gentleman aware of the fact that at the time Mr. Blaine wrote that letter the value of the raw cattle hides was less than 25 per cent of what they are at the present time?

Mr. PERKINS. I do not know how that is. I do not see how it affects the question.

Mr. BANNON. If the value of the raw hide taken from a head of cattle is equal to 20 per cent of the entire value of that animal, as it is, would the gentleman from New York say that the hide was such an unimportant by-product that the farmer got no benefit from it, and that the butcher was the man who did get all the benefit? When Blaine wrote his letter hides were so cheap they might have been considered an unimportant by-product.

Mr. PERKINS. The most satisfactory way to consider these things is to consider the course of the market. We can all reason and say, for instance, that wheat ought to sell for a dollar a bushel, or for 80 cents a bushel, and prove it to our own satisfaction; but the proof is in the price at which that commodity does sell.

And we can all of us reason and say if hides go up beef goes up, and the individual seller of an individual steer on the farm is going to get something more for his steer because hides have gone up, but the course of prices for years shows what is the necessary result, I think, of any fair process of reasoning. There is not a steer in the United States market from the Atlantic to the Pacific that is raised and bred that the man may sell him for his hide. He is raised and bred to be sold for his meat. That is why we never can have a sufficient supply of hides, no matter what the demands of the boot and shoe people are. In this country, usually, where there is a demand there is also a supply, but when it comes to the demand for hides it can not be supplied. Why? Because no matter what the price is, the man is not going to raise steers simply for the hides. He will raise the number of steers that are required to be eaten that he can sell at Chicago or Kansas City to be slaughtered, those and those alone, and the result—

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. PERKINS. For a question; yes.

Mr. GRIGGS. I understand the gentleman is in favor of free hides.

Mr. PERKINS. I am; yes, sir.
Mr. GRIGGS. Is he in favor of free leather?
Mr. PERKINS. Yes.

Mr. GRIGGS. And free boots and shoes?
Mr. PERKINS. Oh, yes. That does not trouble us a little bit, if we have corresponding reduction on the cost of the mate-

Mr. BANNON. And is the gentleman in favor of free harness and free saddlery for the farmer?

Mr. PERKINS. Surely. [Applause.] Yes. It should be correspondingly reduced.

Mr. DAVIS. The gentleman certainly would not want to rob the producer of the hides for the benefit of the manufacturer? Mr. PERKINS. No; and I do not think he is going to be

Mr. DAVIS. I will say I agree with the gentleman there, under existing conditions. I would ask the gentleman to devote a little time, please, to the fact as to whether the producer of the hides reaps any benefit from the present tariff on hides.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not see that he does. I base that on figures. It seems to me that, necessarily, he can not get much benefit, because where an animal is sold by weight on the hoof the article that must control the price is necessarily the value of the chief article, which is the meat, and the by-product does not make much difference to the seller. Furthermore, let us take some statistics. For instance, in 1893-and I could take a dozen illustrations, though I have taken only two-steers sold at 6 cents a pound, and in 1893 hides sold at 9 cents a pound. Very well, those were the conditions then. I think at that -I may be wrong-there was no duty on hides. It makes no difference. When they were selling at 9 cents a pound steers were selling at 6 cents a pound. My friend from Ohio [Mr. Bannon] suggests, if the price goes up, should not we farmers get some of the benefit? It is certainly desirable that the farmer should get all the benefit he can from anything, but we find seven years later-I think it was in 1900-that hides had gone up and there was a duty on hides, and the man that bought hides to put them into boots and shoes, instead of paying 9 cents a pound, paid 13 cents, an enhancement of almost 50 per cent, which is a great element in the cost of an article in these days of close competition and large manufactories. Where was the benefit of the seller-not of the butcher, not of Armour & Co. who, if they had any hides, sold them at 13 cents instead of at 9 cents? Where was the benefit to the farmer, in whose be-half my friend from Ohio asks the question? What was he getting? He was still getting 6 cents a pound for the steers in the markets of Chicago. The price of hides had gone from 9 to 13 cents, and the man who brought his steer there, who sold it by its weight on the hoof, got to a dollar the same price for his thousand-pound steer that he got in 1893.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. PERKINS. I do not believe I can. I hate to seem discourteous to my friend, but my time is very short.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I was simply going to suggest that, he might have gotten less for his steer if hides had been cheaper.

Mr. PERKINS. That is all very well, but when the duty is imposed on a certain article and the question is who gets the benefit, and I find that the article on which the duty is increased has gone up 50 per cent and the butcher is still paying the raiser the same price, I am going to believe that the profit goes to the butcher. [Applause.]

Now, in this industry of boots and shoes, to illustrate how great are the problems, the duty on hides, of course, first must necessarily be paid on all the hides brought from South America. Furthermore, the result of the duty is to enhance the price of all the hides that are sold in this country, and the enhancement in the cost of hides used by the boot and shoe manufacturers, if the figures given me are correct, is approximately, we will say, $4,000,000. In other words, the representatives of one of the great industries of the country pay $4,000,000 more for the hides they must use than they would pay if there was no duty on hides.

The entire volume of the boot and shoe business is less than $300,000,000. Let us call it $300,000,000. In these days of close competition if a great manufacturing industry reaps a net profit of 5 per cent on the total volume it does well. So, if we assume the entire profit of the boot and shoe industry is $15,000,000, divided among all the innumerable manufacturers from New York to San Francisco, we are not far out of the We talk about protecting and building up manufacturing We want to enhance the manufactures of the United States that they may grow in prosperity, that the number of their employees may be increased, and that the amount of money they can pay them may be enhanced, that their sales may go all over the world and the manufacturing supremacy of our country be assured, and on one great industry we impose as a result of one duty an additional cost which is more than 25 per cent of the entire profit of the industry. Now, Mr. Chairman, as I said before, I believe in protecting American industry, and that is the direction I hope the revision of the tariff will take. I believe that we should act with wisdom and consider upon whom falls the burden, and where it is the part of wisdom to lay the tax in the revision of the tariff. You probably can not change any duty without imposing some loss on somebody who before profited by it. The part of wisdom is to consider where shall we do the greatest good to the greatest number, where shall we make our changes so as to preserve, increase, and enhance the great manufacturing industries of the United States; where shall we place our duties so as to bring about results by which a permanent supremacy of the United States may be secured, so as to put it within the power of the manufacturers of the United States to compete from the North Pole to the South with any manufacturer from any other land.

Mr. Chairman, we have in this country natural resources that can not be equaled in any other land. We have a body of manual labor which, in industry, in intelligence, in the result of its labor, can not be equaled in any other land on which the sun shines. We have business men and those in control of business interests who, in their intelligence, in their activity, in their power to meet new problems, have not their equals in any other land. There is but one thing that can prevent the commercial supremacy of the United States increasing by leaps and bounds and lasting until long after this generation shall cease to have anything to do with the affairs of this world, and that is check it, hinder it, and repress it by unwise legislation. Such legislation I trust will not be the result of the deliberations of this Congress. [Loud applause.]
Mr. DOUGLAS and Mr. WATSON rose.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman to answer such questions as he may desire.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not desire, but I am perfectly willing to do so.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would like to ask the gentleman if he is in favor of free hides and free leather and free boots and shoes and free saddles and free harness, what is he in favor of protecting?

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, there are a thousand things.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I want to find out on what side the gentleman belongs.

Mr. PERKINS. I belong on the side that believes in building up American industries and I understand that is the Republican side.

Mr. DOUGLAS. By protection?

Mr. PERKINS. Why surely by protection, but by wise protection, not by unwise protection, not by protecting the millionaire owner of timber lands. I do not think that is wise protection.

Mr. WATSON. Would not the argument the gentleman has made in reference to hides apply with equal force to wool?

Mr. PERKINS. No; I Mr. WATSON. Why? No; I do not think it would.

Mr. PERKINS. It would take me an hour to discuss that question. That is a very complicated question which I have no time to talk about. When that comes up for discussion, when the bill is reported, then we can discuss the question fully. I When that comes up for discussion, when can not answer the gentleman in two minutes, it would take an hour, and although he may differ with me in reference to hides we will probably be more nearly in accord with reference to wool than his question suggests.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. PERKINS. Oh, yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman gave figures as to the price of hides and beef on the hoof. Will the gentleman tell us what the figures refer to and what he obtains them from?

Mr. PERKINS. Those figures I have obtained from some compilations of trade prices.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the prices of beef are so variable, not only from day to day, but every day, as to quality, unless the gentleman states what the price is for—
Mr. PERKINS. These were the average prices that were contained in some statistics that I examined—the average prices on the hoof sold in Chicago.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken when he thinks that 6 cents is the average price at which beef is sold on the hoof at

Mr. PERKINS. These are statistics prepared by those interested in the business. Of course I must take those second hand. Mr. MANN. I am not questioning what the gentleman says, except to ask where the information comes from.

Mr. PERKINS. They are statistics that have been furnished in the various hearings and arguments in reference to the bills by parties in interest, and, I assume, have been substantially

Mr. MANN. I wish I could find out, if it were possible, in order to ascertain whether they are correct.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman answer me a question? Mr. PERKINS. I will if I can.

Mr. BUTLER. I am very sorry I did not hear all of the gentleman's speech.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman lost very little.

Mr. BUTLER. I lost a great deal, if the gentleman will allow me to have my own opinion. Will the gentleman inform the committee about how much reduction will be made in the price of shoes provided all of that duty is taken off of hides?

Mr. PERKINS. I am sure I can not even tell the gentleman, such is my ignorance about the details of the duty, not having the honor of being on the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BUTLER. Did the gentleman understand my question? Mr. PERKINS. All I have been talking about is the duty on hides and not on shoes.

The gentleman has not been informed of Mr. BUTLER. how much reduction will be made to the consumer on the shoes he may buy'

Mr. PERKINS. I am informed by a gentleman who represents the great boot and shoe industries of Massachusetts that it would be 7 to 12 cents a pair.

Mr. BUTLER. It will be reduced 7 to 12 cents?
Mr. PERKINS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Tirrell] to answer the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to answer that question.
Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, for the last five or six years, as the debates of the House show, Congress has and to deal incidentally, if not directly, with the trouble that has grown out of possibly a faulty patent law, or the practice that obtains about patents that are procured by officers and employees of the Federal Government when they are working in the line of duty, and are directed to investigate a particular subject and make a discovery as a walk of their investigation. subject, and make a discovery as a result of that investigation, and patent it in their own name and claim it as their own prop-

The particular patent which I have in mind is what is known as the "smokeless-powder patent." There are several others of this class. The complications that have arisen as a result of private parties claiming this powder patent caused Congress to pass a resolution, in the Fifty-ninth Congress, directing the Department of Commerce and Labor to investigate the subject and report thereon.

I called at the department a day or two ago to get the report, and the obliging law officer of the department informed me that the Committee on Patents sent for his report before he had finished all of it, but the part that refers to the issuance of patents to employees, and so forth, is complete, and I hold it in my hand. The resolution reads:

Joint resolution directing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to investigate and report to Congress concerning existing patents granted to officers and employees of the Government in certain cases.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, directed to investigate and report to the Congress what existing patents have been granted to officers or employees of the Government of the United States upon inventions, discoveries, or processes of manufacture or production upon articles used by the Government of the United States.

Now, that is one proposition which is answered. The department has reported on that. The next is:

And how and to what extent such patents enhance the cost or otherwise interfere with the use by the Government of articles or processes so patented, and shall also report what royalties, if any, have been paid to officers or employees of the Government on any articles or processor.

Approved, February 18, 1907.

No report made on that portion of the resolution.

I hope I will be able to show before I conclude the importance of Congress dealing with this matter by legislation, and possibly otherwise. I shall deal with it generally. You will remember that last session of this Congress passed a bill allowing parties "hereafter" to sue the Government when the Government uses their patents. I voted against the bill, because I knew of this smokeless-powder patent trouble, and other similar cases, and I was afraid it did not protect the Government sufficiently.

Of course, if the Government takes or uses a man's property it ought to pay for it, but the question in this case is, Whose property is the patent? Is it the employee's or officer's, under certain circumstances, or is it the Government's?

Now, to show you that there is something wrong either in this bill Congress passed last session or somewhere else, the President stuck that bill in his pocket—gave it a "pocket veto" although Congress passed it. I cite this for what it is worth. I do not know why he did not approve it. I understand he says nothing about it in any of his messages. I would be glad to have all his reasons for vetoing that bill.

Gentlemen, the main purpose of my discussion to-day is to bring sharply to your attention the law on this subject, so that we may know to-morrow more than we do to-day as to what the rights of the Government are and what the rights of the employees and-officers are while in the line of duty, under special directions to improve on an article, they make a discovery. I hold in my hand the opinion of the Court of Claims in the case of Solomons v. The United States.

The judgment in this case was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States in an opinion written by Justice Brewer, and found in One hundred and thirty-seventh United States Report, page 345, here on my desk. I will read the syllabus, Mr. Chairman, of the opinion, so as to be exact, hoping that my remarks shall be educational, if nothing else:

VI. Though the Government may not obtain a monopoly of an inven-tion made by one of its officers in its service, nor a right to share in the profits, or exclude other persons from the use of it, nevertheless it may acquire the right to manufacture and use without liability to the inventor.

In that case Soloman was employed to make an internal-revenue stamp. He produced one he had previously made while chief of the bureau, which he had "perfected by the means and appliances of the Revenue Department." He got a patent on it, and he or his assigns sued the Government for a royalty. The Government won in all the courts. Judge Nott, of the Court of Claims, the first time this case was tried, said:

In the case of Burns (12 Wall., 246) the Supreme Court said: "If an officer in the military service, not specially employed to make experiments with a view to suggest improvements, devises a new and valuable improvement in arms, tents, or any other kind of war material, he is entitled to the benefit of it."

The alternative which the Supreme Court suggested seems to be presented by the present case. Here an officer of the Government in the civil government was "especially employed to make experiments with a view to suggest improvements."

Now, in the smokeless-powder matter, an officer was "specially employed" to experiment with this powder and improve on it. He was given by the Government everything he needed or desired to do the work. He discovered the smokeless-powder process and obtained a patent on that process.

Now, that man was Professor Munroe, who had been professor of chemistry at the Naval Academy for twelve years. He was succeeded afterwards by another member of the navy.

The Supreme Court of the United States (137 U. S. R., 346). passing upon the Soloman case, said:

An employee performing all the duties assigned to him in his department of service, may exercise his inventive faculties in any direction he chooses, with the assurance that whatever invention he may thus conceive and perfect is his individual property. There is no difference between the Government and any other employer in this respect. But this general rule is subject to these limitations:

If one is employed to devise or perfect an instrument, or a means for accomplishing a prescribed result, he can not, after successfully accomplishing the work for which he was employed, plead title thereto as against his employer. That which he has been employed and paid to accomplish becomes, when accomplished, the property of his employer.

Whatever rights as an individual he may have had in and to his inventive powers and that which they are able to accomplish he has sold in advance to his employer.

So, also, when one is in the employ of another in a certain line of work, and devises an improved method or instrument for doing that work, and uses the property of his employer and the services of other employees to develop and put in practical form his invention, and explicitly assents to the use by his employer of such invention, a jury or a court trying the facts is warranted in finding that he has so far recognized the obligations of service flowing from his employer an irrevocable license to use such invention.

subject, from which I quote the following:

Smokeless powder (navy).—Prof. Charles E. Munroe, John B. Bernadou, commander, U. S. Navy, and George A. Converse, rear-admiral, U. S. Navy, retired, were connected with the development of smokeless powder in the navy. Professor Munroe received patent No. 489684 for explosive powder and process for making same; to Bernadou and Converse were granted patents Nos. 550472 upon a process of making nitrocellulose powders; 551306 upon apparatus for making explosives; to Bernadou, patents Nos. 586586 upon smokeless powder and process of same; 652455, process of making smokeless powder; 652505 smokeless powder; 673377, colloid explosive and process of making same. As it appears from the reports of the Secretary of the Navy that these patents were the results of experiments conducted by these officers at the United States torpedo station, Goat Island, Newport, R. I., a somewhat detailed investigation has been made of their development.

The work undertaken at the torpedo station in this connection was to discover a powder which would be practically smokeless and which would be entirely consumed in the course of explosion, and in addition to this give a muzzle velocity as great and an internal pressure no greater than that of gunpowder.

Commander Goodrich was in charge of the station when this work began and he was succeeded by Commander Jewell. The work progressed under Goodrich during 1887, 1888, and 1889. The report of 1890, Commander Jewell, in charge of the station, discussed The results of the work at the torpedo station up to this point are covered by patent No. 489684, granted to Prof. Charles E. Munroe for explosive powder and process for making same, dated January 10, 1893. Professor Munroe states that at the time of taking out this patent he requested the Chief of Ordnance to secure the patent covering the discoveries which had been made at the torpedo station up to this time, in order to protect the Government in this pioneer development of the subject in America. That officer declined to take this action, whereupon Professor Munroe took out the patent himself, with this end in view.

The torpedo station passed under the command of Commander George A. Converse, U. S. Navy, and upon the resignation of Professor Munroe, who hads been in charge of the chemical laboratory for seven years, Lieutenant Bernadou took active charge of the experimental work.

These patents, says the department, representing the success of the work at the government experiment station, the licenses to the Government to manufacture thereunder in consideration of sums ranging from $1 to $120, and the sale of the title to the patents to private manufacturers, are dated just on the eve of the introduction of smokeless powder into the army and navy and its appearance among powder manufacturers as an item of great economic value. He says:

"Several private firms in the United States have indicated their willingness to undertake the manufacture of smokeless powder on the specifications prepared by the department, and contracts for this purpose will be shortly made."

In 1897 the Secretary of the Navy estimated that it would require $6,500,000 to at once refill all the vessels of the Navy with smokeless powder.

In 1897 the Secretary of the Navy estimated that it would require $8,500,000 to at once refill all the vessels of the Navy with smokeless powder.

Solono to the three individuals who received the patents hereinbefore described based upon the experimental work at the torpedo station, Prof. Charles E. Munroe states that the ploneer patent taken out in his name was applied for solely for the purpose of protecting the Government in the use of the discoverles made at the experiment station, and he has never received any royalty or remuneration whatsoever other than his salary while in charge of the work.

Commander John B. Bernadou, U.S. Navy, states that he received the patent for the assignment to the Navy Department of a license to use the patent (the records of the Patent Office show that this sum ranged from $1 to $120); that he benefited by the proceeds of the sale or assignment to a private individual of rights outside of those held by the Government; that said sales were outright and contained no stipulation for the payment of a specified sum per amount of Navy, was associated with him in the development of some of the steps in the manufacture of smokeless powder, and followed his guidance in the matter of the sales of patents, receiving such share of the proceeds as Bernadou deemed him entitled to; that he has acted independently in this matter, and has no relations with other patents or persons in connection therewith; that he was told that two other discovering the patents of the patent to another officer, which he refused to do as he did not see what that officer had to do with the matter; that he was naked to give part of the proceeds from the sale of the patent to another officer, which he refused to do as he did not see what that officer had to do with the matter; that he has not been to the navy separatment has used these patents for many years, and that he has been told, and has reason to believe, that they a

I call your attention to these words of the department:

From a general study of the whole process of development, however, it seems reasonably certain that the progress in the art and the practical employment of the art and the practical employment of the various formulas are all based directly upon the experiment done at the torpedo station under the direction of the Navy Department.

Mr. Chairman, under these circumstances certain members of the navy have taken patents out in their own name and then sold them to outsiders, and these outsiders have sold these patents to what is known as the "powder trust." Now, then, what are the rights of the patentee? He is entitled to own a patent under the law. I do not mean to say that these gentlemen have done anything morally wrong. I am not going to discuss the question of morals; I am talking about the law side of the case.

Now, we are confronted with this trouble: When the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War invites bids for the making of smokeless powder, no one but the "powder trust" can bid, because they alone control the patents by which process this powder must be made. That is a condition the Government is in.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Certainly.
Mr. BURTON of Delaware. I understood you to say that from your reading of the law on the subject that the party in whose employ the inventor was had a license to use that in-

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is a question whether or not the employer owns the right or patent entirely, or the person or employee who discovers the process owns it, and simply gives a license to his employer—the Government.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. To whom was the patent granted? Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The first patent was granted to Professor Munroe. He asked the department to take out a patent to protect the department, and the department would not do it, and he did it himself. Later, there were two other tentees—navy men, Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Was it granted in Munroe's

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Granted in his name. Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Was not that, then, the fault of the Commissioner of Patents in granting the patent?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. With the lights before me, I will say to the gentleman that the question is an open question, hence I am discussing it here to-day. I am trying to get Congress to pass a statute on the subject to protect the Government under these circumstances, and to protect the navy, our officers and employees-define the rights of the individual.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Has not the Government always used any of these patents at its pleasure free of charge?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. By grace, I would say, and not as a legal right, I think. These navy men have given the Government the use of this, to make powder for the Navy Department only. They do not even go so far as to let them use it for the War Department. That shows they claim title.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. You say they have been allowed to use it by grace?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Then, so far as you know, the question has never arisen as to whether they have a legal right, because it was not necessary.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The courts have never passed on these particular cases. The Attorney-General has not even on these particular cases. The Attorney-General has not even been asked to pass an opinion upon it, says General Crozier. The Judiciary Committee of the House or Senate have never passed upon it—everything is in the air, so to speak—but these passed upon it—everything is in the air, so to speak—but these gentlemen have taken the patents in their own names and gone and sold them to outside parties, and when the Government wants to make powder the only outside parties that can bid on it and can come up to the requirements are the parties to whom these patentees have sold their patents, so that the thirty or forty independent powder makers of the United States can not compete, because they have not the patents

The powder trust has them and holds them as their private property

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. As I understand, the patentee has sold the rights that were granted to him by the regular authorities.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; the Patent Commissioner. Mr. BURTON of Delaware. And that has not been called And that has not been called into question-his right to sell that?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; not in the courts nor in the Department of Justice nor elsewhere, to my knowledge, except in Congress in debate. If the bill which the President stuck in his pocket had become law, the question would have soon, perhaps, been in the courts.

These patentees were directed to experiment to discoverthey discovered these processes. These decisions and others I have read show that the patents belong to the Government. These decisions and others

I think that Congress put up the laboratory. The department directed them specifically to experiment with some powder samples and improve on them. They did experiment and did discover improvements, and patented them. Now, if these patents belong to the Government, then Bernadou and Converse, who made the discovery, had no right to sell them to the powder trust or to anyone else.

Mr. HARDY. Is not the Government estopped by the acts of the Patent Commissioner issuing these patents to these parties?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, that question I can not answer. I am not a patent lawyer. If estopped, the Government could reply, perhaps, fraud.

Mr. HARDY. The plain doctrine of estoppel would apply. Mr. HARDY. The plain doctrine of estoppel would apply. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to say that Professor Munroe asked the government authorities to take out a patent for the Government, but it was not done. The authorities declined to take action, whereupon Professor Munroe took out the patent with this end in view-protecting the Government.

Mr. Chairman, I do not care to make a speech; I am bringing this important matter before Congress. I want the facts bare and plain to Congress. These facts are important in a number We are enlarging our powder factory.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield again? Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HARDY. Would not the proper practical suggestion be to direct that where a discovery was made by an officer in the employ of the Government in the pursuit of experiment, that the Government in that case should be prohibited from issuing a patent to anybody?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Except perhaps to protect the Government and the people, who, after all, bear the burden. I will tell you what Secretary Wilson does—that splendid old Scotchman. The rule that he made in his department is that when one of the employees of the Agricultural Department discovers anything, he shall turn it over to his department for the Government and the people, and it is done. Here is a list of some of the things, says the Department of Commerce and Labor in this report, that have been patented in his department:

Apparatus for determining water in butter.
Serum for prevention and treatment of hog cholera.
Method of extracting potash from feldspathic rock.
Naturalist's camera.
Sampling machine.
Apparatus for determining the moisture in grain.
Hand blotter.
Seed-packet filler.
Nitroculture germs.
Loose-leaf files.
Labels for inspected meats.
Wireless telegraph, about which there are some complications.

Now, nearly all of these have been turned over to his department under this rule, based upon the act of 1883. I presume he thinks that when they discover in the line of duty—taking up the government time, opportunity, and money—that the fruits of their labor belong to the public, and he requires them to turn the whole thing over for the benefit of the public. I read from this report:

on March 3, 1883, the Congress enacted into law a provision that if an employee of the Government would dedicate the free use of his invention to the Government—the people of the United States—a patent would be issued to him without the payment of fees. As this provision cuts off all hope of remuneration from the patent, both from its use by the Government and the public, the inventors in the government service have not generally resorted to it. This law is, in form, merely permissive, but the Secretary of Agriculture has attempted to make it compulsory in his department by his general order of May 8, 1905, in which he requires employees making useful discoveries or inventions connected with the work of the department, through the expenditure of government time and government money, to cause the patent to be applied for through the law officer of the department under the terms of this act.

Now, you see what Mr. Wilson has done, and you will ob-Now, you see what Mr. Wilson has done, and you will observe that a number of these patents are useful.

Now, Congress was, in 1898, driven to put up a powder factory at Indianhead. We made an appropriation ($250,000) here a few days ago to enlarge that plant, and General Crozier (for the War Department) is calling for $175,000 to enlarge the one authorized in 1906 at Sandy Hook. The War Department, under the license given by the navy officers, could not use these patents at Sandy Hook. The letter of Rear-Admiral Mason, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, states that the wording of the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, states that the wording of the license precludes the use of the patent for the War Department. It is in reply to Senator PERKINS.

Rear-Admiral Mason says:

From this wording the patent can not be used by any other department of the Government than the Navy Department.

United States Senate, Committee on Naval Affairs, Washington, D. C., March 21, 1906.

Rear-Admiral N. E. Mason, U. S. Navy, Chief Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department.

Chief Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department.

Dear Admiral: Will you kindly inform me what consideration, if any, our Government paid for the licenses to manufacture smokeless powder for the Navy Department under patents 673377, 652455, and 652505?

May I also ask if, in your opinion, our Government has the right to use the formulæ contained in these patents in manufacturing smokeless powder under the license named for any branch of the Government other than the Navy Department?

Thanking you in advance for your reply by the bearer, I remain, Very truly, yours,

Geo. C. Perkins.

GEO. C. PERKINS, United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
BURBAU OF ORDNANCE,
Washington, D. C., March 21, 1906.

SIR: Replying to yours of March 21, 1906, relative to letters patent
Nos. 673377, 652455, and 652505, covering processes for the manufacture of smokeless powder:

1. The bureau has to inform you that the licenses to manufacture smokeless powder under the three licenses mentioned in your letter were made to the Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department, for a nominal consideration of $1 each.

2. These licenses are to the Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department, only, and state they can be used for the purposes of the United States Naval Powder Works at Indianhead, Md., or at any other works that may hereafter be built by the Navy Department of the United States.

3. From this wording, it is the opinion of the bureau that the patents could not be used by any other department of the Government than the Navy Department.

Respectfully,

N. E. Mason.

Hon. George C. Perkins, U. S. S.
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Now, in 1906 the appropriation was made for the War Department powder plant. That department seems to have got some sort of a process by which it now makes 300,000 pounds of smokeless powder. They ask now for $175,000 to enlarge the plant to make it a war-capacity plant. The Navy Department asks for the navy plant $250,000, to raise that up to a war-capacity plant—all to relieve from high prices and meet emergencies. There was a board of army officers, whose report I find here in this House document of 1906 composed of Majorfind here in this House document of 1906, composed of Major-General Story, Brigadier-General Crozier, Brigadier-General Mackenzie, and others which, in concluding its recommendation about preparations for war, say:

The present capacity of the plant would not be sufficient in time of war.

That was in 1906 or 1907, and General Crozier stated the same thing in substance to the Senate committee. He also came last year and asked the Appropriations Committee for $175,000 to bring the war plant up to a war basis. He comes this year and asks the committee to give him $175,000 to bring it up to a war standard. He states that the recommendations of the war board are that we must have a large amount of "reserve powder," a reserve for war and not for peace, and that it will take some six or seven years to get that amount of war powder, and possibly longer. Hence he asks for the capacity of the powder plants to be enlarged. Gentlemen, you have either got to drive the Government of the United States into making all of its powder at its government powder plants or you have got to do something with this smokeless-powder patent, because the other powder manufacturers say that they can not bid because they have no patent, it being owned by the powder trust.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, what is the powder trust? I propose to say what I have to say, not simply because I do not agree with the manner in which the politics of that concern are run. Not a bit; I have no malice in the matter whatever. am working for the benefit of my country, and when I think I can not in good faith do that I will not only close my mouth, but I shall beat a retreat. What does General Crozier say? He says that-

There is no competition between these four companies. They all supply powder at the same price. There has been no competition between them for a couple of years at least.

That was in 1906 or 1907.

That is, you advertise for bids and all the bids are alike?

Senator Allison asked General Crozier that question and he replied "Yes." Then Senator Allison says, "At the same price?" And General Crozier answered "Yes." Further along General Crozier says that the navy has a powder manufactory at Indianhead, down the Potomac River about 22 miles, but that the army

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have built the army factory. We have just got it to work. It was ordered built in 1906—a little slow. It takes "seven months after powder is made before you can use it," says General Crozier. Here is the war board and here is General Crozier and his aids calling for an increase in the actual output of powder, and they are calling for an increased capacity at our plants, and yet they are required to make the powder by those patents in the Navy Department, and not in the War Department, and no outsider can bid. Perhaps the Du Pont powder concern permits them to use their patent at the war plant because they get the bids; they furnish our powder, save what we make. It is very difficult to find out how much powder we use. I believe I will ask the gentleman from Iowa who is in charge of this bill how much powder the

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I can tell the gentleman when I get the hearings how much we appropriate for. I can not give the gentleman what is used in the Artillery Corps, which is in another bill. I think there are about 3,500,000 pounds of powder used, but I may be entirely mistaken on that.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have industriously sought to find out.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will give the gentleman that information when we reach that point of the bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Here is what General Crozier

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to occupy the time allotted to me in discussing a matter which I regard as of very much importance to the Nation, and a matter that I do not believe is receiving deserved attention at the hands of this House. My connection with irrigation has brought to my attention the subject which I propose to discuss this afternoon, and I have been working incessantly upon the same since the passage of the national irrigation law in 1902. I realize we will probably not be able to pass a bill this Congress that will enact the desired regulation into a law. I had counted that public opinion and the innate rightness of the proposition had convinced the Members of the House so that if the matter I am going to speak of was brought before them we would have no difficulty in presenting it to the House nor in obtaining the votes necessary to secure its passage, but I find that the Members have so many things they are interested in personally, and that there are so many other matters which the House must take care of at once that they do not have time to give attention to matters which are not pressing for immediate consideration.

This, without doubt, is the reason the matter has not impressed itself upon the minds of the Members of the House as The point I have been trying to make is to save the funds that were so generously granted by Congress for the purpose of making homes from our desert lands in the West, and to retain the rough portion of the timber lands of the Nation for perpetual use in the growth of forests. these two very important objects in view, important because they lie right at and form a part of the foundation of our future welfare and greatness as a nation, and because the effects will reach so far into the future, I introduced a bill soon after the passage of the national irrigation law, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation, and the reference changed the next morning to another committee, where it yet sleeps the sleep of the just. Again I introduced the bill at the opening of the Sixtieth Congress, when it was again referred to the Committee on Irrigation, considered and reported by this committee to the House, and it is now on the calendar. I am not saying that under the circumstances it should be considered.

But, owing to the fact that many of the Members have not given the subject sufficient consideration to regard it as important, and others fear it can not receive proper consideration with so many other matters which must be looked after, leaves little hope that it can reasonably receive attention at this session. This does not, however, detract from the importance of the subject, but rather furnishes an additional reason that the subject should be speedily and thoroughly agitated. Matters of minor importance sometimes demand immediate attention, while matters of vastly greater importance, the effects of which will be felt only in the future, are often temporarily set aside.

Some Members of the House who know well in regard to the matter I desire to have considered have constituents who are interested in seeing that a law such as I have been proposing be not adopted. These constituents are personally interested, and I am not blaming them for their interest, nor do I blame the Members for catering to some extent to the wishes of such constituents. I may add that in almost every section the public conscience to an extent is made up and governed by the interests of that particular section. In fact, I have heard it stated there is in the West such a thing as what we may call "public-land conscience." I have lived in the West for a great many I have lived in the West for a great many years and I am inclined to think that such a conscience is prevalent there. I am also convinced that those persons who have taken or desire to take advantage of the laws in regard to timber on the public domain in the West are not so different from the rest of us as one might imagine, and I cite you to my friend, the Senator from South Carolina, and to myself, for I am perfectly free to say that if I were in the timber section of the West and could acquire a quarter section of that timber land for $400, which could be sold for $4,000 to $6,000, I would secure it.

So I insist I am not laying any particular blame in the matter to anyone. There is no question but what if I could have presented this bill to the House and had the support of those who have no interest except the good of all for the future, it would have received favorable consideration and have become a law by a large majority. Then the question arises, if I have been working on this matter for four or five years, why should not I have publicly called the attention of the House to it before? I answer this by saying I have felt sure that public opinion in the United States upon the question was such that everybody was convinced of the advisability of this legislation. Almost every great gathering of people in the United States in different conventions for the past four or five years, and especially the great manufacturers' association that has met in Washington once or twice recently, have emphatically indorsed the proposition, as have nearly all the other great organizations in their conventions, and I am surprised, especially when considering what my friend from New York [Mr. Perkins] has said this afternoon in favor of this proposition, that the impression is not strong enough in the House to bring it before the House, as well as to carry it through. The most fatal mistake that has been made by nations in ages past has been the improper distribution of land. Nations have tottered and fallen because of this improper distribution of their lands. I am not sure but that the land policy, which has been in vogue so long that we scarcely question it, is fundamentally wrong.

That is property in land or property in the soil. This may be fundamentally wrong. The sustenance of all must come from this soil, and I am very doubtful whether there should be laws which will permit a monopoly of that which God has given us and made necessary to the sustenance of every human being. I believe England's greatest weakness to-day is her land distri-The fall of Rome was largely due to the same cause. But when nations fall, whatever may be the cause, people can still utilize the soil. This is not true, however, when the forests are destroyed. Then come desolation and depopulation. Smiling plenty becomes a desert. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Perkins], while speaking this afternoon, referred to forest destruction in different parts of the world and stated that for this reason these countries had actually become uninhabit-There is no question but that when forests are destroyed the soil is washed from the hillsides and the country becomes uninhabitable. I cite you to Palestine and Manchuria. churia lies near one of the most densely populated parts of the world; and yet it has become practically uninhabited, because they have destroyed their forests. We are showing a great deal of ability in this Nation of ours to improve the great opportunities that we enjoy. I do not think that any people on earth at any time in the past has had such an opportunity to build a great nation, and we are showing our ability to utilize these opportunities by early realizing our necessity for frugality in their use-as we have.

I wish now to advert for a few moments to the Forest Service of our country. There is a complaint in the western section of this country to-day that the Forest Service is infringing on the rights of the people. This is not true. Our Forest Service is one of those beneficent moves which show our ability to look forward before we have largely destroyed our opportunity for effectual work in caring for our forests as have other nations in their treatment of forest problems.

For instance, our sister Republic, France, noted for the frugality and foresight of her citizens, did neglect this important matter so long that now she is endeavoring to repair the waste by the use of $40,000,000 directly from her treasury to stop the soil waste occasioned by just such a cutting of the forest as we have had under our timber and stone law, lieu-land scrip, and so forth.

They are even using cement on their hillsides in places to prevent further erosion of the soil.

Yet some of our wise legislators say that reckless cutting of the timber, with careless strewing of the ground with limbs and refuse, which causes fires to destroy all young trees and other forest cover, does not accelerate soil washing from the

I purpose trying to show you that the Forest Service is treating the people of the West with absolute fairness. I believe I will first cite you to the report of the Chief Forester to show that this is true.

This report shows that citizens, schools, and churches in the neighborhood of a forest reserve are permitted to have whatever timber they may need for their own use, and in 1908 30,714 private permits were granted for 131,582,000 feet of boards, valued at $168,720. The increase in these privileges, as the people come to understand them, is shown by comparison with the year 1907, when only 63,000,000 feet of lumber, valued at $75, 000, was given away to people within the neighborhood of the

The same classes of people—that is, settlers living on or adjacent to the reserves, prospectors, campers, and travelers—are allowed free grazing for 10 head of milch cows or the same number of horses or other work animals, and those who purchase timber are given the same privilege for the horses needed in their work. In Arizona and New Mexico 30 goats may be grazed free upon the public domain by any family.

The total receipts from timber sales each year have been, as follows: 1905, $60,136.62; 1906, $245,013.49; 1907, $668,813.12; 1908, $849,027.24.

In making timber sales the Forest Service seeks small in preference to large sales, and aims to safeguard a supply for future needs rather than to swell the immediate receipts. it desired, the present receipts from timber sales could be quickly doubled. During the year it was found necessary in the interest of a continued supply to restrict the sales on many forests. Nevertheless, use of the national forests as a source of timber supply was more general than ever before.

In classifying sales as large or small a sale means, of course, the total amount of timber disposed of under a single contract, not the amount covered by each cash payment made under the terms of a contract.

The minimum price set has often been higher than the prevailing local price of stumpage. In fixing this minimum price the Forest Service has had in view the following principles:

(1) The Government must not take advantage of local needs to exact a monopoly price.

(2) The Government must act as a trustee in the interest of the public to prevent undue depletion of a necessity of life which can not be replenished without long delay.

(3) A reasonable price for national forest stumpage must be fixed primarily in the light of general conditions, but with due allowance for local factors. The national forests exist not for the sake of revenue to the Government, but for the sake of the welfare of the public. The timber-sale business is managed to give stability to industry and promote the upbuilding of the country.

Care is also taken to protect the public from monopoly prices which purchasers of national forest timber in large quantities might be in position to charge. The fullest possible competition is secured through the advertisement of sales, but the Forest Service reserves and liberally exercises the right to refuse sales to would-be purchasers when the interest of the consumer of lumber will be better served by such action. Sales of more than $500 worth of lumber may be awarded to two or more bidders if this will tend to prevent monopoly, and several were so divided during the past year.

To avoid overcutting, the approximate annual yield of each forest has been computed. Sales are regulated in the light of this yearly increment and prospective local needs. Where the stand is limited and the local demand for domestic and noncommercial purposes is great, no sales are made; the timber is reserved for free use. Where the supply of timber is more plentiful, but needed for the support of local industries or the development of near-by communities, an amount not to exceed the annual yield of the forest may be sold. On forests where the annual yield allows a sufficient surplus over the amount needed locally, sales are made to supply the general market, in order that the removal of mature, defective, and dying or dead trees may open room for a new and more vigorous growth.

In the administration of our forests, as compared with the forests of the world, we are expending at present 11 cents an acre for the protection and care of our forests. ceiving from our forests about 1 cent an acre per annum. I wish to compare these receipts and expenditures with those of our sister Republic, Switzerland, a country which is giving the best care, I believe, of any nation in the world to its forests. Switzerland is spending about $4 an acre for the care of her forests each year, and is selling about $9 worth of products therefrom. That is $5 per acre of clear gain annually, and these forests are growing upon rough mountain land, such as this bill would retain to our Government. If we did as well with our forests we could thus clear enough to pay the expenses of this great Government of ours without even selling a postage stamp collecting any tariff. But to secure this $9 Swiss expend annually $4 per acre where we are laying out 11 cents per acre annually. Their property is improved. not expect to get from wild lands the profit which a highly improved forest will give. But we will work along and will some time come to this point ourselves, without doubt.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, I find the gentleman very much in favor of the present foresty policy of the Government. I would like to inquire if the gentleman would also be in favor of extending the Forestry Service throughout the country?

Mr. REEDER. Yes, sir; and I propose discussing the subject my friend, Mr. HARDWICK, is interested in, the White Mountain and Appalachian forest reserves, later.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will be very glad to have the gentleman

Mr. REEDER, Mr. Chairman, I am taking this opportunity to call the attention of the House to a bill for securing a fair value for timber sold from the public domain, and, as I have said before, I am not especially faulting anyone because of the probability that the matter will not come before Congress for consideration at this term. I introduced a bill of this kind six years ago, and I have been doing my best to get it reported from a committee since. Probably the difficulty is that not enough has been done toward creating a public sentiment here in the House in favor of such legislation. I have now succeeded, however, in getting it reported from the Committee on Irrigation, and while I do not now hope to see it come before the House for consideration this session, because of the impossibility of considering bills now that will require time for extended discussion and also get through routine business that must be given attention before March 4, yet I hope to see such a bill become a law while it will save of the government domain a few million acres of rough lands for future forest growth. The object of the bill is to repeal the timber and stone act, and yet do nothing that will encroach on the rights of another important committee of this House, the Committee on Public Lands; so we provide that we may sell the timber in the States covered by the law of 1902 only where it is within the public domain and is worth more than $2.50 an acre, and at an appraised value, hoping thus to get something near its value, and we base our rights to consider it on the fact that the money received from this sale of timber goes into the irrigation fund by a law already on our statute books.

The fact is, if such a bill had become a law when the national irrigation law passed in 1902 the national irrigation fund would be vastly increased, and such increase would not have cost the Government a cent. It would simply have been a saving from the sale of timber. In addition to this, a most important thing would have occurred, and that is, that the rough lands, and all the lands in fact, would remain in the hands of the Government. And between the time that that bill was first introducd, six years ago, and now, we would have about seven or eight million acres of land yet in the possession of the United States which is now in the hands of speculators. They did not want the land. They did not buy the timber to get the land. They bought it to get the lumber. They have getten the timber and probably have largely disposed of it. If we could have that six or seven millions of acres, we would have given to homesteaders all that is suitable for cultivation and retained that which is too rough to cultivate to grow timber on continuously, and thus augment future timber supplies, hold back floods, preserve water power, and conserve water for irrigation at no cost, but at an actual profit to the Government. And I desire to say to those people who are interested in the Appalachian and White Mountain forest reserves, you can readily see what position we will be placed in in the future if for lack of public ownership, which we can now retain at a profit, the destruction in the western country occurs as the private ownership of the Appalachian and White Mountain forests is causing that section now in damaging your water powers and the navigation of your rivers. And it will then, as now, be exceedingly difficult to get money from the Public Treasury to buy that land which we ought now to retain.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. REEDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEENERSON. Under your bill you provide for the disposal of the timber on the public lands in the State of Minnesota, as well as in the irrigation States, do you not?

Mr. REEDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEENERSON. Then, the bill proceeds to turn the proceeds of the timber on the public lands of Minnesota into the irrigation fund, whereas the State is not included in the irriga-

Mr. REEDER. I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota that this provision was simply an oversight. It was not the intention to have it apply to the State of Minnesota or any other, except the States included in the law of 1902, but we it does, and if the bill comes up for consideration, we would have accepted an amendment suggested ourselves to cover that point.

If this bill could have been passed six years ago, it would have saved $100,000,000 to this irrigation fund by this time. The irrigation fund is now about $42,000,000. It is said that the man who succeeds in making two blades of grass grow where one grew before is a public benefactor.

I wish to say that with this $42,000,000 the Reclamation Service are making from seven to ten homes for families every day-that is, every time the sun goes down we have from seven to ten homes, each of which will support a family, where there was practically not a blade of grass growing before, and homes under the very best conditions possible for developing good citizenship. At the time we were trying to have this fund created some Eastern and Middle State Members talked about the worthlessness of this land, and again the same suggestions were made when we were talking of bringing in Arizona and New Mexico as one State; some spoke of the land in Arizona and New Mexico as absolutely worthless. The facts are that out in that western country, say in the Yakima country in Washington, or in the Grand Junction country in Colorado, or in the country about Phoenix, Ariz., land sells for as high as $2,000 an acre, and will pay a profit on account of what it will produce from the soil. There is probably no land in Illinois or in Iowa or in New York that will produce a reasonable profit on over $200 an acre from crops raised thereon, except some garden patches near cities. So that in actual fact the production of crops on western land is often several times more valuable than the most fertile eastern land, and yet some eastern people talk about it being perfectly worthless.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt

Mr. REEDER. Certainly.

Mr. LEVER. $42,000,000? As I understand, the irrigation fund is

Mr. REEDER. Yes, sir. Mr. LEVER. Under the operation of your bill you would increase it up to $100,000,000?

Mr. REEDER. I was speaking of what we might have had in the fund if we had repealed the timber and stone act in 1902 on the passage of the national irrigation law and sold the timber at a fair valuation. Besides, we would have in the possession of the Government some twelve to twenty million acres of land for home and for future timber growth.

Mr. LEVER. But what I desire to ask you is to what extent you expect to increase this fund by the operation of your bill?

Mr. REEDER. We will increase it just as much as possible, but the increase will not be very large. The reason is this: The hearings on this bill before the Committee on Irrigation last year brought out the fact that land which in some cases contains over 50,000 feet, board measure, to an acre-and that same timber is now selling at $4.50 a thousand in some cases, or for something over $200 an acre-was being sold under the timber and stone law at $2.50 per acre. And it was also developed at those hearings that the law did not so provide, but it was merely a ruling of the department. The law does provide that $2.50 shall be the minimum price, and the department was holding that $2.50 was the maximum price until last year, was nothing that $2.50 was an when these hearings developed what the law really is, and now it will sell the timber at the appraised value or for now it will sell the timber at the appraised pretty near the price under the law as it is that it would bring if this bill became a law; and if the Land Department had so construed the law for the past six or eight years much the same saving would have been had as under this bill had it become a law. The only great advantage in passing this bill now would be the retention of the land for settlers or for future forest growth.

Mr. LEVER. I had in mind this idea: We are now spending $42,000,000 a year in irrigation, which goes to that work of irrigation. Now, there are some 80,000,000 acres of land in this country susceptible of drainage, which will give 20,000,000 homes, and I was in hopes that your plan was to increase this fund so that it could be used in those States needing drainage, as well as in the States where it is to be applied for irrigation. I would be just as interested in making homes out of swamp lands as out of desert lands. Homes owned by the families who occupy them and get their sustenance therefrom are the greatest bulwark a nation can have.

If we can pass a law that will not take a cent from the Treasury, except such amounts as present laws provide may go into the pockets of speculators, and from such savings make homes for 20 families a day-500 such homes each monthwhere families are extraordinarily sure of a sustenance for their toil, and where few are likely to become abnormally rich, we have built one tower of great strength to our Nation.

Few realize that with, say, 60,000,000 acres of desert that can be reclaimed, and 60,000,000 more acres of swamps that can be drained, we can continue to make these 20 homes each day for at least two hundred and fifty years and for at least 40,000,000 citizens. I regard this as just a little more important than a few battle ships or a slight change in tariff schedules.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. REEDER. I yield to the gentleman from Chicago.

Mr. MANN. I have not heard all the gentleman has said, but if he reaches the point in the bill where he discusses the authority to sell in large quantities, half at the time and half in three years, I would like at that point to ask him a few

Mr. REEDER. I will come to that very soon. My friend, the genial Member from Illinois, whom I regard and have often said was a public benefactor in the number of bad bills he prevents passing this House, is among the Members who think the provisions of this bill would not produce the very best results possible in the way of selling the timber for what it is worth, or for as much as the present law as it is now construed would sell it, and hence much of my difficulty in getting a consideration of the bill. I think they are mistaken, and as this is the very question my friend desires to talk about, I believe I will discuss it right now. As I said, I think they are mistaken, and for this reason: If a man wants to buy 160 acres of land, nine times out of ten he is purchasing it for speculation. He does not want the land or the timber, and he could not use either, probably. Under the present regulations the department has the value of the timber on the land appraised. The individual will not purchase it because this makes the price too near its value.

Mr. PARSONS. When you say "purchase," are you alluding to the purchase from the Government?

Mr. REEDER. Yes, sir. The individual will not purchase this land from the Government because there is no speculation in such purchase, and it leaves it so that there is no competition with the lumber companies that desire to buy the timber on the land, and the lumber companies can not afford to buy it in such small quantities because they can not handle it thus. Thus there is not an opportunity to sell the timber for as good a price as there would be under the provisions of this bill, in my judgment.

I have said, however, that it will make no great difference in the price received for this timber, but the difference, if any, under the new ruling as to such sales would be in favor of sales under the bill I have presented and for above reasons. Larger amounts would be sold, and mill owners could thus secure enough timber to warrant them putting in a mill to cut it. The bill also provides that small buyers shall have preference in such sales.

By selling in the larger amounts, these lumber companies could afford to buy and probably would buy for nearer what If they buy timber under the provisions of the timber is worth. the bill, they leave the land in the hands of the Government, and with proper care trees will continue to grow on the land, and it seems to me clearly a good deal better disposition to make of the land than to put it in the hands of the people who do not care anything about it. The difference is about this: Under the present law the Government loses the land.

The timber is cut without restriction, the brush is scattered about, and soon fires destroy the brush together with all the new forest growth, and the fires often spread over large sections of live timber. Then comes soil erosion, lower lands are destroyed with the wash, water power lessened in value, and navigation at least much depreciated-all of which would be exactly the opposite under the bill I would press for consideration. So it seems to me it is a much better arrangement than the present timber and stone law. I have admitted it does not make any very great difference in the price the timber will bring, but I believe the difference in favor of this bill is well worth our consideration. Does the gentleman wish to ask any questions?

Mr. MANN. I should like to ask this question: What part of the bill is it that gives preference to these small buyers? Mr. REEDER. It is in the bill. I have not the bill before me, but it is there.

Mr. MANN. I have the bill right before me, and I am not able to find anything that gives any preference to the man who wants to buy a hundred acres over the man who wants to buy

Mr. REEDER. To buy the timber you mean?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. REEDER. I do not know how quickly I can find the provision, but it is in the bill.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman says it is in the bill, it means that the gentleman wants it there; and if it is not there, it is very easy to put it there.

Mr. REEDER. It is in the bill now.

Mr. MANN. Now, as I understand the bill, and I have read it very carefully-I am only asking the gentleman a questionit authorizes any person to make application to the Interior Department to have certain pieces of timber land sold under rules and regulations, in large or small quantities?

Mr. REEDER. That is right as to the timber on the land. But sales are to be at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior and under rules and regulations laid down by him.

Mr. MANN. Then it is advertised for sale for eight weeks only, giving the person or company making the application a decided priority. Now, does the gentleman think that more or less timber would be sold to large companies under a bill such as he proposes, authorizing large areas of timber lands to be sold to one person, or under the existing law authorizing only 160 acres to be sold to one person?

Mr. REEDER. In the first place, there is a distinction here The laws as they are authorize the sale of the land. This bill does not authorize the sale of the land at all; so the gentleman is entirely mistaken, because there is no desire to sell any of Mr. MANN. I am talking about the timber.

Mr. REEDER. You said land. Mr. MANN. Timber land.

Mr. REEDER. You said land.
Mr. MANN. If I said land, I will change it. I mean timber. The gentleman's argument in his exhaustive report, which I have read with pleasure and care, is wholly based upon the proposition of saving the timber to the country.

Mr. REEDER. The gentleman is mistaken again. The purpose is to sell the timber as soon as needed and use the proceeds in building homes.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman more likely to save the timber in small quantities rather than in large quantities, and if his bill passes, would not all the timber be in the hands of large companies in a few years?

Mr. REEDER. The gentleman is mistaken again. The purpose of the report and the bill is not to save the timber. The purpose is to sell the timber for something near its value; if men want to cut the timber and dispose of it, we are willing they should do so, but we desire to retain the land for continued growth of timber and get the money out of the tim-ber for the irrigation fund. Instead of getting $2.50 an acre, the price that we were getting when this bill was reported, we desire to get the value out of the timber. We do not wish or expect to save the timber; we want to save the land for continued growth of timber and for homes for the people where it is fit for cultivation.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. REEDER. Certainly.

Mr. KEIFER. What kind or species or variety of timber grows upon this land?

Mr. REEDER. Largely pine. Mr. KEIFER. Is the land good for cultivation after the timber is removed?

Mr. MANN. Oh, this applies to all public land in the United States; all varieties of timber, of course, grow upon it.

KEIFER. But the gentleman from Kansas is now speaking of a particular region, I think.

Mr. MANN. He can not say that one kind of timber grows upon all the land covered by the arid States.

Mr. REEDER. Well, largely pine. Let me say further—Mr. KEIFER. I would like to have the gentleman state if the soil is good for anything for cultivation after the timber has been taken off.

Mr. REEDER. I have spoken about that; but I will say again that some of the soil is much better than the soil in the State of Ohio, and in some sections sells for $2,000 per acre because of its capability in the production of crops.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Two thousand dollars an acre!

Mr. REEDER. Yes, sir; I am referring to the Yakima country in Washington, and other sections of the Great American

Mr. KEIFER. Washington; the gentleman does not mean timber land?

Mr. MANN. No; he means land with large apple orchards on it, producing great quantities of fruit.

Mr. REEDER. I admit it will not sell for this price growing sagebrush.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Does the gentleman mean to say that the land without anything on it is worth $2,000 an acre?

Mr. REEDER. Without anything but growing crops some of this land sells for $2,000 an acre; say when it is planted to orchards, or hops, or other crops.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. And there must be improvements on it, too.

Mr. REEDER. No improvements except growing crops.
Mr. KEIFER. Is any of it "pine land," as the quality is generally designated?

Mr. REEDER. Some of the valleys are covered with heavy timber, say, 50,000 feet board measure and over per acre, and when the timber is removed it will make fine farming land. Does not the gentleman from Washington say so [referring to Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. REEDER. I wish to go a little further with this statement. I want to bring this matter up because I believe for lack of information, largely on account of the great amount of important business the Members who run this Congress have on their hands, we are failing to do our duty in retaining these lands for the benefit of future generations in the growth of timber thereon. I believe we are making a mistake. If we could pass this bill, we would save six or seven million acres of rough land and twelve or fourteen million acres of land which would make homes for people because it would be valuable for cultivation. If we could have passed this law six years ago, at the time we passed the national irrigation law, we would have saved at least $100,000,000 to the irrigation fund, and where we are now making 6 to 10 homes for families each day we would be making 20 homes each day where there was no home before. By the way, this is one very good way for us to find a market for our manufactures. No foreign market will ever equal a home market, if the consumers own their own homes and make a good living from the soil.

I wish to say to the people who favor drainage that there is as much land in the United States proper to be drained as to be irrigated, and probably more. We are making a mistake if we do not proceed to drain these lands. I have been in favor of letting the gentlemen who are in favor of draining share onequarter of the fund that would be saved, and I do not understand how anybody could be against the proposition if we can save the money to use on the draining of the land and the irrigation of the land and not go into the Treasury for it. A home for a family on good land looks good to me, whether of desert or swamp land. One real objection to government drainage is that most of the swamp land is in private ownership, and those who would utilize it must pay a bonus to some speculator, but in a very few years any young couple who would own a home in this Nation must first contribute a considerable sum to some speculator, owing to a custom so old we do not dare to question it, which is probably fundamentally wrong-that is, property in the soil.

Mr LEVER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEVER. Would the gentleman be in favor of dividing the present irrigation fund between drainage and irrigation?

Mr. REEDER. I would not.

I would be in favor of dividing what we could save by means of the new method of disposing of the timber on the public domain with the drainage fund, as a home made on swamp land is as much of a benefit to our Nation as a home made for a family on desert land.

Mr. LEVER. Why not divide the present fund?

Mr. REEDER. We have it already in use and projects now commenced that will cost, when completed, $89,000,000, and it would be a great mistake now to stop this improvement.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REEDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman refers to saving the fund?

Mr. REEDER. Saving the money.

Mr. MANN. Well, I suppose the gentleman means by that that we would get a higher price for the timber that is sold? Mr. REEDER. That is right. Mr. MANN. Is it not the fact that this timber is to-day being sold at its full market value when sold at all?

Mr. REEDER. I have said once or twice that I do not think it would make as much difference now as it would at any time before this bill was reported, owing to a change in the application of the law as it is, but there is a great advantage in this bill in that it saves this land for the Nation instead of giving it away to people who do not want it, which would be followed by the West coming to Congress and asking an appropriation to buy it in the future to grow forests. The plan adopted in this bill would without doubt sell the timber for a higher price than the present law, but not to any great extent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Chairman, I will ask gentlemen not to interrupt me further, as I have but five minutes to close. The public do not need any further discussion of this subject. They are generally convinced that the thing to do is to repeal the timber and stone law. That has been indicated, as I have said, by the great gatherings of different associations in their conventions for the past few years. Every great gathering of people, without an exception, which has expressed an opinion on the subject of our timber and stone law for the past five years have passed strong resolutions urging or demanding its repeal. Why do we not heed these demands? The purpose of this bill is to repeal the timber and stone law, and not infringe on the rights of another committee of this House.

The Appalachian and White Mountains people are urging us to appropriate $10,000,000 to purchase about a million acres of land on these mountains. They have come to the place where theories do not convince. They know that the soil on their hillsides is being washed away, and that they are losing their water powers, and that navigation is becoming impossible where the same was of much value when their stream flow was more regular and sediment did not clog the channels of their rivers. Would we not do well to heed the warning of this condition? And now, when we can in a few hours pass legislation that will save three to five times as much rough land as they will now have to pay at least $7,000,000 to $10,000,000 to secure, especially when by the same enactment we can retain a like amount or more that can be utilized for homes for our citizens.

There is no more important question before this House or before this Nation than to now save the rough land yet in the public domain, and so care for it that it will continue to grow timber perpetually. This will not be done in private ownership. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, while I would like to discuss the bill introduced and referred to by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Reeder], that is not my intention at the present time. I have introduced into the House two or three bills in regard to interstate and foreign commerce in habit-forming and poisonous drugs. Many Members of the House have asked me in reference to one or two of these bills recently, owing to correspondence from their constituents, and the bill that is the special object of reference is House bill 21982. I rise now simply for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to insert into the RECORD a criticism of that bill by Doctor Johnson, of this city, which criticism I sent to Doctor Wiley, in order that he might make a more careful answer so far as the chemical propositions were concerned, and I wish to insert his answer in the RECORD in connection with the criticism of Doctor Johnson.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The papers referred to are as follows:

Office of H. L. E. Johnson, M. D., Washington, D. C., December 14, 1908.

Hon. J. R. Mann, Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce

Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I respectfully request that your honorable committee report adversely on H. R. bill 21982, Sixtieth Congress, first session, entitled:
"A bill relating to the transportation of habit-forming and poisonous drugs in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes."
In support of my request, I submit the following reasons and explanations:
Section 1. Section 1. provides that the commerce of the commer planations:

Section 1. Section 1 provides that it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation to send, carry, ship, or bring into any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia by freight, express, mail, or otherwise from any other State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or from any foreign country directly to a consumer, or to sell, or furnish, or give away, or have in his or her possession certain drugs or any derivative or preparation or compound of the same, except on the original written prescription or order of a legally authorized practitioner of medicine * * * which prescription shall be dated and shall contain the name of the person for whom prescribed. Such written prescription or order shall be kept on file for not less than three years by the person or corporation compounding the same. Shall not be again compounded or dispensed except upon the written order of the original prescriber for each and every subsequent compounding or dispensing. It also provides for inspection of these prescriptions at all times by any federal or state official designated by the Secretary of combination, which may be ordered in a physician's prescription.

Section I prevents a regular registered, civil, or millitary physician from having in his possession certain drugs necessary and essential to suffering by requiring him to write a prescription and have it compounded in each case before such medicines shall be administered to the patient. He can not have in his possession morphine tables for the compounded in each case before such medicines shall be administered to the patient. He can not have in his possession morphine tables for the compounded in each case before such medicines shall be administered to the patient. He can not have in his possession morphine and write incuments of the control of the control court.

Section 2 is inconsistent with and annuls the physician's written prescription and the quantity clause of section 1 for certain identical drugs, to wit: In section 1 chloral hydrate, morphine, opium, scopolamine, their derivatives and preparations, can be transported, sold, etc., and held in possession only on physician's written prescription, with limitation on the quantity ordered. In section 2 the same drugs—chloral hydrate, morphine, opium, scopolamine, their derivatives and preparations—can be transported, sold, etc., and held in possession in unlimited quantity by complying with the poison-label clause, independently of the physician's written prescription and quantity-limit requirement of section 1.

Section 1 does not require the above-named drugs, their derivatives and compounds in prescriptions to be labeled "poison;" section 2 is mandatory as to the poison label and makes no exception or exemption to these drugs when compounded in a physician's prescription. The penalty clause for violations applies equally to both sections, notwithstanding their positive inconsistency. An invalid leaving this District for a health resort (say, at the ocean), taking with him to use en route a prescription compounded in conformity with section 1, but containing any drug restricted by section 2, or an invalid entering this Distirct with the same compounded prescription, though it was compounded in a State having no such statute requirement, would violate this law and, if detected by an inspector of the Department of Agriculture, both would be subject to arrest, trial, fine or imprisonment, or both, if the poison label was not affixed to the box, bottle, or other container. The following substances, compounds, preparations, or their derivatives are enumerated in section 2 and can not be transported, received for shipment, sold, or given away unless they conform with the poison-label clause, viz:

ment, sold, or given away unless they conform with the poison-label clause, viz:

The caustic hydroxides of ammonium, potassium, and sodium; the concentrated mineral acids; the essential oils of bitter almonds, pennyroyal, rue, and savin; wood alcohol and yellow phosphorus or any preparation or compound containing the same; the salts and derivatives of antimony, arsenic, barium, chromium, copper, gold, lead, mercury (excepting calomel), silver, and zinc, or any preparation or compound containing the same; the following-named substances and their derivatives or any compound or preparation containing the same, namely, acetanilide, acetphenetidine, aconite, antipyrine, belladonna, cannabis indica, cantharides, carbolic acid, chloral hydrate, chloroform, coculus indicus, codeine, colchicum, cotton root, creosote, croton oil, damiana, diacetyl morphine, digitalis, ergot, formaldehyde, hydrocyanic acid, hyoscine, hyoscyamus, ignatia, laudanum, lobelia, morphine, nux vomica, opium, oxalic acid, paragoric, Paris green, phenacetine, physostigma, phytolacca, pyramadon, scopola, stramonium, stropanthus, strychnine, sulphonal, tansy, trional, veronal, veratrun viride, or any other virulent poison.

The bringing into or carrying from the District of Columbia or any other Territory or State simple substances which are in common use and necessary in the arts, trades, or households, and many regular pharmaceutical preparations and physicians' prescriptions, put up in convenient form by reputable drug houses for the convenience of the physician and the public, if not labeled poison with skull, crossbones, etc., would be in violation of section 2 of this act and subject the person to a fine or imprisonment or both.

The following simple things in everyday use are either compounds, preparations, or derivatives of substances restricted in this bill by section 2 and must, under penalty of fine and imprisonment, be labeled poison with skull and crossbones, viz:

Made from caustic hydravides of ammoniam.—Ammonia liniment. Aromatic sp throat. Chiloride of ammonia, for telephone and telegraph electric batteries.

Made from caustic potassium and sodium.—Common washing soap. Soft soap. Soap liniment. Soap plasters. Compound cathartic pills and asafetida pills contain soap.

Made from concentrated mineral acids.—Acid mixture, used by tinners for soldering roofs. Aromatic sulphuric acid. Most of the sulphates, nitrates, and muriates of metals, used in the arts.

Essential oils.—One of which, the oil of pennyroyal, used to drive off mosquitoes and the treatment for relief of mosquito bites.

Phosphorus.—Common blue-head matches.

Containing salts of antimony.—Sirup of squills, Brown Mixture, Brown Cough Tablets, and cough mixtures containing the above.

Containing assentic.—Some natural mineral waters. Oild-fashioned fly paper, and in the manufacture of other papers.

Containing barium.—Dipilatories, for removing superfluous hair.

Containing chromium.—Tanning mixtures for hides and leathers.

Containing acetanilide.—Migrane tablets.

Containing belladonna.—Olntments for piles. Belladonna plasters.

An ingredient in most laxative pills.

Containing cantharides.—Hair tonics. Fly blisters.

Containing chloral hydrate.—Physicians' prescriptions. Solutions for preserving pathological specimens.

Containing coloroform.—Liniments in common use for man and beast.

Containing colorie.—Physicians' prescriptions. Many pharmaceutical preparations.

Containing colchicum.—Physicians' prescriptions. Most common gout remedies.

containing colonicum.—Flysicians prescriptions. Most common gout remedies.

Containing hyoscyamus.—Ointments for piles. Laxative pills.

Containing nux vomica.—Laxative pills.

Containing phenacetin.—Many standard pharmaceutical preparations.

Containing stramonium.—Ointments for piles.

The principal effect of this bill, if enacted, will be the embarrassment of the legally registered physicians and surgeons in the lawful practice of their profession. The universal or indiscriminate use of a poison label will defeat the protective purpose of the law proposed.

The following criticism is made by a prominent member of the bar practicing before the supreme court of the District of Columbia and the Supreme Court of the United States:

"Memorandum. H. R. bill 21982, relating to the transportation of habit-forming and poisonous drugs in interstate and foreign commerce, etc.

It also prescribes the maximum amount of these drugs which one prescription

[Extract from the Medical Journal of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia, Vol. VII, No. 5, p. 392, November, 1908.]

The following bill (House bill No. 21892) was introduced into the House of Representatives May 12, 1908, and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It is claimed by some that the first section of the bill would prevent physicians dealing directly with pharmaceutical houses outside the District of Columbia; that a physician who dispenses more or less of the products of such houses would be compelled to buy from jobbers and retail druggists in the District, and then only on a prescription; that if he should want to give a hypodermic injection of morphine at midnight to some suffering patient he would have to write a prescription for the same and wait till the druggist filled it. It is thought best, therefore, to print the bill in full for the information of the members of the Medical Society.

Respectfully,

H. L. E. JOHNSON.

Washington, D. C., January 7, 1909.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: Your favor of December 19, together with criticisms of H. R. 21982 by Dr. R. L. E. Johnson of this city, at hand, and in reply desire to state that we have conversed with several of the parties who brought the original bill to my attention, and they are of the opinion that the criticisms of Doctor Johnson are mostly without foundation in that they are either criticisms of the present District law, or involve points not within the purview of the bill. The bill embodies those features of the District law which deal with habit-forming and poisonous drugs, being modified for interstate commerce, extended to cover several additional pernicious drugs, and restricting the amounts that a single prescription may call for. The District law, considered one of the best on the subject, was passed by Congress at the request of the various branches of the medical and pharmaceutical professions of the District. The law received the full sanction of the medical fraternity, and therefore criticism involving this law by Doctor Johnson is unwarranted, and comes with ill grace from one who poses as a public reformer. The bill deals only with agents to be used for medicinal purposes, and not commodities intended for technical, battery, and similar purposes. At least 90 per cent of the doctor's criticisms are either indirect criticisms of the District law, or cover subjects not within the purvlew of the bill. For your information a few of them will be briefly considered:

Phosphorous matches, arsenical fly paper, tanning material, battery supplies, mordants, fireworks, kodak films, dyes, paints, acids used by tinners for soldering purposes, chloral hydrate for preserving pathological specimens, etc., are not drugs within the meaning of the bill.

Neither the doctor or his patient is prohibited from carrying medicines from one State to another, as can readily be seen from inclosed Food Inspection Decision No. 57.

Nothing in the law could be construed to interfere in any manner with physicians dispensing their own medicines.

Telephoning prescriptions is not only a hazardous business, but would permit habitués ordering any amount of cocaine, morphine, etc., in the name of some physician. The druggist could not recognize the fraud over the phone.

I fail to find either conflict or inconsistency between sections 1 and 2—the one simply supplements the other.

over the phone.

I fail to find either conflict or inconsistency between sections 1 and 2—the one simply supplements the other.

Probably 75 per cent of the States have laws requiring the filing and official inspection of prescriptions calling for habit-forming drugs. This, in my opinion, is the least that should be required for controlling the evil of drug addition. Remove this restriction, and the curse is reampart.

The bill requires the attachment of poison labels to the caustic hydroxides and concentrated mineral acids and not to preparations in the manufacture of which they or their salts are used.

manufacture of which they or their salts are used.

In my opinion, every mother in the land should be advised against the use of laudanum, with or without "sweet oil," in the treatment of earache. The oil and water are either absorbed or dissipated, leaving residual matter, forming an excellent nidus for bacterial growth and thus aggravating conditions. I do not recall a single toothache remedy which contains any of the prescribed drugs, and if there is such a remedy, its use is absolutely uncalled for, because there are plenty of efficient remedies that can be used which are free from habit-forming events.

agents.

Cough mixtures containing cocaine, morphine, opium, codeine, heroine, chloral hydrate, etc., singly or combined, can not in any sense of the word be considered harmless. I have before me one of these cough remedies containing 110 grains of chloral hydrate to the ounce, sent into the home without restriction, containing no warning whatever, either by dosage or otherwise, relative to its dangerous character. It is to be used for croup, whooping cough, etc. A single teaspoonful would land a child in eternity. The promiscuous, indiscriminate use of cough sirups containing the drugs named in the bill is liable to form a pernicious, life-wrecking habit.

The above. I think, are sufficient to indicate the character of certain criticisms offered by the doctor.

I shall now turn to several points which, in my opinion, deserve careful attention:

careful attention : careful attention:

-The doctor claims that the present bill permits druggists purchasing these products unrestricted, which is correct. I believe that the law to be finally enacted should require that every druggist, wholesaler, manufacturer, or otherwise, should keep a complete record of all purchases and sales of certain habit-forming drugs. This excellent feature now constitutes a part of the laws of New York and New Jersey.

It is claimed that the prescribed limitation relative to the amount of drugs that may be called for by a single prescription is too restricted in the case of chloral hydrate, and an attorney makes the criticism that the amounts would not permit the physician sufficient range to enable him to give proper dosage. There is no objection whatever to thereasing the amount of chloral hydrate to 1 ounce, but the claim that there is not enough material permitted to give sufficient dosage to patients is incorrect, because there is enough material provided in each case, with the exception of chloral hydrate, to kill a score or more of men.

The doctor claims that the law could could be sufficient to the sum of the sum of the could be sufficient to the sum of the sum of more of men.

The doctor claims that the law could easily be circumvented by giving numerous prescriptions calling for given drugs. While this is torrect, it also places on record the transactions of the physicians, and thus enables the authorities to investigate the final use to which these drugs may be put. In this respect I believe that the Gallinger bill (S. 4892) contains an important nucleus. I believe the Government will be called upon sooner or later to supervise the manufacture, distribution, and final consumption of the drugs forming pernicious habits, with a view to decreasing the present illegal consumption. It is estimated that at least one-half of the cocaine, opium, morphine, etc., at present used in the United States is used for improper purposes. There is now a movement on foot to place a prohibitory importation duty on cocaine and its derivatives, and at the same time impose an internal-revenue tax to cover the expense of supervising the sale and distribution of cocaine and its derivatives.

The poison-schedule list is virtually the same as that in the District law, excepting that there have been added to this list opium, morphine, cocaine, heroine, chloral hydrate, codeine, acetanliide, antipyrine, and phenacetine.

phenacetine.

There is no question in my mind but that all of these should be included. Some objections may be raised relative to acetanilide, antipyrine, and phenacetine, but we have in our possession positive proof that these drugs, their mixtures, or combinations have caused at least 1,666 cases of poisoning, 55 deaths, and 169 habitual users, a record which certainly renders these products eligible to membership in the poison schedule.

Attention should also be directed to the control of the certain of the control of the certain of the poison schedule.

Attention should also be directed to the fact that many of the poisonous agents are put up in the form of sugar-coated pills and are sent throughout the United States by mail and otherwise to various consumers without any information whatever relative to their dangerous character, and parents not being warned in any manner relative to their poisonous nature are probably not as careful as they otherwise would be. The attractive sugar-coated pills and tablets appeal to the child who, from their taste, believes them to be candy, cat same, and a life is sacrificed.

Last, but not least, I desire to say a word relative to abortifacient drugs and agents intended to bring about abortion. We have now in the bureau at least 100 different brands of these products, and it is certainly little enough to ask that the public be informed relative to their dangerous character by the simple application of a poison label. In my opinion, such products should be absolutely prohibited from sale except by direct advice of physicians.

There is at present an imperative need of a federal law regulating interstate shipments of certain pernicious habit-forming drugs, for the purpose of assisting state officials and others in their efforts to diminish crime, depravity, debauchery, and general wrecking of life among certain classes.

Respectfully,

H. W. Wilex, Chief.

DECLARATION OF THE QUANTITY OR PROPORTION OF ALCOHOL PRESENT IN DRUG PRODUCTS.

DECLARATION OF THE QUANTITY OR PROPORTION OF ALCOHOL PRESENT IN DRUG PRODUCTS.

The question of stating the percentage of alcohol present in drug products has caused a multitude of inquiries. The following questions along this line serve as examples:

"Is it necessary to give the amount of alcohol present in U. S. Pharmacopoeial or National Formulary products? It seems to me that such a requirement is absurd, and not contemplated within the spirit of the act. None of them are patent medicines. Will I be compelled to tell how much alcohol is present in such goods?

"If we apply for and obtain a serial number, must we in addition to putting this number on our labels state the per cent of alcohol?

"Will it be necessary to give the per cent of alcohol present in such products as ether, chloroform, collodion, spirit of nitrous ether, and similar preparations?"

The law is specific on the subject of declaring the amount of alcohol present in medicinal agents, as can readily be seen from the following language: "An article shall also be deemed misbranded * * * if the package fall to bear a statement on the label of the quantity or proportion of any alcohol * * contained therein." No medicinal preparations are exempt, whether they are made according to formulae given in the United States Pharmacopæia or National Formulary or formulæ taken from any other source. The serial number, with or without the guarantee legend, does not exempt a preparation from this requirement. The law does not make any statement as to the amount of alcohol that may or may not be employed. It requires, however, that whatever amount be present shall be set forth on the label. The percentage of alcohol given on the label should be the percentage of absolute alcohol by volume contained in the finished product. The manner in which it should be printed is shown in F. I. D. 52.

METHOD OF STATING QUANTITY OR PROPORTION OF PREPARATIONS (CONTAINING OPIUM, MORPHINE, ETC.) USED IN MANUFACTURING OTHER PREPARATIONS.

TAINING OFIUM, MORPHINE, ETC.) USED IN MANUFACTURING OTHER PREPARATIONS.

Many inquiries are received as to the method of stating the quantity or proportion of preparations (containing opium, morphine, etc.) used in the manufacture of other preparations. Of these the following are typical:

"If the label on the bottle were to bear the words 'Tincture of Opium,' I reason that as this is a definite preparation, constituting a preparation of opium, and so definite as to its composition that to any intelligent person it expresses definitely all that it is desirable to express, the use of this title alone should be sufficient. I feel that as a preparation it is distinct from opium, and if this particular tincture is used in the manufacture of a preparation the mention of it alone should be sufficient."

"Where extract or tincture of cannabis indica, or extract of opium, is employed in making other drug products, would it not be complying with the law if the use of such articles be clearly indicated on the label, as prescribed by the law, or is it necessary to give the actual amounts of the drugs themselves represented by these preparations?"

Names of drug products bearing any of the names of the ingredients enumerated in the act are construed as representing "preparations" within the meaning of the act; and if the same are clearly declared upon the label, as required by regulations 17 and 30, it will not be necessary to give the actual amount of the primary drugs used or represented by such article. It is desirable, however, that the word or words used in the law shall constitute the first part of the name of the product. For example: "Opium, Tincture of;" "Cannabis Indica, Extract of," followed by the amount of tincture or extract used.

NAMES TO BE EMPLOYED IN DECLARING THE AMOUNT OF THE INGREDIENTS AS REQUIRED BY THE LAW.

Many inquiries are coming to this department relative to the names that may be employed in declaring the quantity or proportion of the ingredients as required by Congress.

The following are representative:

"The word 'alcohol' has received so much unfavorable notoriety during the last few years that we hesitate to place it upon our labels. Could we not employ some other words in place of it, such as 'cologne spirits,' 'spirits of wine,' 'pure grain alcohol,' etc.?

"Would it be satisfactory for us to use 'Phenylacetamide,' or the following formula, CoHoNH(CHoCO), for the chemical acetanilide?
"One of our preparations contains trichlorethidene ethyl alcoholate, which would undoubtedly under the law be considered a derivative of chloral hydrate. Will it be satisfactory for us to use this name on our trade packages in giving the amount of this chemical present in the product?
"In the manufacture of some of our products we use opium. It chloral hydrate. Will it be satisfactory for us to use this name on our trade packages in giving the amount of this chemical present in the product?

"In the manufacture of some of our products we use opium. It would, however, be a financial loss to state this fact on the label. Could we not say this preparation contains 20 grains of the concentrated extract of Papaver somniferum to the fluid ounce?

"Dover's powder is mentioned in the regulations as one of the preparations of opium. It would seem at first glance that Dover's powder as a preparation, if mentioned on the label, would be all that could be required as to opium."

One of the objects of the law is to inform the consumer of the presence of certain drugs in medicines, and the above terms do not give the average person any idea as to the presence or absence of such drugs. In enumerating the ingredients, the quantity or proportion of which is required to be given upon the principal label of any medicinal preparation in which such ingredients may be present, the act uses only common names, and the permission to use any but such common names for any ingredients required to be declared upon the label is neither expressed nor implied in any part of the law.

The term used for acetanilide is "acetanilide" and not phenylacetamide. No reference is made to the use of the chemical formula in designating the presence of chemicals. The words "chloral hydrate" appear in the act, but not the chemical name trichorethidene glycol. It can readily be seen that if the act were not closely adhered to in this connection there would soon be such a confusion and multiplicity of names and phrases that one of the objects of the act would be defeated.

The names to be employed in stating the quantity or proportion of the ingredients required by the act to appear on the label of all medicinal preparations containing same are—

First. Those used in the law for the articles enumerated; example, "alcohol," not "spiritus rectificatus."

Second. In the case of derivatives: (a) The na stitute the first portion of the name of the first portion of the name of the first portion of the name of the first powder, etc.) of preparations containing an ingredient enumerated in the law, provided such name or names are accompanied in parentheses by some such phrase as "preparation of opium" or "opium preparation," followed by the number of minims or grains, as specified in the regulations; for instance, "laudanum (preparation of opium), 40 minims per ounce."

Physicians' Prescriptions.

The Status of Packages compounded according to Physicians' prescriptions and entering into interestate commerce.

Packages resulting from the compounding of physicians' prescriptions under the food and drugs act are the subject of many queries, of which the following are representative:

"If a druggist compounds a physician's prescription and sends it into an adjoining State, will it be necessary to state upon the label the amount of alcohol, morphine, etc., that may be present?

"Supposing a regularly licensed practicing physician has patients located in various States of the Union and supplies medicines to them through the malls, by express, and otherwise, do such packages come under the provisions of the law; and, if so, can the required information be given in pen and ink on the, label?

"We treat drug addictions on a very gradual tonic treatment reduction plan. For instance, if John Doe writes for information as to the home treatment for his addiction, I send him a symptom blank which contains, among other questions, an inquiry as to the kind of drug he uses, how he uses it, the length of time he has used it, etc. In addition to giving me a complete history of his case, he states he is using 10 grains of sulph, of morphine (each twenty-four hours), hypodermically or internally, as the case may be. In prescribing in his case I immediately put him on just one-half of the amount he reports as his daily allowance, combining same with a bitter tonic.

"It is necessary for the reduction in drug cases to be made without the patient's knowledge. It is, of course, understood by all physicians that you can not trust a drug habitué to properly make his own reducing his daily allowance of oplates he would imagine the reduction too rapid, he would get frightened, and would take to his former drug for relief. Treatment prepared in this way I do not think would come under the head of a proprietary preparation or a patent medicine, as I prescribe the contents of each bottle to meet the requirem

Commerce.

The package may be marked so as to comply with the act by either stamp, pen and ink, or typewriter, provided all such written matter is distinctly legible and on the principal label, as prescribed in Regulation 17.

THE LABELING OF PRODUCTS USED AS FOODS AND DRUGS, AS WELL AS FOR TECHNICAL AND OTHER PURPOSES.

Frequent requests for information relative to the proper labeling of products bearing the names of foods and drugs, but used also for technical and other purposes, are received. The following are typical:

"We will kindly ask you to advise us in regard to the new law that governs the line of oils. We manufacture a compound product, so-called 'turpentine,' which contains pure turpentine and a very fine petroleum product. It is used in most branches where pure turpentine is used, with the exception of medicinal purposes, for which we do not sell it.

"We understand that if we were to sell any cotton-seed oil so branded as to indicate that it was intended to be used as a food, as, for example, under the brand 'Blank Salad Oil,' it would be necessary to observe the requirements of the law referred to; but we are in doubt and would be glad to have your opinion as to whether a sale or shipment of this oil (for lubricating purposes) under the ordinary trade brand of cotton-seed oil, and without anything to indicate that it was of a quality suitable for use as a salad oil, would subject us to the provisions of the act."

During personal interviews the question of marking chemical reagents has also been discussed.

Products used in the arts and for technical purposes are not subject

During personal interviews the question of marking chemical reagents has also been discussed.

Products used in the arts and for technical purposes are not subject to the food and drugs act. It is, however, a well-recognized fact that many articles are used indiscriminately for food, medicinal, and technical purposes. It is also well known that some products employed for technical purposes are adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of this act. Inasmuch as it is impossible to follow such products into consumption in order to determine to what use they are finally put, it is desirable that an article sold under a name commonly applied to such article for food, drug, and technical purposes be so labeled as to avoid possible mistakes. The ordinary name of a pure and normal product, whether sold for food, drug, technical, or other purposes, is all that is necessary. Pure cotton-seed oil or turpentine may be sold without any restrictions whatever, whether such article is sold for food, medicinal, or technical purposes, but it is suggested that a cotton-seed oil intended for lubricating purposes, or a so-called "turpentine" consisting of a mixture of turpentine and petroleum oils, used by the paint trade, be plainly marked so as to indicate that they are not to be employed for food or medicinal purposes. Such phrases as the following may be used: "Not for food purposes," "Not for medicinal use," or for "Technical purposes only," or "For lubricating purposes," etc.

In order to avoid complication it is suggested that chemical reagents sold as such be marked with such phrases as the following: "For analytical purposes," or "Chemical reagent," etc.

NATIONAL FORMULARY APPENDIX.

The National Formulary is one of the standards recognized under the law. The question has been asked a number of times whether the appendix of this authority would be construed as part and parcel of the book itself. On page IV of the preface it is distinctly stated that the formulæ collected in the appendix of the National Formulary are "no longer designated as 'N. F.' preparations." This shows that these formulæ are not integral parts of the book under the law, which covers only those products of the National Formulary recognized as such by this authority. By this it is understood that if a drug product is sold under a name contained in the appendix of the National Formulary it will not be necessary for such product either to conform to the standard indicated by the formula or to declare upon the label its own standard strength, quality, and purity if a different formula is employed in its manufacture. Such articles are, however, subject to the law in every other respect, as is the case of other medicinal products not recognized by the United States Pharmacopæia or National Formulary.

Hon. James R. Mann, House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your favor of January 12, I am returning herewith Doctor Johnson's criticisms, and I beg to state that I have no objection to having our letter published with his criticisms in the Congressional Record.

Respectfully,

H. W. Wiley, Chief.

Respectfully,

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, a question may come up to-morrow, and I hope will, dealing with the question of aeronautics in connection with war. I know that in the minds of a great many people it seems absurd that a ship in the air can be of any service to the country, and possibly they are right. But the chance of such people being right is much less now than a few years ago. I am not prepared to say positively whether that will be a valuable adjunct to our military force, but I am not prepared to say it will not be the most valuable one of all modern inventions. I can remember in my lifetime—while it has been reasonably long it is not as long as I hope it will be been been reasonably long it is not as long as I hope it will be before I am through with it-

Mr. TOWNSEND. I share the hope.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That we made a great deal of a jest of the first telephone. It seemed perfectly absurd that people would seat themselves in houses a block apart and talk with each other, and yet to-day we notice we can talk from New York to Chicago. When the first proposed electric telegraph was presented in this House to come from Baltimore to Washington a majority of the Members in the beginning believed it was simply an absurdity to appropriate any money for that purpose. When wireless telegraphy was first given the world very few believed it possible to send messages through the air, We are and yet within a week we have seen its great value. now advancing in all lines of invention so rapidly, both for peace and war, that it seems to me that the Congress of this Nation is not justified in ignoring any proposed advancements, Nation is not justified in ignoring any proposed advancements, no matter in what line they may be.

I want to insert in the Record, and discuss this matter more fully to-morrow, what other nations are doing. We find that in Russia more than $1,000,000 is appropriated this year for aeronautical experiments. Germany subscribed, in addition to what the Government gave, more than $1,000,000 by citizens of the German Empire. This Nation alone of all the nations, if this Congress refuses to make an appropriation for this line of investigation, will refuse to do anything to promote this new line of aerial navigation. You can not, gentlemen, fight an airship with anything except another airship. If it is possible to develop them to the point that they can be made effective, the nation that controls the air will be more formidable than the nation that controls the fortifications on the land; and for that reason, whether anything shall come of it or not in the future, I hold it is the duty of this Congress to make such appropriations for investigation that will keep us abreast of the other nations of the earth in these experimentations.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman, the chairman of the committee, if it is not true that there has already been brought to the attention of at least the members of the committee that has to deal with military affairs the fact that already aerial navigation has been developed to that extent that as a source of information it is of practical and extreme value to any army?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There is no doubt about that. I could make these extracts longer, but I do not want to encumber the Record. I only desire to get in enough to insure the reading of it; but, as my colleague says, it has been developed until it is absolutely certain the dirigible balloon is a possibility, if not an accomplished fact.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is a fact now.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is a fact now; and not only that, Mr. Chairman, it is in the estimates, and I hold that the Committee on Military Affairs has absolute jurisdiction over it. But you may have to pass on the question to-morrow. It pertains to work of the line of the army and not the coast defense in any regard as a separate proposition. I desire to present this question to the House to-morrow, and I have alluded to it now so that we may know what I desire the House to-morrow to consider; and I now ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD this information as to what other nations are doing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to insert in the Record certain information. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extracts are as follows:

Résumé of status of military aeronautics, January, 1909.

Our military attaché at St. Petersburg reports under date of December 15, 1908, that the Russian Government has allotted the sum of $1,083,750 for dirigible balloons for the year 1909. The war department has placed an order for one dirigible balloon of the Republique type to cost 300,000 francs, which will be completed in June, 1909. There are 79 officers and 3,255 enlisted men in the balloon corps of Russia.

FRANCE.

The French army has in actual service three large dirigible balloons. The latest type is the Republique, completed in 1908. The Liberté is to be delivered during the current year, and is to be stationed at Befort. The French army has 24 officers and 432 enlisted men organized into an aeronautical battalion, exclusively employed in aeronautical

After the destruction of the Zeppelin No. 4 on August 5, 1908, popular subscriptions throughout Germany donated a million dollars for an aeronautical plant and air ships in Germany. The German army now has four dirigible air ships in actual operation. The cost of the Zeppelin type air ships is about $112.000 each. The cost of the smaller type of air ship is about $60,000 in Europe, and the import duty to this country is about 45 per cent. Six more Zeppelin air ships are to be constructed this year. Twenty officers and 465 enlisted men make up the balloon battallon of the German army.

The treaty of The Hague conference relative to dropping explosives from air ships was not signed by any first-class European or Asiatic power.

from air ships was not signed by any first-class European or Asiatic power.

It has never been the policy for the United States to maintain a large military force, but it has been the policy to furnish the American army with the latest and best types of war material as fast as they are developed, namely, the best guns, ammunition, and equipment of all kinds. It is agreed by all military authorities that the only way of effectively opposing military air ships is by means of air ships. It is not considered possible to protect against air ships by stationary guns from the earth. This new weapon of war is now a part of the military establishment of the principal European powers, against which this country has no means of protecting itself either at home or in case of operations abroad. It is entirely practicable to-day, with a single dirigible balloon of the type of the new La Republique of the French army, to destroy by means of explosives, and particularly incendiary mixtures, the shipping of any of our large seacoast cities, as well as property of enormous value, against which this Government has no means to protect itself.

Military authorities summarize the applications of air ships to warfare as follows:

a. To gain information in peace time respecting harbors, fortifications, etc.

b. Patrols and frontier guards

a. To gain information in peace time respecting harbors, fortifications, etc.
b. Patrols and frontier guards.
c. For reconnoissance and photographic work.
d. Dispatch work.
e. Checking an enemy's reconnoissance on land or sea.
f. Signaling and wireless-telegraph stations.
g. Directing artillery fire and drawing enemy's fire.
h. Destroying the enemy's aerial fleet.
f. Attacking an enemy's base line, destroying stores, etc.
j. Destroying rallways and other communications.
k. Raiding the capital of the enemy's country.
l. Making night or surprise attacks on field forces, using explosives or incendiary mixtures.
m. Raiding harbors and naval bases.
n. Carrying out over-sea raids.
o. Locating and capturing or destroying submarines.
p. Locating mines.
q. Following up a victory by land or sea and completing the route.

EXTRACT FROM REPORT OF THE MILITARY ATTACHÉ OF THE UNITED STATES AT ST. PETERSBURG, RUSSIA.

EXTRACT FROM REPORT OF THE MILITARY ATTACHÉ OF THE UNITED STATES AT ST. PETERSBURG, RUSSIA.

The first dirigible balloon built in Russia was tried last September. It is a small balloon, built on the model furnished by Captain Shapski, Russian army, after the La Patrie type. Captain Shapski received as a reward for the model from the war department 8,000 rubles. The balloon was built at the Aeronautic Park of the Government. The motor power was 16 horsepower, 2 motors. On the trial it ascended to a height of 460 meters, attaining a speed of 6 meters per second with the wind. It successfully described circles when going against the wind. Its cost was $100,250, of which $43,000 was for the engines.

A larger balloon of this model will be built in Russia of Russian material. Specifications for balloon: Length, 61 meters; diameter 11 meters; gas capacity, 4,000 cubic meters; carrying capacity, 2,644 pounds. One motor of 90 horsepower.

The war department has also given an order for the construction of a dirigible balloon to the firm of Lebaudy, of Paris, of the Republique type, to cost 300,000 francs. It is to be ready by the end of June, 1909. Its size is to be about 3,500 cubic meters, and it will have 2 motors of 80 horsepower each.

The war department has allotted $25,000 for experiments with heavierthan-air machines, and has granted $2,500 to the Aero Club, of Odessa, on condition that any property of the club will be placed at the disposal of the Government in time of war.

The war department has also made the large grant of $1,083,750 for dirigible balloons during the year 1909.

EXTRACTS FROM REPORT OF THE MILITARY ATTACHÉ OF THE UNITED STATES AT BERLIN, GERMANY.

The entire country has shown its Interest in the matter by the subscriptions that poured in when the Zeppelin balloon was accidentally destroyed. The Crown Prince has made at least two ascensions in the Zeppelin balloon and one or more in the Gross military balloon, and the King of Wurtemberg has shown his interest on several occasions and also made ascents. The Emperor himself has also encouraged Von Zeppelin by visits and decorations, as well as by donations to the fund, and he has also several times inspected the Gross military balloon as well as the Von Parseval balloon. All these incidents indicate the nation's interest and pride in its balloons.

THE VON ZEPPELIN AIRSHIP.

Zeppelin did not believe in first building a small model and trying to learn from that how to construct a real, full-sized airship, but proceeded at once to the latter. His experiments have been expensive, but as far as they went they have also been final, and it is a remarkable fact that, with all his accidents, through eight years of trials, there has been no loss of life involved.

The radius of action is about 1,426 miles, which makes it possible to travel from Lake Constance to Konigsberg, on the Baltic, and back again. The new balloon was fitted out with a searchlight for traveling at night, and also with both sending and receiving stations for wireless telegraphy. The cost was about $100,000.

The cubic contents of the balloon are about 13,000 cubic meters (460,000 cubic feet), and when fully loaded for a thirty-hour trip it can still carry 4,620 pounds ballast.

The compartment system of ships has been adopted for the balloon, and the gas is taken up by 19 separate spherical balloons inside. This prevents a single bullet from bringing down the balloon.

July 3, 1908. The series of trials to test the new airship with its third filling of gas ended in a short trial, with the King and Queen of Wurttemberg as passengers. The King alone went up first.

At 3.30 p. m. the balloon left the hall and circulated over the palace of Friedrichshafen, and at 4.04 landed again on the lake, near the balloon hall. The King went ashore and the Queen took his place aboard. After a short tour over the palace the balloon landed again at 4.40 near the balloon hall and the Queen went ashore. The air ship started out a third time, and at 5 made another landing, but went up again for a short time, stopping finally at 6.35 on account of an approaching thunderstorm.

The Emperor of Germany sent the count a congratulatory telegram. July 7, 1908. Count Zeppelin reported to the Imperial Government that the new balloon had been taken to the balloon hall recently acquired by the Government.

July 13, 1908. The trial trip of the Von Zeppelin balloon for its official acceptance by the Government had been postponed for about a week on account of bad weather, but on this day the weather looked promising for an ascent on the morrow, and all preparations were made.

An accident, however, prevented the balloon from getting off. The new tugboat did not work well, and the wind, suddenly veering about at the same time that the towboat ported, sent the balloon against the balloon hall.

A hole was made in the balloon envelope by a loosened plank. The other compartments were uninjured, but it would probably take two or three weeks to repair the damage.

It is assumed, however, that immediately after the trial trip the air ships Nos. 3 and 4 will be turned over to the Government, while Count Zeppelin will retain No. 5, now building. Six new ones after the model of No. 5 are to be ordered.

All Germany had been greatly elated by the success of Count Zeppelin in going as far as Metz, so that when the catastrophe was announced the reaction was very great. Soon, however, the people, after expressing their sympathy, began sending in subscriptions from all over Germany, and in a few days a million or more marks had been subscribed, and the rebuilding of the old balloon, as well as the construction of an entirely new one, was at once begun.

CONCLUDING REMARKS.

The Zeppelin air ship, as is thus seen, has practically proven its efficiency on innumerable occasions, and must be regarded as a success and reckoned with in future as an engine of war.

Whatever may be the success of the flying machine, or of the smaller dirigibles, the air ship will have a strategic value in a campaign that can not be estimated at present, but which will certainly be very great.

SUPPLEMENTARY NOTES ON ZEPPELIN AIR SHIP.

November 19, 1908. The competitive plans for the new balloon hall for two Zeppelin air ships were submitted this day. Over 70 plans were submitted.

November 24, 1908. The jury of award (Professor Müeller, of Berlin; Professors Dietz and Ebert, of Munich) gave the first prize for the design for the new hall to the Brückenbauanstalt (Brüge-building Company), Flender, in Beurath, near Düsseldorf; the second to Guto-Hoffnungshütte, in Oberhausen on the Rhine; the third to Vereinigten Maschinenfabriken, Augsburg-Nurnberg.

Another 100,000 marks was paid over to Count Zeppelin out of the government fund.

December 1, 1908. The payment of the 1,500,000 marks for Zeppelin I was completed to-day.

Zeppelin III will not be begun until one of the two halls now occupied by I and II, respectively, become available.

This completes the history of the Zeppelin air ship to date.

THE MILITARY BALLOON OF MAJOR GROSS.

The new balloon is 216.5 feet long and has a diameter of 36 feet. The entire envelope is mounted on a frame of steel tubing and rests in a long trough-shaped aluminum plate, to which it is tied and screwed. The frame is entirely covered with balloon stuff, so that it is not exposed to view.

The gondola, which is 16 feet long and 6 feet wide, is also made of steel tubes and is connected with the keel of the balloon by means of a frame resting on ball bearings.

There are two 75-horsepower Coerting motors in the gondola. Each motor drives a propeller with three aluminum screws. The screws are run by ropes. The propellers are over the gondola close under the balloon, to the keel of which they are fastened.

In long trips only one motor is to be used.

August 20, 1908. In the morning at 7 o'clock the military balloon (in company with the Parseval balloon) maneuvered for one and one-half hours over Berlin. The wind blew about 8 meters a second from east-northeast. Both balloons sailed over Jungfernheide, along the Spandau canal, then turned around the victory column, flew over the Tiergarten to the Brandenburger Thor, and along the Linden to the palace. After maneuvering there for a quarter of an hour, they returned to Tegel and effected an easy landing.

At 10.45 a. m. the military balloon again rose and passed over Reinickendorf, Wittenau, and Weidmannslust to Hubertustock and Werbellinsee, about 32 miles north of Berlin, returning at 3 p. m.

August 22, 1908. At 9 a. m. General v. Moltke, chief of the general staff, made an ascent in the military balloon, maneuvering for three-fourths of an hour in a strong wind (about 25 miles an hour). It was landed with difficulty.

August 21, 1908. The military balloon was inspected by the crown prince and princess. At 5.30 p. m. the balloon made a brief ascent and landed easily again.

The crown prince then at 7 p. m. made an ascent, remaining up and maneuvering about for half an hour or more at a height of 1,000 feet. August 27, 1908. The military balloon, after a rest of nearly a week, again began its ascents. At 11.25 a. m., with the wind blowing about 5 meters a second, it rose and sailed against the wind over Charlottenburg and Spandau to Potsdam, where it arrived at 1 p. m. There it went several times around the marble palace; then returned to Jungfernheide, landing in Tegel at 2 p. m.

* * **

Sentember 11, 1908. The Gross military balloon started on a love.

September 11, 1908. The Gross military balloon started on a long night trip at 10.30 p. m. At 6.50 a. m. Stendal was reached. At 8.10 a. m. the balloon passed over Magdeburg, where, at a height of only about 500 feet, it performed a number of evolutions.

From Magdeburg the balloon returned to Tebel over Stendal and Rathenow, arriving at 11.31 a. m., maneuvering at a height of 1,600 feet for some time and landing at 12 m.

September 12. The balloon was, therefore, over thirteen hours in the air, thus breaking the world's record.

The balloon was in perfect condition and needed only a supply of benzine.

The wind during the night blew very strong, about 10 meters a second. At times the balloon went as high as 3,900 feet. The distance covered was about 175 miles.

On the way to Magdeburg both motors had to be used; on the way back only one was necessary. It took both motors nine and one-half hours to go to Magdeburg, whereas one motor brought the balloon back in three and one-half hours.

The ballast used during the journey amounted to 33 pounds, and the benzine and oil supply was sufficient for four hours more.

The radius of action is therefore about seventeen or eighteen hours.

November 7, 1908. The military balloon made another ascent with 8 persons in the gondola. The wind was blowing from the northeast about 7 meters per second.

THE VON PARSEVAL BALLOON.

The trials of the von Parseval dirigible balloon were continued throughout the year.

August 20, 1908. The Parseval balloon, at 7.15 a.m., made an ascent and trial of one and one-half hours, in company with the Gross military balloon.

The duke went in the military balloon on this day. Both balloons went over Berlin and back to Tegel.

August 22, 1908. The Parseval balloon made an ascent in company with the military balloon, in spite of the threatening weather and strong wind.

The military balloon got back safely to its hall, but the Parseval balloon was not so successful. While working at full speed of the motors, at a height of 1,600 feet, a plate of the cooling apparatus broke, and to prevent overheating the number of revolutions had to be lowered, but this also diminished the speed of the balloon, and the wind (which was blowing 25 miles an hour) drove it to the northeastward. The same gas filling had been in the balloon (additions having been made to it from time to time) for six weeks, consequently the chauffeur decided to land in the vicinity of Wittenau, which was effected without difficulty.

to land in the vicinity of vicinity, difficulty.

The balloon was packed on wagons in three-quarters of an hour and brought back to its hall.

September 9, 1908. The newly-filled balloon rose at 5.30 p. m. gradually to a height of 1,000 feet. At the earth's surface there was little wind, but at an elevation of 450 feet the balloon found a 17-mile breeze blowing. After a series of evolutions over Charlottenburg the balloon, at 1.10 p. m., landed smoothly on the Tegel grounds.

Near Burg, at 4.10 p. m., the balloon turned homeward, reaching Tegel at 7 p. m., after a eleven and one-half hour trial trip.

Every part functioned perfectly, and no ballast was thrown out during the run. Benzine had been provided for a ten and one-half hour run at full speed, but there was still a quantity left at the end of the trial. The greatest elevation reached was about 1,900 feet.

The performance of the types of the three great systems of dirigible balloons are here briefly given:

1. Zeppelin: Longest trip, twelve hours; greatest speed, 15 meters per second; capacity, 15,000 cubic meters.

2. Gross: Longest trip, thirteen hours; greatest speed, 13 meters per second; capacity, 4,800 cubic meters.

3. Parseval: Longest trip, eleven and one-fourth hours; greatest speed, 15.5 meters per second; capacity, 3,200 cubic meters.

It is thus seen that, with considerably smaller volume, the Gross and Parseval balloons have done as well as the Zeppeiin, and in some respects have even surpassed it.

Parseval II is nearly ready for its outdoor trials. Meanwhile the details of the new construction are being tested indoors.

The endurance test has been made and there remains only the elevation and then the emptying and filling in the field.

On acceptance by the war department the sum of 225,000 marks will be paid for it by the Government.

October 23, 1908. At 12.30 p. m. orders were received to proceed with the trial in presence of a general staff officer representing the war department. An east wind of about 8 meter-seconds was blowing at an elevation of 900 feet.

After a short run the balloon rose to a height of 1,500-1,600 meters and maneuvered there for an hour. Between 3 and 4 the balloon landed again.

November 4, 1908. The balloon to-day made final trip. At 7.15 a. m. the balloon, loaded on two wagons, was taken to a designated point on the Spandau Weg. At 12.30 p. m. the filling was completed, 720 flasks of compressed hydrogen being required for the purpose.

The balloon then rose directly from the field and sailed northwest. There was a heavy fog at the time, and it became necessary to land in Schoeneiche, near Friedrichshafen, as it was found dangerous to attempt to return to Tegel.

November 5, 1908. The Parseval balloon was not accepted by the War Department because the speed had not yet been definitely determined.

The construction of a new Parseval balloon has already begun.

The two motors, of 100 horsepower each, are so arranged to the right and left that all parts can be readily reached for the purpose of inspection or repair.

The entire gondola weighs 5,500 pounds.

The envelope for the 5,600-cubic-meter balloon has already been delivered, and the new balloon will be ready before long. Its first ascent will probably be made in Bitterfield.

The following detailed description (by Engineer W. Friedlaender, Berlin) of the Parseval balloon now owned by the German Government and in use by the army may not be uninteresting, especially since Germany is now committed to the adoption of this type of nonrigid balloon for field use, and will probably soon have a fleet of them.

The balloon consists of balloon with rigging and gondola.

The gondola was built by the Neue Automobile Gesellschaft in Ober-Schoenewelde, near Berlin. The balloon body, without any rigid framework parts whatever, was constructed by Riedinger, in Augsburg. It is 190 feet long, its greatest diameter is 31 feet, and its volume 3,800 meters. In front its surface is a semiellipsoid, with semidiameters of 15.4 and 11.8 feet, falling off gradually in its nearly cylindrical part to a diameter of 29.5 feet at a point two-thirds of its length back, and then at the rear end coming to a point.

The weight of the ballon envelope is 1,650 pounds, the rigging and tackle, consisting of holding and carrying ropes, 220 pounds, the drag rope 220 pounds, so that the entire balloon weighs 5,170 pounds, and, therefore, with its total buoyancy of 6,820 pounds, leaves about 1,650 pounds for chauffeur and engineer, passengers, ballast, implements, etc. Six persons have often gone up in it, while the ballast has never been used, not even in the long endurance trial trip.

The greatest speed thus far attained was 15 meter-seconds, or about 334 miles an hour.

The advantages of the Parseval balloon, especially for military purposes, are very great, and the most important among them are the easy transportation. due to its nonrigid construction, and its light weight as compared with its carrying power. Its cost is also comparatively small.

CONCLUSIONS.

The balloons at present adopted in Germany are the Zeppelin and the Parseval; that is, the rigid type and the nonrigid; nevertheless, it is believed that the Gross balloon will yet prove its efficiency, and that its type, or the semirigid, will also find a place in the military establishment.

The various characteristics of the three types have been sufficiently explained and discussed. The rigid type will find its principal application in strategy over the entire theater of war, on the entire front of strategic deployment of the army on the frontier, while the semi-rigid and nonrigid types will be used mainly in the domain of tactics, and the nonrigid more particularly with the advance troops of the field army.

army.

There is no doubt whatever but that the Zeppelin balloon is a practicable air ship, and the same is true of the other two, although the Gross, or military, balloon requires further improvements to make it more

As regards the absolute safety of these machines, it must be acknowledged from the foregoing accounts that there is still much to be desired, but, comparatively, their safety is about the same and is sufficient for ordinary purposes. This is evidenced by the fact that the crown prince of Germany has been taken up in every one, which would not have been undertaken or allowed had not the inventors and the Government felt sufficient confidence in their safety and reliability.

Reconnoissance in war will hereafter be more thorough than in the past, and commanding generals will have more accurate information. This will not always make their task easier, but neither will ignorance of the enemy's positions or actions be an excuse for making mistakes in strategy and tactics in the future. Indeed, the commander in chief who is a good strategist and tactician will profit by this new war material, but he who is weak in both respects must suffer from them if his adversary has the ability to properly utilize the better information he receives.

tion he receives.

Dirigible balloons and air ships, therefore, will not make strategy, as an art, any easier, but they will facilitate the execution of sound strategic plans by furnishing better, more definite, more complete, and more comprehensive information regarding the enemy's positions and forces.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly. Mr. MANN. Some years ago the military authorities set aside a sum of money for experimentation purposes for Professor Langley, Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution. Does the gentleman know whether that is out of the fund appropriated for fortifications or out of the fund appropriated through the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think it was out of the fund appropriated by the Committee on Appropriations and not, I think, out of the fund for fortifications. I think it was specifically appropriated for that purpose and reported from that committee, as I now remember.

Mr. MANN. Oh, but the gentleman is mistaken about that. There was very bitter criticism indulged in on the floor of this House by a member of the Committee on Military Affairs because that money was to be expended in that direction without the specific sanction of Congress, and it has been always understood it broke the heart of Professor Langley and practically caused his death, as he was the foremost man in the world in reference to that subject.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I remember, Mr. Chakman, very dis-tinctly that the question was asked if the Committee on Military Affairs had made the appropriation. I answered "no," and I think I made light of the experimentation. I have not any doubt but I did.

Mr. MANN. I do the gentleman credit to say that I do not think the gentleman expressed any opinion on the subject at the time

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I did. I said they could not charge up any such foolishness as that against the Committee on Military Affairs. But I want to say that, in the light of investigation and what the world is doing, I have a different opinion on the question. I hope I may say I have grown in the last five years. But I do not think they will ever reach such a state of perfection in aerial navigation that I will trust myself in one of their ships.

Mr. MANN. I do not agree with the gentleman. I want to get into the first one that I can.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise. I understand that the general debate is now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not closed.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Then, I will withdraw my motion, and ask that the Clerk proceed with the reading of the bill. I ask unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] asks unanimous consent that the motion that the committee do now rise be vacated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I ask for the reading of the bill, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the support of the army for the year ending June 30, 1910:

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Now, Mr. Chairman, as that closes general debate, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Perkins, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 26915, the army appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE-WARMOTH V. ESTOPINAL.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a privileged re-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois presents a privileged report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Elections No. 1, to which was referred the memorial of H. C. Warmoth, contesting the right of Hon. Albert Estopinal to a seat in the House of Representatives from the First Congressional District of Louisiana, and also a letter from Mr. Warmoth, stating that he withdraws his contest, beg leave to respectfully report and recommend that said memorial and petition do lie upon the table.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the papers referred to do lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

CANAL CONNECTING PUGET SOUND WITH LAKE WASHINGTON.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill S. 8695, a similar House bill having been favorably reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The Clerk read as follows:

bill (S. 8695) extending the time for the construction by James A. Moore, or his assigns, of a canal along the government right of way connecting the waters of Puget Sound with Lake Washington.

connecting the waters of Puget Sound with Lake Washington.

Be it enacted, etc., That, subject to all the other provisions contained in the act of Congress entitled "An act authorizing James A. Moore, or his assigns, to construct a canal along the government right of way connecting the waters of Puget Sound with Lake Washington," approved June 11, 1906, and contained in the modification of said act made in the act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1907, the time limitation for the completion of the canal authorized by said acts is hereby extended until June 11, 1912.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move the passage of the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The only change it makes is to extend the time?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is all.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

A similar bill (H. R. 26984) was laid on the table.

WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first legislative day after the army appropriation bill has been passed be set aside, in lieu of to-day, for the consideration of claims upon the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Has-KINS] asks unanimous consent that the first legislative day after the completion of the consideration of the army appropriation bill may be treated as to-day-Friday-under the rule for the consideration of business in order on Friday.

Mr. GARRETT. May I ask the gentleman if that will include bills reported by the Committee on Claims as well as the Committee on War Claims?

Mr. HASKINS. The Committee on Claims will have next

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I feel compelled to object at this

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for fees for witnesses in trial of land-fraud cases (H. Doc. No. 1380)—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriations for rental for public offices at Petersburg, Va. (H. Doc. No. 1381)—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the schooner Rebecca, Mildmay Smith and John Hall, master (H. Doc. No. 1382)—to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BANNON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. BELLEFOURCHE LAND DISTRICT, SOUTH DAKOTA.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of this bill and consider it at this time in the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 26062) authorizing the creation of a land district in the State of South Dakota, to be known as the Bellefourche land dis-

State of South Dakota, to be known as the Bellefourche land district.

Be it enacted, etc., That all that part of the State of South Dakota lying within the following described boundaries, to wit: Commencing at a point where the township line between townships 18 and 19 north intersects the boundary line between the States of South Dakota and Montana; thence east on the said township line to the northeast corner of township 18 north, of range 9 east; thence south along the range line between ranges 9 and 10 to a point where the same intersects the third standard parallel north; thence east on said third standard parallel north to the northeast corner of township 12 north, range 11 east; thence south along the range line between ranges 11 and 12 to where the same intersects the township line between townships 6 and 7 north; thence west on said township line between townships 6 and 7 to a point where the same intersects the boundary line between the States of South Dakota and Wyoming; thence north on the boundary line between the States of South Dakota and Wyoming; thence north on the boundary line between the States of South Dakota and Wyoming; thence north on the boundary line between the States of South Dakota and Wyoming; thence north on the boundary line between the States of South Dakota and Wyoming; thence north on the boundary line between the States of South Dakota and Wyoming and Montana to the point of beginning, be, and the same hereby is, constituted a new land district, to be known as the Bellefourche land district; and the United States land office for said district is hereby located at the town of Bellefourche, in Butte County. That the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a register and a receiver for said land district, and they shall be subject to the same laws and be entitled to the same compensation as is or may be hereafter provided by law in relation to the existing land offices and officers in said State.

The SPEAKER. This bill was read on a former day-vester-Is there objection?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I reserve the right to object, and want to ask the gentleman to explain the bill.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, almost the entire western half of South Dakota has not been traversed by railroads until within the last two years. As a result, settlers are coming in and settling that State very rapidly, several thousand each This has made it impossible to accommodate the business of the western part of the State without the creation of an additional land district. The people to be affected by this land district are now going upon the land, and are located a very long distance from any present land office. The purpose of this bill is purely to accommodate the dispatch of public business and make the land office reasonably accessible to the settlers.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many land offices are now in the State?

Mr. MARTIN. Not so many as there were a few years ago. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many now? Mr. MARTIN. There is one at Aberdeen, one at Mitchell, which has been transferred farther into the interior to accommodate the settlers. There is only one besides this one in the western portion of the State, and one on the line between North and South Dakota.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many in all are there in the State?

Mr. MARTIN. There are either three or four in the eastern half of the State; none in the western half, except as stated.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How far do you propose to establish the headquarters of this office from the nearest office already established?

Mr. MARTIN. This proposed office is to be established at the end of a railway. The country to be reached by it is from 50 to 75 miles about, in the immediate vicinity. There is no office nearer many of the settlers who are to be affected by this office than 100 miles or thereabouts, 75 miles of which is without a railroad.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why I asked the gentleman that question was because my information is that it was proposed to establish a headquarters of this office about 50 miles from another office.

Mr. MARTIN. This office is 65 miles, and part of it without a railway, from the nearest land office to the territory affected. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will this require any new officers, any expense to the Government?

Mr. MARTIN. It is paid by the fees of the office.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much does that pay?
Mr. MARTIN. A minimum of $600, a maximum of $3,000, according to the business of the office. But it is all paid from the receipts of the office. I will say to the gentleman that the committee of which the gentleman is a member considered this very fully. The gentleman from Tennessee was not present at the time, however.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I attend the meetings of the committee, but not every day. I can not and will not give all my time to any one committee or subject. I do not see any reason why this should not pass. I withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

UNITED STATES COURTS, SUPERIOR, WIS.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 27311) amending chapter 501 of the United States Statutes at Large, Fifty-sixth Congress, approved May 26, 1900, entitled "An act to provide for the holding of a term of the circuit and district courts of the United States at Superior, Wis."

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the following bill and for consideration of the same in the House at this time. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 591 of the United States Statutes at Large, approved May 26, 1900, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"Section 1. That two terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the western district of Wisconsin shall be held annually at the city of Superior, one term beginning on the fourth Tuesday in January and another term beginning on the second Tuesday in Jaly. Either of said terms may be adjourned by the court, or by said cierk by the direction of the court, to any other day and from time to time at the same place.

"Sec. 2. That in addition to the two clerks now provided for, the circuit and district judges of the western district of Wisconsin shall appoint a clerk, who shall be clerk both of the circuit and district courts for the western district of Wisconsin, who shall reside and keep his office at Superior, Wis., and who shall receive such fees and compensation for services performed by him as are now fixed for clerks and limited by law; and one or more deputies of the clerk of the circuit and district courts may be appointed by the fudges of said courts on the application of the clerk, and may be removed at the pleasure of the judges authorized to make the appointments. In case of the death of the clerk, his deputy or deputies shall, unless removed, continue in office and perform the duties of the clerk in his name until a clerk is appointed and qualified.

"Suc. 3. All summonses, writs, warrants, and processes issued by the said courts or the clerks shall keep in his office the original records of all actions, prosecutions, and special proceedings so commenced or pending therein.

"Sec. 4. All causes triable in either of said courts when the summonses, writs, warrants, and processes shall be issued from the said courts at Superior shall be tried at Superior, unless by consent of parties, or unless otherwise ordered by the court.

"Sec. 5. A grand jury and petit jury sha

On motion of Mr. Jenkins, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RESURVEY OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 24835) authorizing the necessary resurvey of public lands.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior may in his discretion cause to be made, in the manner now provided by law, such resurveys or retracements of the surveys of public lands as, after full investigation, he may deem essential to properly mark the boundaries of the public lands remaining undisposed of: Provided, That no such resurvey or retracement shall be so executed as to impair the bona fide rights or claims of any claimant, entryman, or owner of lands effected by such resurvey or retracement.

With the following amendment:

In line 10 strike out "effected" and insert "affected."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to give the chairman of the committee an opportunity to explain the measure.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, there is some question whether the Secretary of the Interior has authority to make resurveys or retracements of lands which have been once surveyed, the surveys of which have been accepted. It is my opinion he has no such authority. The Secretary has in some instances held that he has that authority. Where resurveys are needed the Congress has, from time to time, passed bills authorizing the resurvey and retracement of definite areas of land. It is to avoid the necessity for the introduction and passage of these bills, and to limit resurveys to those absolutely necessary, that we seek to give this authority to the Secretary. We believe it to be in the interest of economy. We believe that if this authority is vested in him beyond question, he will only make such resurveys and retracements as are absolutely necessary in order to provide for the disposition of public lands.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit a question?
Mr. MONDELL. I shall be glad to.
Mr. STAFFORD. Does this bill cover instances of lapsed lands which have not been included in the original government survey? There are many small tracts that have been overlooked and not included in the original survey.

Mr. MONDELL. It would enable him to make such resur-veys as are necessary to mark the boundaries of public lands remaining undisposed of.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are many instances in Wisconsin of small tracts of land which have not been included in a public survey, but which have been disposed of to bona fide owners, and yet under technical construction of the law are still public lands. I should like to ask whether this law would deprive the bona fide owners of their interest in those lands?

Mr. MONDELL. Not at all; because it provides that no resurvey or retracement shall be so executed as to impair the bona fide rights of any claimant, entryman, or owner of lands affected by such resurveys or retracements.

Mr. STAFFORD. But, as I understand, the department at present has no authority whatsoever to order a resurvey of lands that were not originally covered.

Mr. MONDELL. My opinion is that it has not. There is a difference of opinion in the department, and the department has never, except in one or two instances, exercised that authority. It hesitates to do it without more specific authority.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. How is the expense of these surveys paid, and out of what fund?

Mr. MONDELL. Paid out of the general annual appropria-tion for surveys and resurveys of public lands, which is apportioned by the Commissioner of the General Land Office among the various surveying districts.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman give to the House any estimate of the total cost it will be to the Government if this bill be passed?

Mr. MONDELL. My opinion is that, instead of costing the Government anything, this legislation will save a considerable amount of money.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman then give us any idea as to what expense this bill will entail upon the Government, the bills that will have to be paid out of the general fund that the gentleman has referred to?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, Mr. Speaker, we now annually appropriate from three to four hundred thousand dollars a year for surveys and resurveys of public lands. That has been sufficient in the past and will be more than sufficient in the not distant future; but these resurveys are, in my opinion, sometimes made more extensive under the congressional bills authorizing them than perhaps they would be executed if the Secretary of the Interior had general authority to investigate the matter himself and to make only such retracements as are necessary to outline and fix the boundaries of the public lands remaining undisposed of. And if the gentleman will notice, the bill limits his authority to such resurveys and retracements as may be necessary for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. I understand that a large amount of land has been surveyed and the boundary lines are now missing. What I ask the gentleman is, in all frankness, to state if he can how much expense this work will entail on the Government.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, the gentleman from Illinois must certainly know that it would be utterly impossible for anyone to say just how many miles of the public lines may have to be resurveyed.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman give any idea on the subject; has the gentleman any estimate at all, or any guess upon I say to the gentleman that the purpose of asking the question is to find out whether or not it is desirable in the bill itself to make a limitation as to the cost.

Mr. MONDELL. That would be utterly impossible. In the last three or four years Congress has passed bills without question authorizing the resurvey of from three to four hundred townships. These resurveys cost a great deal of money, and we have authorized them without any question.

Mr. MANN. We have not done it without any question.

Mr. MONDELL. Congress has assumed that the Secretary of the Interior ought to have the power to inquire into and, if found necessary, make resurveys which he considered necessary.

This does not authorize the expenditure of a single dollar.

It simply provides that if the resurveys or retracements are necessary in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior in order to bring about a disposal of the public land, he may make such resurveys and retracements.

The present Secretary believes that he now has that authority. There are people in the department who do not share in that opinion. It is a point upon which there is some difference of opinion. The Secretary clearly ought to have that authority in order that when his attention is brought to a condition in a certain area seeming to warrant a resurvey or retracement he may send a qualified person to examine into the situation and may have the resurvey or retracement executed as

Mr. MANN. The gentleman states that the bill would not authorize the expenditure of a single dollar. The gentleman means that it does not appropriate any money, because it might authorize the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course some money would be spent under this authorization; no more, in any event, than is now being spent, and in the long run less than will be spent if we continue our present system. I suggest that if this was a proposition to allow the Secretary of the Interior from time to time to patch the roof of the Patent Office it would be very difficult to say just how much of an expenditure it would authorize.

Mr. MANN. And I would object, and so would the gentleman from Wyoming, to the passage of such a bill.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think so.

Mr. MANN. No officer of the Government has that authority. MONDELL. These resurveys must be executed if the public lands are to be disposed of. The annual cost of such resurveys is not great. Those of us who live in public-land States have this experience continually where surveys were executed many years ago: Settlers go onto these lands and find no corners, and that means an investigation by the Congressman, the introduction of a bill, the passage of a bill in the House, the passage of a bill in the Senate authorizing the resurvey not only of the territory immediately in question but the surrounding territory, in order that there may be no question but what sufficient territory will be resurveyed.

Now, it is better practice, it is better business practice, to give to the officer charged with the responsibility of the public lands authority to inquire into these questions when raised, and after having inquired into them to authorize such resurvey and retracement as may be necessary, rather than these larger resurveys and retracements which are liable to be executed when Congress places its stamp of approval on authority for the resurvey of a large region. Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say that in what the gentleman tries to get at he and I would probably agree. I think that the passage of a bill like this is desirable if there is some limitation as to the total amount that may be expended by authority of the act. I will not, as far as I am concerned, give unanimous consent to the passage of a bill that permits the Secretary of the Interior, without any restraint whatever, to spend any sum of money he may please, now and hereafter, upon such a matter.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Bon-YNGE] has just made a suggestion which I believe would be satisfactory. Of course these resurveys and retracements must be within the annual appropriation made by Congress.

Mr. MANN. Not at all.

Mr. BONYNGE. Well, put that in the bill.
Mr. MONDELL. I do not think there is any question about it, but if there be any question in the mind of the gentleman, if he will kindly add to the bill language that will keep the expenditure within the annual appropriation, I will be satisfied.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me it would be easier to add something to the following effect: And provided further, that the total expense authorized by this act shall not exceed so and so, whatever is fair, stating the amount of dollars

Mr. MONDELL. As long as we have public lands we occasionally will have to make retracements.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, Congress will still be in session at that

Mr. MONDELL. We all know that Congress each year appropriates for the survey of public lands, and if we provide that these expenditures shall not be above the annual appropriation, that ought to be satisfactory.

Mr. MANN. Here is a man who wants a resurvey. There may be no good occasion for it at all. If there is no limitation on the expense whatever, some department officer considers that there should be a resurvey, for favoritism perhaps, and a resurvey is ordered, but if there is a limitation on the total amount of expense authorized by the act, then the resurvey is considered a little more critically.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, for the present I will object, unless the gentleman accepts my amendment.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

CALAVERAS BIGTREE NATIONAL FOREST.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1574) to create the Calaveras Bigtree National Forest, and for other purposes, and to consider the same in the House at this time, which bill I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

this time, which bill I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture, to secure and protect for all time the big trees scientifically known as Sequoia washingtoniana, is hereby empowered, in his discretion, to obtain for the United States the complete title to any or all of the following-described lands in the State of California: In township 4 north, range 15 east, Mount Diablo meridian, the northeast quarter of section 1; in township 4 north, range 16 east, Mount Diablo meridian, the north half of section 6; in township 5 north, range 15 east, Mount Diablo meridian, the southwest quarter of section 23, and southeast quarter of section 20, northwest quarter of section 23, and southeast quarter of section 23, and southeast quarter of section 36; and in township 5 north, range 16 east, Mount Diablo meridian, the west half of section 28, the east half and southwest quarter of section 33, and such area or areas, as fast as complete title is acquired, shall be known as the Calaveras Bigtree National Forest, and shall be administered, protected, and improved by the Secretary of Agriculture to prolong the existence, growth, and promote the reproduction of said big trees, and to make said national forest accessible and convenient for the public: Provided. That the owners of land acquired hereunder shall convey to the United States full title to any of the above-described areas approved for said hall be reimbursed therefor only in any or all of three ways: They may be given the right to file with the Secretary of the Interior, within sixty days after any such conveyance, selections for an equal area of surveyed, unreserved, unappropriated, nonmineral public lands which shall, if found subject to such lieu selection, be patented to said owners in lieu of the land conveyed, and if any selection is rejected other healt of the land conveyed, and frany selection is rejected of any land conveyed, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture; or an

In lines 13 and 14 strike out the words "and to make said national forest accessible and convenient to the public."

On page 3 strike out lines 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, and up to the word "section" in line 10, and insert the following: "Equal to the amount of timber and wood on the land acquired by the United States under the provisions of this act."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve the right to object. I want to ask the gentleman from California this question: What committee reported the bill?

Mr. SMITH of California. The Committee on the Public

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Was the question as to whether there was any constitutional authority for the Government to buy land to establish a national forest reserve considered by the committee?

Mr. SMITH of California. It was not raised during the consideration by the committee; no, sir.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, there was no consideration of the question whatever.

Mr. SMITH of California. I do not understand the question. Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want to know if there was no consideration by the committee whatever of the question as to whether there was authority under the Constitution to buy land to establish a forest reserve?

Mr. SMITH of California. I think that subject was not brought up and considered at all in the committee. think anyone thought of it. I am sure I did not. The Government has done that in several instances, and in this case it is merely an exchange of land. It does not provide for the purchase. That portion of the bill which refers to the acquiring of moneys from California, and so forth, is stricken out by the amendment I offer, and as it now stands it provides for two things-either the exchange of other lands or the exchange of stumpage for these groves of big trees. The legal question to which the gentleman refers was not considered in the committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is no limitation on the amount of stumpage that the Secretary is authorized to exchange for this land.

Mr. SMITH of California. I am offering an amendment now to limit it to the value of the lumber in the trees that we get.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What is the value of that stumpage? Mr. SMITH of California. Oh, I do not know, I am sure. It is a matter of surveying the trees and finding out. It is left to the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture to make this exchange. The trees are owned by a lumberman at this time. There are two groves containing these extraordinary trees. The trees are said to be the oldest living things on the face of the earth, and according to the estimates they are many thousands of years of age.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand that, and I am heartily in accordance with the gentleman's idea of preserving these trees if we can do so in a constitutional way and without opening a way to rob the Government of its timber or money. I think to pass a loose bill giving unrestricted authority to exchange stumpage may mean that the forests of the Government may be depleted in that way, and I think that outside of any constitutional question the gentleman said that he was advised of one or two precedents for this being done. I do not recall that myself, and I would like to have him inform the House as to what those precedents are.

Mr. SMITH of California. Well, I think there have been bills passed for land that was included in a national park. I know of a bill that passed the Senate about a week ago appropriating money to acquire private holdings that lay within a national park in my district. I had that in mind when I spoke of the precedent just now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this same question arose with reference to the establishment of a national forest reserve in the Appalachian Mountains, and I do not think that bill has been allowed to come before Congress or has been brought before the House.

Mr. SMITH of California. I think there is quite a substantial difference between acquiring property for a utilitarian purpose like the Appalachian forest reserve, and acquiring property which is a natural curiosity, in the nature of a monument.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not see the distinction—I do not draw the distinction which the gentleman does, and I want to ask the gentleman, if he receives unanimous consent-I am willing to waive the constitutional question, as that is a question that can be checked by the Supreme Court of the United States—if the gentleman will agree to an amendment limiting the stumpage absolutely to the stumpage that is now on the land, and also to an amendment agreeing that this bill shall not become a charge upon the Public Treasury.

Mr. SMITH of California. Yes; I think the first amendment is already there now, and if the Clerk will read again the amendment I am offering to the third page of the bill I think that covers the point.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after line 4 and insert: "Equal to the amount of timber and wood on the land acquired by the United States under the provisions of this act."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think that would be satisfactory, as I presume the Secretary of Agriculture would guard the interests under that provision. Now, I would ask the gentleman if he is willing to offer an amendment—if he gets unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill-to the effect that the passage of this bill shall not be a warrant for appropriations from the Public Treasury to carry out this project?

Mr. SMITH of California. Do you mean for the acquisition of the land?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. For the acquisition of the land.

Mr. SMITH of California. Yes; I would accept such an amendment, but I hardly understand the necessity for it. bill provides only two ways. One is to exchange lands for it; the other to exchange stumpage for it. Now, I do not know how anybody could incur any obligation of a financial nature.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It might be a warrant to carry on an appropriation bill hereafter—an appropriation from the Treasury for that purpose—and I do not think it ought to be done.

Mr. SMITH of California. I am certain—
Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not desire to object to the gentleman's bill if he will give the House an opportunity to vote on that proposition; but I insist if the bill is considered that there be a limit put on that matter.

Mr. SMITH of California. If the gentleman will state clearly what he wants, I think I will agree to it. Will it not be sufficient to leave that subject of appropriations to be dealt with when we come to it? I have no thought or desire whatever to ever come here and ask for anything to help this out in the way of an appropriation. I can assure the gentleman of that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the bill ought to be limited, because if it is not limited now it may be used as a lever to put an appropriation in an appropriation bill and not make it subject to a point of order that it is contrary to existing law.

Mr. SMITH of California. State the amendment you wish, and I think I will agree to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The amendment I desire placed in the bill is to this effect: Provided, that nothing contained in this act shall warrant an appropriation from the Treasury for the purchase or payment for any portion of this land.

Mr. SMITH of California. I will accept that.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, still reserving the right to object, I would like to know if this bill is based upon any actual knowledge of whether these trees can be acquired.

Mr. SMITH of California. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, what is that knowledge? Mr. SMITH of California. A man by the name of Whiteside, living, I think, in Minnesota at some place, owns the principal part of the groves, and he has stated to people in California, who have been interested in having this accomplished, that he would trade. He is in the lumber business, a wealthy lumberman, and he says he would rather have lumber than beauty. He is quite willing to exchange this for timber that would be nearer transportation, that he could mill and put on the market.

Mr. SHERLEY. Has he ever made a definite proposition, or has it ever been determined what he considers a fair trade?

Mr. SMITH of California. We are exchanging this for an equal amount of lumber.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand, but an equal amount of lumber does not necessarily represent an equal amount of value, because locality has a great deal to do with value. Now, to whom do you leave the discretion of determining what is to be given in exchange?

Mr. SMITH of California. The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture, by the terms of the bill, negotiate the trade.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am in such hearty sympathy with the desire to preserve these trees that I dislike to make any objection, but the information that the House is getting as to the terms of this bill is practically nil. Even the amendments, as I heard them read, are not understandable from the floor; and the report itself does not give me any understanding of what the terms of the bill are as it will be passed.

Mr. SMITH of California. I am adding some amendments to further limit the amount that they may give in exchange for the trees, making it closer, so that they may not be permitted to be extravagant in what they give.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not mean to doubt the accuracy of the gentleman's statement. But we have only a statement. We can not tell a thing from what has been read here of the legislation we are proposing to pass.

Mr. SMITH of California. I will ask the Clerk to read it again.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to have the bill read as proposed to be amended.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will be read as it would read if the amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture, to secure and protect for all time the big trees scientifically known as Sequola washingtoniana, is hereby empowered, in his discretion, to obtain for the United States the complete title to any or all of the following-described lands in the State of California: * * * And such area or areas, as fast as complete title is acquired, shall be known as the Calaveras Bigtree National Forest, and shall be administered and protected by the Secretary of Agriculture to prolong the existence, growth, and promote the reproduction of said big trees: Provided, That the owners of land acquired hereunder shall convey to the United States full title to any of the above-described areas approved for said national forest by the Secretary of Agriculture, the completeness of such title to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior in each case, and shall be reimbursed therefor only in any or all of three ways: They may be given the right to file with the Secretary of the Interior, within sixty days after any such conveyance, selections for an equal area of surveyed, unreserved, unappropriated, nonmineral public lands which shall, if found subject to such lieu selection, be patented to said owners in lieu of the land conveyed, and if any selection is rejected, other selections may be made under conditions applicable to the one rejected; or the Secretary of Agriculture may grant to any such conveying owner the right to cut from national forest reserve land an amount of timber and wood equal to the amount of timber and wood on the land acquired by the United States under the provisions of this act.

Mr. SHERLEY. May I ask the gentleman a question?

May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SMITH of California. Certainly.
Mr. SHERLEY. If I understood the reading, it practically gives to the owner of these trees a right to an equal amount of timber anywhere in the public domain?

Mr. SMITH of California. Wherever the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior may agree to give it

Mr. SHERLEY. Is that last statement warranted by the bill? Does it not give him the option to file a claim where he pleases, and the only question left for the two Secretaries to determine is as to the quantity and not the location?

Mr. SMITH of California. I think so.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does not the gentleman think that is a pretty broad proposition? In other words, while these trees have a very great and inestimable value because of their character, in a commercial sense their value is limited? Now, you are giving to the man the right to have an equal amount of stumpage anywhere that he may choose in the public domain.

Mr. SMITH of California. I do not discover that it specifies any particular part of the United States where he is to take the stumpage. The value of the stumpage is the thing we are interested in.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; but the value of the stumpage is altogether determined by where it is situated.

Mr. SMITH of California. That is right, and the Secretaries, I think, could be trusted to see that he did not get an excessive They are not obliged to give him an equal amount.

Mr. SHERLEY. Let me ask the gentleman another question. Has any effort been made by the State of California to get possession of these lands?

Mr. SMITH of California. Not anything of a concerted nature; no. The experience of California in controlling a national park, as we had it when we controlled the Yosemite, was not very satisfactory.

Mr. SHERLEY. But California might go ahead and acquire title to the land under consideration, and then deed it to the United States as in the Yosemite Park case.

Mr. SMITH of California. The State of California did not acquire the Yosemite Valley in that way. It acquired it as trustee from the Federal Government and afterwards returned the trust.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to ask the gentleman about this bill, as it was practically impossible to hear for the noise. I want to ask the gentleman if an excessive value has not been placed by Mr. Whitesides on the stumpage that he owns in the State of California? Now, I am one of those who are interested in the preservation of those trees if it is possible, but I notice on page 2 of the report, in the paragraph at the bottom, it is stated "The appraisement is liberal." The suggestion is made that it might be excessively liberal. Now, when we are dealing for this timber, it is not timber that is very valuable for lumber purposes. Now, is it not possible that if this exchange is made that, as they have overvalued that which they are to transfer, they may undervalue that which the Government will give in exchange?

Mr. SMITH of California. We have got to trust these mat-ters to some one. If you are going to make a trade, you have to leave it to some one to make the terms, and I do not know that you can leave it to anyone better than the two Secretaries.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But there may be no use in making such trades. I think, in making the trade, it should be made by those who are disinterested.

Mr. SMITH of California. Well, with the limitations to be placed on how the land is to be acquired, I do not see why the Secretary himself, who suggests that the appraisal has been too high, will not probably see that a new one is made so as to protect the Government.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am anxious not to oppose any proper measure that will have these big trees preserved, and will do anything fair and right to have it done.

Mr. SMITH of California. I am glad the House is of the mind to do anything to preserve these great wonders. In order to make it possible, we have got to trust to some representative of the Government to do what is fair, and I think these two Secretaries can be trusted as well as any other officials we might select. It is not possible to come to Congress and submit the matter to Congress as to exactly what is right. I think these two Secretaries can be trusted to give the Government a fair deal.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The inquiry has been made, which Secretaries it refers to—those that are coming in or those that are now in.

Mr. SMITH of California. That depends upon how soon we get the bill passed.

Mr. SHERLEY. We have been asked in my committee for $1,000,000 to be added to the annual appropriations for the investigation of fraudulent patents to part of the public domain; and judging by the past, we can not rely so very much upon what Secretaries may do to protect the public lands. Therefore, I think that while this matter is important, it can at least wait a day or two, when we can have presented to us something more of a detailed statement than we have.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. SHERLEY. For the present I object.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN THE NAVY.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, I renew the request I made yesterday for unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the consideration of the bill H. R. 6252; and couple with that the request that the bill be not read, as it was read in full and explained vesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6252) to promote the administration of justice in the

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER. The bill was reported yesterday.

Mr. KEIFER. It was read yesterday and printed in the RECORD.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. KEIFER. There is an amendment to be offered that will not take any time, and it will be accepted. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I offer for adoption an amendment which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The committee amendments will first be disposed of.

The amendments of the committee were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio offers the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 13, after the word "litigated," insert "and such officer shall have power to pardon any punishment such court may adjudge."

Mr. ROBERTS. That amendment is accepted on the part of the committee.

Mr. KEIFER. That conforms to the provision for courtmartial by the garrison court in the army.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CORWIN M. HOLT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 4931) to correct the military record of Corwin M. Holt, with a Senate amendment, which was read.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

GEORGE M. VOORHEES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 17572) for the relief of George M. Voorhees, with a Senate amendment, which was read.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 26915, making appropriations for the army.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the army appropriation bill, with Mr. Perkins in the chair.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF.

Army War College: For expenses of the Army War College, being for the purchase of the necessary stationery, office, toilet, and desk furniture, text-books, books of reference, scientific and professional papers and periodicals, printing and binding, maps, police utensils, and for all other absolutely necessary expenses, including $25 per month additional to regular compensation to chief clerk of division for superintendence of the War College building, $10,000.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. I fail to find in this bill anything which was included in the last bill prohibiting the competition of marine and army bands with civilian musicians.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That was carried in the provision making the increase of the pay of the army. That being permanent law, will never be found in this bill again, but when estimating for the pay of bands it will be estimated in accordance with that law

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I merely asked the question to make sure that that is the construction put upon it by the War Department. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Signal Service of the Army: For expenses of the Signal Service of the Army, as follows: Purchase, equipment, and repair of field electric telegraphs, signal equipments and stores, binocular glasses, telescopes, heliostats, and other necessary instruments, including necessary meteorological instruments for use on target ranges; war balloons; telephone apparatus (exclusive of exchange service) and maintenance of the same; electrical installations and maintenance at military posts; fire control and direction apparatus and material for field artillery; maintenance and repair of military telegraph lines and cables, including salaries of civilian employees, supplies, and general repairs, and other expenses connected with the duty of collecting and transmitting information for the army by telegraph or otherwise, $250,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 11, page 5, the word "two"—

I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. Mr. HULL of Iowa. Of course the point of order should be determined first. I do not want to amend the paragraph and then have it go out on a point of order.

Mr. MACON. I do not want to make a point of order unless the paragraph is subject to it, but I reserve the point of order to find out if we have been appropriating for war balloons here-

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; we have, right along.

Mr. MACON. Is there any existing law that authorizes them? Mr. HULL of Iowa. Just exactly the same as the others. There is no existing law authorizing many of the other things carried in this paragraph, so far as I know, except the general law that whatever is for the support and development of the army goes to this committee. The gentleman can also raise the same objection to telephone operators, electrical installations and maintenance at military posts, and the rest of it on the same grounds.

The CHAIRMAN. What point of order does the gentleman from Arkansas make?

Mr. MACON. I reserve the point of order against the words war balloons," in line 3, page 5. Unless it can be shown that it is in accordance with existing law, I make the point of order. The gentleman has said there was no existing law authorizing it. I do not think it a wise provision, and as a legislator here I object to it, and therefore make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas makes a point of order against the words "war balloons." Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I only desire to be heard to this extent, that this development of supplies for the army and its equipment is not provided for by any specific law other than the act creating the Signal Corps. It has been carried on the appropriation bill, I think, for at least ten years in the exact language that it is now, except as to post telephone exchanges. That is of more recent origin. It is the development of the care of the army, its proper administration and equipment, and, in my judgment, does not require specific law. If it did, it would make it so that no improvement could be made without first passing a bill through Congress to provide for making each specific improvement.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is this money to experiment with war balloons or to buy them as military appliances?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. For experimentation.

Mr. GILLETT. Is the amendment you propose to offer, of $500,000, all for war balloons?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will ask the gentleman if other countries are not also experimenting with the war balloon for the purpose of increasing the efficiency of their armies?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; of course they are; but that is a question that is not in order to be discussed until the point of order is disposed of.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have no copy of the bill or I would not have asked the question.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman that if there is no amendment made in the appropriation, they will still carry on the experimentations they have been making for ten years under the provisions of this law. I think gentle-men will understand that there must be a certain latitude in order to enable certain lines of improvement to be carried on as we go along,

Now, I think if any new legislation was put in here it would be subject to a point of order, but the fact that it is the same as the post telegraph changes, and perhaps two-thirds of the

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is not the law elastic enough for the War Department or the Navy Department to experiment with instruments that it may or may not need to use in the army and navy?

Mr. GILLETT. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think there is a difference in the legality of a small appropriation for some little incidental thing and the appropriation of a half a million dollars for new service, like balloons?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The question of appropriation is one that is within the jurisdiction of the House, and whether it is subject to a point of order or not is not affected by the size of the appropriation, whether it is $10 or $10,000,000.

Mr. GILLETT. That is just the question I wanted to ask the gentleman. Does not the gentleman think that an appropriation for a small article costing $10 might be held in order, while for a large embarkation on a new enterprise which costs half a million dollars it might properly be considered new legislation and requiring some authority of law before you could embark in it?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman and I do not look at this in the same light. The point of order is to strike out the words "war balloons." That has been carried in the bill for years. Now, the question as to how much shall be given is a question that must be determined after we have determined whether we will appropriate anything or not. If the point of order is sustained, we can not appropriate any sum.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Is the subject of experimenting with war bal-Mr. MANN. loons a work that is now in progress in the army?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It has been for some years; and I will say to the gentleman, further, that I understand the reason that this appropriation is so small it is only to pay for a very small part of that experimentation. The larger part of it has been taken out of money given by the Committee on Appropriations, and that really there was no particular authority for it except that it was set aside for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. Have the experiments that have been made by the War Department been made under this provision or appropriation !

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not the larger ones; no. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who is perhaps as good a parliamentarian as there is in the House, that taking it out of any appropriation heretofore would not settle the question of inrisdiction.

Mr. MANN. I was not referring to the question of jurisdic-on. I should assume that if the War Department had adopted the experimentation with war balloons as a method of warfare, it would be very likely a work or object in progress just as much as changing the ordnance would be. No one assumes that it required an act of Congress to change the description or character of a big gun to a small one.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am much obliged to the gentleman for the suggestion. It is clearly a work that has been prosecuted for eight or ten years.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman know of any law authorizing the purchase of guns or swords or other instruments with which to kill people? Is it not done as a part of the establishment?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; as part of a work not first definitely authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. This discussion is going on upon a point of order upon which the Chair must finally rule, and the Chair desires that gentlemen will cease conversation and that the committee may be in order.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I want to say something on the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand the gentleman from Iowa has the floor on the point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not desire to say anything further at this time, unless somebody wishes to ask a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will then recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Prince] on the point of order.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Macon] made a point of order against the words "war balloons," on page 5, line 3, of the bill. On page 4, line 22, you will find the subject under discussion, "Office of the Chief Signal Officer, Signal Service of the Army." The words "war balloons" have been carried in bills prior to this measure. The words "war balloons" are a designation of a certain kind of signaling which is necessary for the Signal Service of the Army.

The army has been operating under the use of war balloons. It is a continuing policy of the method now in operation that we are seeking to continue by the use of the words "war balloons." It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the words "war balloons" are not subject to a point of order, for it is a continuation of an appropriation carrying out a work in progress which is necessary under the views of the War Department as a part of the Signal Service of the Army.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. PRINCE. I will. Mr. SHERLEY. Have not estimates for experimentation in war balloons, the purchase of war balloons, been sent to the Committee on Appropriations having in charge the fortifications bill, and is not the work that the gentleman speaks of as in progress the work which has been carried on as a result of the expenditure of appropriations carried in the fortifications bill?

Mr. PRINCE: It is quite likely that the chief of the Signal Office has been before the Committee on Appropriations. is only another evidence of the misfortune of having an appropriation divided between two committees.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman please answer my question?

Mr. PRINCE. I think that the question of fortifications, as well as the one under discussion, properly belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs and ought not to be considered in any particular by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SHERLEY. For this observation I am indebted, but will the gentleman now please answer the question as to whether the work in progress is not being carried on from the appropriations made in the fortifications bill?

Mr. PRINCE. It may be carried on in both.

Mr. SHERLEY. Which is the fact, because that is the important question in this parliamentary discussion.

Mr. PRINCE. I don't know as I can answer the gentleman directly, but I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to answer that question.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I can answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. PRINCE. I yield for the answer to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman from New York to supplement what I have to say. question has nothing to do with the question of jurisdiction, because it has been held uniformly that the mere fact of an estimate being sent to one committee or the other gives that committee no jurisdiction. It has nothing to do with it as a matter of fact. It is in the Book of Estimates, and not under the head of the "Military establishment," so it was not brought to the attention of the Committee on Military Affairs until after the bill was reported.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman contends that it is in order because it is in continuation of a work in progress, I want to know what work is in progress, and whether the work in progress does not get its status by virtue of an appropriation carried in the fortifications bill.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It makes no difference, in my judgment, where it gets its status. As a matter of fact, it is from both committees

Mr. SHERLEY. I differ with the gentleman in that.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I know the gentleman differs with me, but I think the gentleman is wrong.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman's position is right, you can appropriate in the war bill for any other work in progress.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; not at all. Answering the gentle-man's question further, I will say that in my judgment this work in progress has been carried on by this bill and by the other bill also.

Mr. PARSONS. That is it exactly.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. So that so far as the work in progress is concerned, it is in progress by appropriations by Congress, and it affects a corps of the army entirely distinct from the The only reason that I can see for its going to fortifications. the gentleman's committee is because under the appropriations for fortifications the Board of Fortifications is allotted some money without going to Congress for specific reasons.

One of the reasons was to get money wher-Mr. SHERLEY.

ever they could get it.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman permit a question? Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to yield the floor until I have an opportunity to make one other observation.

Mr. PARKER. Then will the gentleman from Illinois permit question?

Mr. PRINCE.

Mr. PARKER. Is it not true that the balloons might be needed for fortifications in order to spy around and see what was going on, and likewise might be needed for the Signal Service Corps of the Army, who were carrying on general signal service for the whole country, but would be in each case a different style of balloon?

Mr. SHERLEY. And they might not be needed in either case, Mr. COCKRAN. That is true of every other appropriation. Mr. PRINCE. In addition to what I have said, Mr. Chairman, one of my colleagues, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], tells me that at Omaha they have a balloon house, a war balloon for signaling purposes, and that he understands that it is exclusively under the control and management of the Signal-Service Corps, evidently showing that this is, as I have stated to the chairman, a work in progress and not subject to a point of order.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order. There are two experiments going on with war balloons, one under the appropriation in the fortifications bill and the other under this appropriation. Under the appropriation in the fortifications bill prizes were offered, under which the Wright brothers and Herring competed and are to be awarded prizes if they meet the tests; but under this appropriation the Signal Corps not only has constructed a balloon house at Omaha, but it has purchased a balloon—a war balloon—which is called "Dirigible No. 1," paid for entirely out of this appropriation. If we increase this appropriation, we will continue this work of building war balloons, and they will be called "Dirigibles Nos. 1 and 2," clearly showing that it is a work in progress, entirely made up out of this appropriation and distinct from the uses to which the fortifications bill provision has been put.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word on the point of order. This appropriation is supported on the ground that it is a work in progress. As I understand the meaning of that rule, it is not that a department, to take this illustration of balloons, by voting a toy balloon in one year can thereby establish a work in progress which ever after will be a foundation upon which to rest the claim that they have jurisdiction over the subject because of that work in progress, but I understand the rule to mean that the work in progress must be some specific work that is of some determinate nature; that it is not a mere indefinite work. The gauging of streams, for instance, is parallel to this and has been held to be not a work in progress because it is an indefinite work, and so it seems to me this experimentation in ballooning is not such a work as comes under the rule, because it is an indefinite and indeterminate project. It must be some specific definite work, and, therefore, it seems to me that this point of order should be sustained.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I have but a word to say. The Committee on Military Affairs by the rules have all bills as to the military establishment-that is, the army-and the public defense, including appropriations for its support. War balloons are no new things. They were used in the civil war. War balloons are only changing in their form, and it is not fair to say that the work being done is altogether experimental. It is work that has been done ever since the balloon was used in war and the endeavor has been to get the best, and the bill itself commits us to no indeterminate process of experimentation. It recognizes only that the use of war balloons has so increased, and the money that is needed for them has so increased, and its need for the Signal Service is so much a part of the national defense that their purchase ought to be specifically recognized in the bill as the purchase of military arms for a mobile army. Now, the continuance of a public work is applicable because this bill does not provide for any specific thing at any special point, but provides for the entire national defense by a mobile army so that whatever arm is necessary for that mobile army, even if it were a new kind of explosive, can be authorized in this bill. We have authorized the purchase of nitrates, we have authorized the purchase of new kinds of powder and new kinds of arms, and we certainly can authorize the purchase of a well-known form of military signal for the use of the Signal Corps.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to submit a few observations on the point of order. I notice in the bill, in the same paragraph, authority for the "purchase, equipment, and repair of field electric telegraphs." There is no provision of law for that. Also, "signal equipments and stores, binocular glasses." There is no provision under the law for that. "Telglasses." There is no provision under the law for that. "Telescopes;" there is no specific provision of law for that; and various "instruments for use on target ranges." There is no specific provision of law for that. Now, what is the situation as to these items? Are they subject to the point of order or are they in order as carrying on a work or object in progress; and if so, what is the work or object in progress? Not merely the purchase of these specific items, but the preparation of the country for its military preservation. That work or object in progress is the maintenance of the army. Now, while it is true in my judgment you could not insert entirely new items in the bill, when the work has commenced, when the army is making use of those instruments, they become a part and parcel of the work or object in progress, which is the proper maintenance of the army.

Mr. GILLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MANN. In just a moment. As to the subject of war balloons the department is now experimenting in the use of war balloons. Are they part of the work or object in progress? How can you make a distinction between war balloons and necessary instruments for use on target ranges? You can not maintain an army with efficiency without instruments for use on target ranges, and there is no specific law for that.

Mr. MACON. Can it not be done without balloons? not done in the war between Russia and Japan? Was it not done in the war waged by England against South Africa? And was it not done in the war between the United States and Spain?

Mr. MANN. It may be possible to maintain an army with sufficient efficiency without war balloons; but it has now become, in my opinion, a part of the maintenance of the army, and has been carried in the appropriation bills for years.

The question arises as to which committee has jurisdiction of the item, whether it be the Committee on Appropriations in the fortifications bill or the Committee on Military Affairs in the army bill. It seems to me that the question is settled by the existing law. The last appropriation act specifically provided for war balloons. Congress itself has by its own action indicated that the Committee on Military Affairs has jurisdiction of this item, because for ten years it has included the item in the army appropriation act.

Now, it may be true that the Committee on Appropriations also has jurisdiction. For instance, we appropriate for telephones in the fortification service and we appropriate for telephones in the military posts under the jurisdiction of this It can not be said that because one committee has jurisdiction to report an appropriation for telephones that therefore the other committee has not. We appropriate for ordnance in the fortifications bill; we appropriate for ordnance in the army bill. It can not be said that because the one committee has jurisdiction over ordnance the other committee has not. And it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the construction and use of war balloons has now become a part and parcel of the work or object in progress, to wit, the maintenance of an efficient army, and that, so far as the jurisdiction is concerned—
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that so far as the question of jurisdiction is concerned his mind is entirely clear. He does not care to hear any further argument on that point, He would like to hear on the point of order as to whether it is new legislation, and consequently obnoxious to the rule.

Mr. MACON. Before the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]

mr. MACON. Before the gentleman from Inhols (arrivally) proceeds further, I want to say—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. MACON. I am anxious to do those things that are for the best interests of this country, and if the gentleman can cite a single instance where a war balloon has played any concite a single instance where a war balloon has played any considerable part in connection with any single war engagement within the lifetime of the gentleman, I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me to answer him, no one could have cited ten days ago any case where the wireless telegraph had saved hundreds of lives in a shipwreck at sea. The time for citing the case in reference to balloons will come after they have saved possibly hundreds of millions of dollars and maybe hundreds and thousands of lives, and possibly a great many more.

Mr. MACON. Did the National Government, however, appropriate funds for the purpose of establishing that great scientific development that caused the saving of twelve hundred lives?

Mr. MANN. For years, I may say to the gentleman, we have appropriated in several branches of the Government for the development of wireless telegraphy, and the efforts of our country in that respect have been of incalculable value to the whole world, and especially to our own country.

The gentleman said a while ago that none of us Mr. MACON. knew up to ten days ago that such a thing as the saving of hundreds of lives by the instrumentality of wireless telegraphy would ever be done. We did not know that the wireless telegraphy would be the cause of the saving of over twelve hundred lives at one time, it is true, but we knew several years ago that it would be done if the occasion ever arose to afford an opportunity to do so. But you can not show me anything that these war balloons have ever done, or what you will do with them to save that number of lives.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me for a question?

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I venture to state an historical fact which may shed some light on the question propounded by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON]. balloon-and it might be fairly called a "war balloon"-did perform a very signal part in the war between France and Ger-When the Prussian lines surrounded Paris and the provisional government established after the fall of the Empire was confined in the city, Leon Gambetta escaped from Paris in a balloon and organized the national defense which continued the French resistance for several months.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, on the question of legislation, it seems to me the rule provides that legislation on an appropriation bill shall not be in order, but it also provides that the item is in order if it is carrying on a work or object in Now, I do not see how you can strike out this item without striking out almost everything in this bill, and absolutely, if carried into effect, destroy the very object now of maintaining an army, because merely appropriating for the officers and enlisted men of the army is not sufficient. is no authority in law except the appropriation bill for the purchase of a dollar's worth of arms or ordnance of any

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would like to say just a word or two upon the point of order. I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that it is necessary to go beyond the argument of the gentleman from Illinois. It seems to me that it is conclusive; but I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the act of 1890, pertaining to the Signal Corps, which prescribed certain duties that were known and definite, and then adds this:

And all other duties usually pertaining to military signals.

Now, I want to call the attention of the Chair to the report of the department, and what they say here in regard to recon-

Reconnoissance in war will hereafter be more thorough than in the past, and commanding generals will have more accurate information. This will not always make their task easier, but neither will ignorance of the enemy's positions or actions be an excuse for making mistakes in strategy and tactics in the future. Indeed, the commander in chief who is a good strategist and a tactician will profit by this new war material, but he who is weak in both respects must suffer from them if his adversary has the ability to properly utilize the better information he receives.

Now, to-day we have appropriations that carry the telegraph lines over the field of battle right up next to the troops, at all times keeping headquarters in connection with the most remote parts of the army. In our modern warfare the Russian army in Manchuria was scattered over 60 miles of front. The Japanese army covered 60 miles of front. If a general is to keep the whole of his force at work and carry out his plans, there has to be some way of managing it, and the report goes on:

Dirigible balloons and air ships, therefore, will not make strategy, as an art, any easier, but they will facilitate the execution of sound strategic plans by furnishing better, more definite, more complete, and more comprehensive information regarding the enemy's positions and forces.

This department is authorized to develop this, and under the organic act was authorized to go into anything that would pertain to military signaling, and one of the great benefits of this whole balloon system is military signaling.

Just one word. As suggested by the gentleman from New York, for more than two years aeronautics have been practiced by the Signal Corps, experimentally. At Leavenworth and all the maneuver camps we have had them, showing how they can detect the position of the enemy and signal headquarters from the balloon.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Chairman, that this point of order may be speedily withdrawn, according to the promise of the gentleman from Arkansas, I will say that in the spring of 1862, as a signal officer, I was occupying an army position opposite Cock Pit Point, on the Potomac, where a balloon was supplied with which we watched the other side of the Potomac. After the battle of Malvern Hill, also, a balloon was used all the time we laid there, and that balloon was attached to a wagon and swung above the trees and used to observe the enemy until we were below Williamsburg, showing that the use of balloons is not new. Now, as the gentleman said if he could have shown him one instance where a balloon had been used he would withdraw the point of order, I ask him now to withdraw it.

Mr. MACON. In the performance of duty. Mr. CAPRON. Oh, no.

Mr. MACON. There was another qualification I made to that, and that was it must have occurred in the lifetime of the gentleman from Illinois. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAPRON. Why, the gentleman from Illinois was an old man then. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. MACON. I withdraw the point of order. Mr. SHERLEY. I renew the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I would be willing to accept the libel to have the point of order withdrawn. [Renewed laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas withdraw the point of order?

Mr. MACON. Yes; I withdraw the point of order.
Mr. SHERLEY. I renew it. [Cries of "Rule!"]
Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HOBSON. I desire to be heard on the point of order.
Mr. Chairman, the situation to-day in regard to the status of the dirigible balloon is analogous to the situation that prevailed in 1885 as to battle ships. When we first determined to build battle ships

Mr. HULL of Iowa. A point of order on the point of order. After debate and after the point of order has been withdrawn, can it be renewed?

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. HOBSON (continuing). The first battle ship authorized was the Texas. It was known as "battle ship No. 1." The second authorized was the Maine, and was known as "No. 2." Then came the three battle ships of the Oregon class, Nos. 3, 4, and 5. We are now building Nos. 29 and 30. It would have been just as much in order to strike out the authorization of battle ships Nos. 2, 3, 4, and 5 after battle ship No. 1 had been ordered as to strike out the present provision, which will be for dirigibles

Nos. 2 and 3. The same rule that applies to battle ships on the naval appropriation bill must apply to our balloons on the military appropriation bill now that such balloons have been built and tested and employed in active service, as has been dirigible No. 1.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I will discuss the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Before I begin, I should like to ask the gentleman from Alabama when we first established the Signal Service in the army?

Mr. HOBSON. I should like to give the gentleman correct information, and therefore I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to supply it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I thought the gentleman could tell me.

Mr. HAY. It was used during the civil war.

Mr. HOBSON. I know it is very old. It has been long established.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It certainly has been established Mr. Chairman, the telegraph, the telephone, the courier, the war balloon, and all that sort of thing are a part of the signal-service system, and I think I can show the Chair where, in former appropriation bills, Congress has almost said "bal-In these bills Congress has construed the term "Signal Service" by its acts. Let me read you:

For expenses of the Signal Service of the Army, as follows: Purchase, equipment, and repair of field electric telegraphs, signal equipments and stores, binocular glasses, telescopes, heliostats, and other necessary instruments, including absolutely necessary meteorological instruments for use on target ranges; telephone apparatus (excluding exchange service) and maintenance of the same.

The CHAIRMAN. From what does the gentleman read? Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am reading from the United States Statutes at Large, volume 27.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman reading from an appropriation bill?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; from an appropriation bill, for the purpose of giving the Chair a congressional definition of the words "signal service."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that war balloons have been repeatedly appropriated for in appropriation bills.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am trying to get a congressional definition or construction of the term "signal service" or "signal-service system." It operates by "telegraph or otherwise." Those words are used in this appropriation bill, which became law. I will continue the reading from this appropriation (bill) law:

Maintenance and repair of military telegraph lines, including salaries of civilian employees, supplies, and general repairs, and other expenses connected with the duty of collecting and transmitting information for the army by telegraph or otherwise.

Now, if a balloon is not a carrier used for the transmission of intelligence, and if a balloon can not be covered in that language, "or otherwise," I hardly see what would cover it, unless we used the word "balloon." The signal-service system sends and seeks information by the "telegraph or otherwise." Thus Congress has defined "signal service."

Now, I find in other similar bills the same language, in effect, as to existing law. The Constitution provides that the Congress "shall declare war," "raise and support armies," "provide and maintain a navy." The Signal Service is part of the army service, and the law so declares. By the general law, I presume, the navy has experimented with smokeless powder, and I have the report of the Department of Commerce and Labor stating it did so experiment, and perhaps the War Department has done so. Under its general authority to "maintain" the Navy Department, under the general law establishing the navy, that department must have the right to experiment from time to time with things that will build up and support and "maintain" the navy, and the same must be true as to the army. The de-partment has experimented with various other processes for the same purposes. So, I say, under the Constitution and the general law creating these departments and Signal Service, to carry information, under a proper construction shows that there is existing law sufficient to justify the Chair in overruling the point of order, and also because the Signal Service is a continuing and unfinished system or work.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The question presented is one of considerable embarrassment to the Chair, and is undoubtedly close to the border line. several considerations that have been advanced in the debate, which are entitled to weight. The point is first made, as I understand, that the Committee on Military Affairs has not jurisdiction of appropriations for this subject. On that the Chair has no doubt. The balloons, for which appropriations are asked to be made, are to be used in connection with the Signal Service of the Army. There can be no question that the Signal Service of the Army is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs.

It may be that balloons could be used in reference to some other branch of the government work under the charge of some other committee, and that the question of the application of war balloons for such a use might be under the jurisdiction of some other committee. However that may be, it is not for the Chair to say now. It is sufficient to say when the question arises for the use of war balloons for the Signal Service of the Army that it seems to the Chair that that is plainly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The next question that arises, and a far more serious one, is whether this appropriation asked for by the committee has been authorized by existing law so far as the statutes are con-cerned creating the signal service. From the superficial examination which the Chair has been able to give, it does not seem that there is any specific provision that would cover such a field of activity as this. The signal service is authorized to connect points by suitable telegraph lines, and to use life-saving stations, signal stations, and so forth, provided in the specific act by which the signal service is created. It hardly seems to the Chair that under the statutory authority it can be said that there was any authorization of such a work as this. But it is argued, however, that under the rule of construction which is established in the procedure of this House, this may be regarded as a work in progress; that the further appropriation for war balloons may be regarded as a continuation of a work now in progress in connection with the Signal Service Corps of the

That rule has been variously applied. It has been held that an additional appropriation for new ships, for instance, was the continuation of a work carried on for the construction of a navy. It has been assumed in practice, apparently, that the purchase of guns, cannon, for which I think there is no specific authority in so many words, was yet a continuation of the work of carrying on the maintenance and equipment of the

On the other hand, it was held, for instance, that when an appropriation was asked for the navy for a new type of boat not for the construction of such a boat as had been used, but the construction of a new type of boat—that that was not in order on the naval appropriation bill and could not be regarded as a continuation of a work in progress.

From these decisions arises the difficulty in passing upon this specific question. But, on the whole, this seems to the Chair a reasonable rule to apply. The wholesome rule that prevents new legislation getting on an appropriation bill is one of great value. The rule which prevents appropriations for objects which need specific legislation is an exceedingly wholesome one, and yet, on the other hand, I do not think we should go so far as to strain it or to prevent appropriations being continued which anyone can see are fairly and reasonably incidental to and inherent in the necessities of the service.

Now, it appears that for years war balloons have been used in connection with the signal service. The gentleman from Massachusetts suggests that this might be regarded as a mere work of experimentation that had never reached the dignity of what should be regarded as a work actually underway, in furtherance of the objects of the army. But the Chair does not think, on the whole, that is fairly stated. War balloons, whether of more or less value, unquestionably are used, and have been used, in connection with the signal service.

It seems to the Chair that a balloon is a mode of operation of obtaining information, of inspecting the condition of the surrounding country, and seems to inhere closely to and be naturally a part of the work done by the Signal Service of the Army. That is the object of the Signal Service—to obtain information, to spy out the land-and in connection with that work it is said that these balloons have been used to a greater or less extent. The use of the balloon seems to the Chair so largely to be inherent with the character of the work required to be done, that he is inclined to rule that it is proper, and must be regarded as a continuation of a work undertaken and forming a portion of the work done by the Signal Service Corps.

If this was brought before the Chair as a suggestion for installing some new large force of air ships, in a measure independent and not incidental to existing service, or some question of that sort, without suggesting any ruling upon that question, still anyone can see that that would present a different proposition and be regarded from a different standpoint. But continuing the appropriation for many years made for war balloons, it seems to the Chair, may fairly be regarded as the continuation of a work in progress, and therefore the Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Arkansas. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 11, strike out "two" and insert "seven," so as to read "$750,000."

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, to that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Let us have the point of order disposed of. I do not desire to say a word on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Massachusetts on the point of order.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, it was suggested to me by the ruling of the Chair, in which I understood the Chair to say that if this contemplated a large establishment, a new air ship, that then it would be a different question from what it is now. It seems to me that is exactly what it does.

Mr. PRINCE. How does the gentleman know for what purpose this is to be used? There are a number of items in the measure.

Mr. GILLETT. That is the reason I prefer to have the gentleman proceed with his argument first.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am inclined to think that the point made by the gentleman from Illinois is well taken. We never know for what work these appropriations are to be used.

Mr. MACON. We would like to know for what this amendment is.

Mr. MANN. Let the point of order be determined. Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to call the Chair's attention simply to this fact, that this paragraph carries with it a large number of articles to be provided for by the Signal Corps, and it is within the power of the House to determine whether it wants any more than this or less than this.

Mr. GILLETT. I will admit that the point of order, of course, on its face, is preposterous. It was simply made because of the suggestion of the Chair that if it was attempted to establish a large air ship or a branch of the service, it might be subject to a point of order. I venture to say the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull] will admit that is the purpose of this amendment, and it is only upon the Chair's own suggestion, as carried in the ruling, that I reserved the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. thinks the rule is quite clear. The gentleman from Iowa moves to increase the amount in the appropriation. Of course if the appropriation is itself legal and proper, that always is in order. The gentleman from Massachusetts suggests that this money may be turned to purposes not contemplated by the wording of the section. Certainly the Chair has no right to assume that. The Chair has ruled that an appropriation for war balloons is in order. There is contained in this section appropriations for many other purposes connected with the Signal Service, and the Chair must assume that the money will be spent by the War Department for purposes authorized by the section. The Chair can not entertain the suggestion that it may be perverted or turned to some other use not covered by the section. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Does the gentleman desire to discuss it? Mr. MACON. Yes; I want to discuss it long enough to find out something about the intention of the gentleman, as to what he has in mind.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will tell the gentleman that with perfect frankness.

Mr. MACON. I would like to hear it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Is that the only question the gentleman would like to ask?

Mr. MACON. That is what I want to know now.
Mr. COCKRAN. Let us get the reasons.
Mr. HULL of Iowa. The Chief of the Signal Service, in his report on pages 43, 44, and 45, gives very full and good information as to what has been done during the past year by the Signal Service Corps with dirigible balloons, and the necessity for an increased appropriation to continue this work. I will, with the consent of the House, be glad to insert it in the RECORD.

Mr. BUTLER. What was the appropriation for this last

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There was no specific appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Would it not be just as well to let the House have the information, because it is quite certain the House will not read it in the RECORD; and if it did, it would not do any good on this vote?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Then I shall talk for a few minutes and get the time within which the Clerk may read it, because he will do it so much better than I. From what is in the Record this morning it shows something of what other nations are doing. As shown here by reports, Russia, which is not supposed to be the most progressive of nations, appropriated something over $1,000,000 this year for this specific purpose of war balloons. Germany had an accident with one balloon, which was burned, and in addition to what the Government is doing in that line, the patriotic people of Germany subscribed a million dollars to continue the experimentation in addition to what the Government had given. France is engaged in the We have put but little money in war balloons. same work. We have done enough in this line, having purchased dirigible balloons and operated them to demonstrate the value of them, and it is proposed, if this amendment carries, that we will spend $500,000 in the experimentation and development of war

Mr. BUTLER. How many balloons does the gentleman expect to buy for $500,000?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would be governed by the necessities of the service as to the number to be purchased.

I do not believe we can limit the question as to what we will buy. Here is a great departure in all the science of war. is not a military authority on earth who does not admit the claim and declare that in the event of war, with the dirigible balloon as now developed, if no other developments are made, the nation as now developed, if no other developments are made, the nation that has them will be at an overwhelming advantage over the nation that does not have them. An army in the field with a great line of contest on, without balloons, has got to depend upon the old method of sending on the ground people to every point, to touch, feel, and learn from contact where is the opposing army. In a balloon you go up in the air and make a reconnoissance. The wireless telegraphy, to which the gentleman has referred that we have never done anything for, will be estabreferred that we have never done anything for, will be established in these balloons, and you can communicate with your own headquarters and draw your map and give to the army the absolute information as to where the opposing forces are located. You can not combat these war ships with anything but war ships. It is not a question of land fortifications. You can not train great guns or heavy artillery so the shot can reach the altitude of the balloon. The artillery is intended more for horizontal work.

Your muskets may carry for 2,000 yards, but they can not touch the balloon in the air and injure it at the altitude to which it can go, and it will still have the power against any arm of the service to make the very best of observations. want to say to you that this great Nation of ours, with a small army, with its citizen soldiery, ought to have the very best protection to life and property of any nation on earth. We are not carrying a great standing army. We are developing, in time of peace, all lines of information that will make us able to call upon this citizen soldiery in time of danger to take the field, and now let us, as the Congress of the United States, not refuse to protect them with all the best appliances of modern war-

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman has offered an amendment increasing the appropriation $500,000?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes. Mr. SHERLEY. Now, having fixed a definite increase, the gentleman must have in mind what that money is to be expended for, and I would like to get from the gentleman something besides a general eulogy on war balloons for what that expenditure is to be made.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman has had full hearings on that; I did not bring his hearings in—

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand; but the Committee of the Whole House, which has to vote upon this extra money, have not had that information, and they are entitled to it and to know for what this money is going to be expended.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If I had known the gentleman had not posted himself on the hearings in his committee, I would have brought them in with me.

Mr. SHERLEY, Now, if the gentleman will be frank, he knows this Committee of the Whole House is entitled to know for what this $500,000 is to be expended.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is for continuing these experimenta-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended-

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.]
The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The Book of Estimates states what it is for; it is for the purpose of continuing the study of and taking advantage of these new instruments of war.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is that the only information the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has to give this committee?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is all the information that is necessary to be given in favor of this amendment to influence my action.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it is desirable to inform the world just what we are going to do with these new instruments of war?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No, not fully; I do not.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman know, in point of fact, that a large part of this money is to be expended in building a house to house balloons?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No.

Mr. SHERLEY. And that a large part is to be expended in manufacturing gas for the use of balloons. I submit to the gentleman in good faith, in view of his position in this House, he ought to treat this Committee of the Whole House with fairness and give the information as to what the money is to be expended for. I am not saying it is a wrong expenditure, but there is no reason for secrecy.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is to be expended along different lines of this kind of experimentation. Of course you have to provide for caring for the balloons, you have to provide for the manufacture of gas, and you have to provide for everything that goes with this line of experimentation—

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Since we have no war, and there is no danger of a war, and if there should be a war it will not be on land, and since Russia, Germany, and other countries are engaged in the manufacture of these balloons at present, why should we not wait until they perfect them and then get them as we need them instead of expending our own money for them now in the way of wasteful experiment?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Let me ask the gentleman a question and answer him in that way. England, Germany, and France have been experimenting with a high-power gun for their infantry and cavalry. Would he think it good policy for us to wait until they finished their experiments and keep the muzzle-loading guns until we go to war?

Mr. DRISCOLL. That is quite another question.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not a bit.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman if he can give to the House any authority asking for the money that the gentleman asks?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is submitted here in an estimate from the department.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman read that? Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will ask the Clerk to read it, and in the meantime Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman read it now? want to have a little something to say about this thing, and Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am not trying to cut anyone off.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to get the information.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Slayden] has the estimates there right now.

Mr. MACON. I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question in connection with the one of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Gaines]. I want to ask the gentleman this ques-

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Slayden] to read from the Book of Estimates.
Mr. Slayden. The Book of Estimates, page 330, says the appropriation is asked-

For the purchase, fabrication, or construction of balloons, air ships, aeroplanes, and other aeronautical devices and accessories; their maintenance, operation, and tests, including the salaries of experts, engineers, and other necessary employees connected with the construction or use of aeronautical devices; for providing the grounds and buildings necessary in connection with military aeronautics and the purchase of necessary patent rights as may be approved by the Secretary of War; to be available immediately and until expended.

And then there is a proviso-

That not more than $20,000 annually of this sum shall be expended in the District of Columbia for the salaries of engineers, draftsmen, and other employees necessary to carry into effect this appropriation.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that that goes as minutely into a definition of the purposes for which the appropriation is to be expended as it is expedient for the War Department to do. Everybody knows—or nearly everybody, at least, in this country believes—that the best acroplane in the world has been made by Americans, the two Wright brothers. They have had to go to Europe to find a market for the device which has lifted American inventors to the very topmost peak of development in the line of navigating the air. Unquestionably we would have to buy patent rights in some cases; and this sets forth in detail, as much as can be said with expediency, what purposes the $500,000 will be expended for.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Now, Mr. Chairman-

Mr. MACON. I want to ask the gentleman a question.
Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think the gentleman will take the floor in his own right in a few minutes.

Mr. MACON. I want to ask a question. If the estimates call for the amount the gentleman suggests, why did the bill not carry that amount when it was originally brought into

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, that is easy to answer. The estimates that were submitted were sent by the Speaker or Speaker's clerk to the Committee on Appropriations.

The Speaker holds that that gives no jurisdiction to the committee to which the estimate is sent. But the attention of the Committee on Military Affairs was not specifically called to this proposition until it was learned that the Committee on Appropriations would not act. I will say in entire frankness to the committee that the Committee on Appropriations were not going to give a dollar for this purpose. If they had brought it in here I should have made some remarks on the subject, stating that I did not believe they had jurisdiction, but I believed it was of such supreme importance that I was willing for any committee to pass it that was willing to do so. soon as we found that the Committee on Appropriations would not pass it, we took it up.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to make one other statement to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman be allowed to proceed without limitation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We want to know about this. Mr. MANN. I think there should be some limit.

Mr. COCKRAN. I ask that the gentleman be given ten minutes, then.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Iowa for ten minutes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Now, let me just state this: If this amendment carries what we have proposed, I intend to offer a proviso to this paragraph—and would be glad to do it now if I did not believe some one might raise the point of order-" not to exceed $500,000 shall be used for experimentation in the development of war balloons." So that if the amendment carries, I shall offer that or the provision in the estimates as an additional

Mr. MANN. That is subject to a point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I doubt that. It is a limitation. The provision in the estimates certainly would be subject to a point

Mr. FOSTER of Indiana. I want to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER of Indiana. And it is as to the term "war balloon." What I would like to ask the gentleman is whether, by the use of that term, he would not exclude experiments with heavier-than-air machines, such as those invented by the Wright brothers?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think not. I think a war balloon may have to carry hand grenades. The only significance is that we have been appropriating for war balloons for years, and the only question is whether our amendment is for the purpose of advancing the national defense of the army. I think the limitation is entirely proper to be made.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. COCKRAN. First, I would ask the gentleman from Iowa if all the information in possession of his committee concerning the extent to which this science of balloon construction has been carried is embodied in these papers which appear in the RECORD this morning's

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No. We have additional papers, with photographs of balloons and their development and evolution, in the committee room. But the Committee on Military Affairs have not had a committee on investigation of this question.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that Major Squires has recently published-within the last few days-a book upon this subject?

And is he not a member of the Signal Corps?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.
Mr. COCKRAN. I understand from the papers submitted here, and which are printed in the RECORD this morning, that experiments in balloon construction are being conducted in every country, practically, that maintains a military establishment.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. COCKRAN. And reference is made here in the Record to many of the experiments. Will the result of these experiments by other countries be obtainable by us, or must we rely entirely upon experiments conducted by our own Government?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They will be preserved for the individual government, as would be the case with all other matters pertaining to defense, so far as practicable.

Mr. COCKRAN. And any experiments of which we can obtain the benefit are those conducted by the Government for our own use only?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, yes; so far as possible. But we must also have this work for ourselves in order to have trained

May I ask the Clerk to read from the report of the Secretary that portion relating to the Signal Corps on page 43, down to the word "importance," on page 45?

The Clerk read as follows:

SIGNAL CORPS-MILITARY AERONAUTICS.

The Clerk read as follows:

SIGNAL CORPS—MILITARY AERONAUTICS.

For several years past there has been great activity in practical aeronautics, and marked progress in this new and interesting field has been made during the past year. The subject of aeronautics is now technically divided by experts into "aerostation," covering the navigation of the air by machines lighter than air, and "aviation," which applies to the use of heavier-than-air machines. The dirigible balloon, which consists essentially of a gas bag supporting a suitable car equipped with power to drive it through the air, comes under the first head. All other forms of machines which possess no gas bag, but depend for suspension upon the dynamic reaction of the atmosphere, come under the latter. To this class the aeroplane belongs.

The first public flight with a dirigible balloon was made by Santos-Dumont in Paris October 19, 1902. The following year Farnam, a French aeronaut, made a flight of a couple of hundred yards with an aeroplane, and in January, 1908, made 1 mile, returning to the starting point. Since then he has progressively increased his distance, until, within the current month, he has made a successful trip from town to town. M. Blerlot, with his monoplane aeroplane, has also succeeded in flying from Toury to Artenay, in France, within the current month. During the past few months the Wright brothers, of Dayton, Ohio, have made public flights with their aeroplane, both in France and the United States, which have far exceeded all previous records.

The rapid progress that is now being made in aeronautics apparently indicates that the age of practical mechanical flight is almost at hand. It is the belief of many military men that when mechanical flight has been developed to the extent now belleved probable, it will profoundly affect modern warfare. Millitary men everywhere are intensely interested in this subject. The armies of the principal foreign powers are devoting special attention to military aeronautics, England now having 5 offi

Ing and investigating the military aeronautical establishments of these countries.

During the past year the Signal Corps has purchased, under contract, after satisfactory tests, a small dirigible balloon capable of carrying two persons and having a speed of 20 miles per hour, and this machine is at present being used for the training of officers and men. As a result of efforts to secure a heavier-than-air flying machine, 24 bids were received, and contracts were awarded to A. M. Herring, of New York City, and the Wright brothers, of Dayton, Ohio. The Herring machine is not yet ready for testing, and although the preliminary tests of the Wright brothers' aeroplane at Fort Myer, Va., have publicly demonstrated the practicability of mechanical flight, the contract with them has not yet been completely fulfilled, due to the deplorable accident that resulted in the death of Lieut. Thomas E. Selfridge, a most promising young officer, and the serious injury of Mr. Orville Wright, on September 17, 1908.

An estimate has been submitted to Congress for consideration at the present session for an appropriation of $500,000. With this sum, it is believed that the Signal Corps will be able to take up this rapidly developing military auxiliary in a manner commensurate with its intrinsic

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to say much more

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman now tell the House how the $500,000 is to be expended?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would be glad for him to do so.
Mr. HULL of Iowa. It would be expended in the development of air ships; and if the gentleman will permit it, he can put a limit on the appropriation.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course the gentlemen does not know whether I would object or not, and has no right to assume, but I would like to know if the Committee of the Whole House is to be told anything about how the appropriation of half a million dollars is to be used, or if we are to rest with the gentleman's statement that it is to be in the interest of aerial navigation.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I suppose it would be impossible to go into all the details, even if desirable about what this country wants to do. But we have been studying it two years and know what wonderful progress has been made in knowledge on the subject; and the purpose is to keep us abreast with all the other nations in the details necessary for the construction of the air ships for war purposes, balloons for war

Now, the gentleman's question is purely technical, and he knows it. It is not a question for information as to show how little minutiæ of detail can be given to this House.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, no. Mr. HULL of Iowa. The House is considering this in its broader sense, of what is necessary to do by means of experimentation and development of these balloons; and when gentlemen come in here and ask me as to the cost of a musket, it would not be of much value to get the cost of the barrel, how much for the stock, and how much for the trigger, how much for the ramrod, and ask these as legitimate questions. I say, we are dealing with this subject in its broader sense and not in details. No man, not even the department itself, could give all the details of the stage of every experiment to show where they are going.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does not the gentleman know— Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Let me ask one question right

Mr. HULL of Iowa. One at a time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Would the gentleman from Iowa be willing to put into the bill the provision from the Book of Estimates read by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Slayden]?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have it here and want to put it in. Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It seems to me that entirely Mr. HULL of Iowa. But I want this amount passed on first, because if we do not adopt the amendment there is no object in putting it in. I have it here to offer.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But if the amount is adopted—Mr. HULL of Iowa. Then, I propose to offer this, Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman read the proposition?

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Slayden] read it.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman desires $500,000—
Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman—
Mr. HULL of Iowa. One at a time, please, gentlemen.
Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman has asked for $500,000, but we do not know how many balloons we are going to get for $500,000, or whether $400,000 or $300,000 would not be sufficient. Does not the gentleman think he ought to tell us about how many balloons we are going to get, and what this will do?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say frankly that I have not read over the testimony that was taken before the gentleman's committee.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does not the gentleman-

Mr. HULL of Iowa. One minute. Let me answer, if possible. The gentleman's committee had this subject before it for some time, and examined it at length. We only took it up yesterday. It was impossible to get the details. The gentleman has in his hand the hearings before his committee. I did not even have time last night to read the full report, but I want to say to the gentleman that we are dealing with this question in its larger aspects, and the whole question is whether we shall go on with that work. We have our departments here that make estimates. They have given information to the gentleman's committee; information which we were denied, because of the mistake of send-ing it to the wrong committee; and it never would have been taken up by the Committee on Military Affairs if the gentleman's committee had not treated it as though it was an utterly worthless enterprise, while we believe it is one of supreme moment to this country. Now, if the gentleman will read the hearings before his own committee, he will probably get the information he is asking for more in detail.

Mr. Chairman, no man in this House enter-tains a higher respect for the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs than I do. I say that not in the way of ful-some flattery, but in sincerity; but the gentleman's course in this debate has not been creditable to his well-earned reputation. He comes in here with an amendment to increase an appropriation $500,000, and he then becomes irritable because some Member suggests that the Committee of the Whole, that is asked to appropriate this money, should have some statement made as to what the money is to be expended for, and he throws himself back on the broad proposition that "We are dealing with this question in its big aspects and not in its details." Let me suggest to the gentleman that we would not have the extravagant expenditures we do have if we gave a little attention to details. Now, if the gentleman had been frank in the beginning, as he has been in the conclusion, and had said that he did not have time to read the hearings before the Fortifications Committee, and that he did not know what this was to be expended for, but believed that it ought to be expended, we might have differed with the gentleman's conclusions, but would at least have admired his frankness. But when he undertakes to say, "Oh, that is not material," and further seeks to leave the committee under the impression that the information is such as should not be given out, he does not deal fairly with the committee. Now, what is the fact? General Allen came before the Committee on Appropriations. my part I have no care whether this matter is considered by our committee or the gentleman's. The point is whether the action of Congress shall be right and not through what instrumentality. General Allen came before our committee and said he wanted this exact sum. He was asked for what purpose. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asked him:

You ask for $500,000?

You ask for $500,000?

General ALLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What do you propose to do with this money?

General ALLEN. In the first place, if we are going into this business we must have a plant. We have got to have a large balloon house to start with. We have to have a gas plant, and tubes for transporting the gas. The balloon house will cost $100,000—a good, big house. Then we have to have unlimited and cheap hydrogen gas. We can buy a plant that was used in Germany, which will manufacture the gas at 50 cents a thousand, for $100,000. If we had that plant here in Washington, Philadelphila, or New York, where the citizens could purchase the gas at cost price, the whole aeronautic business of this country would take a big boom. There are thousands of people here who are willing to do things, but they can not afford to buy a gas plant.

Mr. FITZGERALD. You use hydrogen?

General ALLEN. Yes, sir. Out at Omaha we have a limited plant where the gas costs $5 a thousand.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It will take $100,000 for the gas plant?

General ALLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the balloon house will cost $100,000?

General ALLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Where would you put the gas plant?

General ALLEN. The gas plant should be located where we can get cheap coal and iron ore, near Philadelphia, New York, or Washington.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much do you estimate will be required for the plant?

General ALLEN. If we can not get some place where we have govern-

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much do you estimate will be required for the plant?

General Allen. If we can not get some place where we have government land, we would have to buy a site. Probably we could find some site convenient to transportation which would be very moderate in cost.

That is practically the information that comes to our committee. Now, it passes my understanding why the Committee of the Whole, considering this item, should not know that $200,000 is not to be used for the purchase of balloons, but that $100,000 is to be used for a balloon house to house the balloon, and another hundred thousand dollars in making gas to fill the balloon, and to be sold to balloon experimenters. I am not now saying that it may not be a proper expenditure, but I do say it is the duty of the Committee on Military Affairs and the chairman of that committee, when he comes into the Committee of the Whole asking for as large an appropriation as this, to give to the House these material facts, and that he ought not to be sensitive or irritable when some gentlemen want to bring this information to the House in order that it may act with some understanding; and it is no answer to say: "We are dealing with the question in its broad aspect."

Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield for Mr. MANN. a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request will be There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman tell us what the other $300,000 is to be used for.

Mr. SHERLEY. We did not get very much other detail from General Allen. One of the things that actuated the committee in not recommending the appropriation was the absence of detailed information at this time, when we are seeking to reduce

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. If the gentleman from Kentucky will yield to me, I want to suggest that General Allen stated before the Appropriations Committee that this estimate for the balloons would only cover two balloons. All the rest has been apportioned for accessories. It was stated that such balloons as he wanted would cost $60,000 each in Europe, and would cost, with the duty added, about $75,000, and would probably cost that much to produce them in this country. He later handed in a statement in which he attempted to apportion the whole $500,000, and in that he put in each balloon at $90,000, or $15,000 above the price he said they would cost if produced here.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman from Iowa point out in the hearings where he put in each balloon at $90,000?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I can not, because it is not printed in the hearings.

Mr. MANN. Does the committee have hearings and then throw them away; is this the "frankness" of the gentleman's committee?

I will answer the gentleman by saying that Mr. SHERLEY. every word testified before the committee was printed, but find, if you can, the printed testimony in the report of the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Iowa says it has not been

Mr. SHERLEY. They had a hearing that they did not print, and we have all of ours printed.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that we had no hearings on this at all.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] stated to me that you had General Allen before you, and did have a hearing, but did not have it taken down.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not in that matter.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized in my own right.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am perfectly willing to yield to my col-

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, everything said by General Allen, so far as I can recollect, was taken down, and subsequently he furnished a tabulated statement, that is not in the hearings, in which he had apportioned the entire $500,000. as I have already stated. In that statement $90,000 apiece was set apart for the balloons in place of $75,000, as shown by the

Mr. PARSONS. In the hearings did it not appear that the balloon used in France was a standard type, and that that balloon cost $75,000, but the Zeppelin type of balloon, used in Germany, was a much larger balloon and would cost much more?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I can not agree with the gentleman as to what the hearings show.

Mr. PARSONS. I will ask the gentleman to read.
Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do not have to read the hearings;
I know what is in the hearings. The record shows that the type of balloon costing $60,000 in Europe—with the added duty, $75,000 in America—is, if there be such a thing as yet, a standard military balloon. It is true that Germany is experimenting with a still larger balloon, but which can not in any conceivable sense be considered as yet a standard balloon.

The whole import of the testimony of General Allen was that what he wanted was standard balloons, said to cost $60,000 in Europe and $75,000 here; and when he furnished a tabulated statement after the hearings he had two balloons in at $90,000 each, and all of this $500,000 except $180,000 is for purposes other than the purchase of balloons.

I simply state this that the House may know what the subdivisions of this estimate are. I am not able to agree with my colleague from Iowa [Mr. HULL] that the mere fact that the Fortifications Committee took the hearings and then refused to recommend the appropriation is itself sufficient ground for the House to allow the appropriation.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want simply to say that I do not regard that as the only reason. If it was something that I agreed with them upon, I would commend them for their action. I want to read a little from these hearings that I their action. I want to read a little from these hearings that I have had so little time to look at in answer to what my friend has said. Going on further with what my friend from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] referred to, on page 29 of the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations on the fortifications bill we find the following:

General ALLEN. Most of the money is going to build up the plant. A good big balloon house will cost about $100.000. That will have to be larger than the one we have at Omaha. That cost us $36,000. The estimated cost of the gas plant to make this cheap hydrogen gas is $100,000. It is the German plant that the English bought the other day and the Russians bought. Whether they paid $100,000 I do not know. That is the price put on it. 'We want some of the tubes to carry the compressed gas, at least 2,000 of them, and they will cost $60,000. Two balloons will probably cost $150,000. Then for the wagons and transportation, and the special things we have to carry the balloons, I should say $10,000. I have estimated for the experts $10,000. That would leave $70,000 of the $500,000 for aeroplanes or anything else. The amount of money is not large for starting a new enterprise of the importance that this is. The War Department regards it as a very important matter.

Now, that is pretty definite information. Mr. SHERLEY. Very much more definite than the gentleman gave the House.

Mr. ESCH. Out of the money, if the amendment is carried, which is provided for in this appropriation, would the War Department be justified in offering awards or prizes for any devices connected with war ballooning? Mr. HULL of Iowa. I should say, when they estimate $10,000 for experts, they would have a right to pay for any expert advice they could get on the subject. In other words, I think you have got to leave the development of this largely to the experts that devote their entire lives to the subject of this line of work.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hull] a question, which perhaps may reconcile his position with that taken by the other gentleman from Iowa, Mr. SMITH. As I understand the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. SMITH, he states that General Allen estimated the cost of two balloons at $180,000.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Finally he did, but this statement is $150,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I was reading simply from the hearings

Mr. COCKRAN. In addition to the estimated cost of balloons, the appropriation contemplates the establishment of a plant and the allowance also of a sum for experiments. Am I correct about that? I ask the chairman of the committee if that is also his understanding?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; not only that, but wagons and other necessary things to make this line of defense of benefit.

Mr. COCKRAN. I understand. Now, so far as this appropriation provides for experiments, of course it is impossible to give definite estimates, and with that explanation it seems to me there is very slight difference between the statement of General Allen's position, as it has been given by the gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, and as given by the other gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I do not understand there is any conflict at all. The fact is, our committee has all there is on the subject.

Mr. COCKRAN. The impression was obtained over here, I think, that there was a conflict, and I desired to remove what appeared to be a conflict by reconciling the statement.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It was a misunderstanding. I said that there is $100,000 carried in the fortifications bill for the board that is engaged constantly in making such experiments, and that board usually has about that amount on hand out of which it has conducted these numerous experiments recently, and that $100,000 is practically constantly kept on hand for the purpose of conducting such experiments.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Or any other experiments?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that under an appropriation like this for war balloons the department would be permitted to purchase or construct a building for the purpose of housing the balloons, or a gas plant for the purpose of selling

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, it is not for selling at all. Mr. SMITH of Iowa. That is what he says.

Mr. MANN. The hearings that the gentleman himself read expressly stated that that was one of the objects-to sell gas.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. He says tubes to carry the compressed gas; at least 2,000 of them, and they will cost $60,000. You can not move your plant around wherever the balloon is to go up.

Mr. MANN. In an appropriation including an item for war balloons, does that include an item for the provision that you may construct a plant?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think not, unless you put this in.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is that? Read it and get it into the RECORD.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not think they could use anything except for the bailoon itself, unless you put this in.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is it?
Mr. HULL of Iowa. The proviso they submitted in the Book of Estimates. It has been read once, and I will read it again if necessary. It gives in detail what the appropriation can be used for.

Mr. GILLETT. That proviso is subject to the point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think so. Mr. SHERLEY. If I understood the gentleman's reply to the gentleman from Illinois, it was that he did not think that this appropriation would warrant the expenditure of any of this money for the building of a plant.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Unless we put the proviso in.

Mr. GILLETT. Which is subject to a point of order. Mr. HULL of Iowa. Very true.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then there is no limit-

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; I think they would be limited to whatever is necessary for the balloon experimentations they were carrying on. I think they could buy a war balloon, but I do not think they could build any buildings—
Mr. SHERLEY. Did the gentleman fix the sum of $500,000 for expenditures solely in the purchase of war balloons?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; I was in hopes the other would be added, certainly if not here, at some other place or by some

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman has just confessed he has no knowledge of these details.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have knowledge of those and have had since yesterday. Since it was brought to my attention I looked up the Book of Estimates. I knew in a general way the Chief of the Signal Service was before your committee; and while I did not believe you had jurisdiction, I was willing not to say anything in regard to that matter in hopes you would

Mr. SHERLEY. I am sorry the gentleman had that knowledge, because I was in hopes his failure to give the information to the Committee of the Whole House was because of the absence of knowledge. Oh, no; I knew that had been submitted, Mr. HULL of Iowa. and I did not care about any controversy about it if we could get the appropriation.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am talking about the Committee of the Whole House. I can not understand why the gentleman will not give the Committee of the Whole House that information.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That has been read. I knew all the time the gentleman had full hearings, but I did not happen to have them here on yesterday.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa why he does not limit some of this money to the building of a plant, and not turn all this money loose to go up in the air, but keep some of it on the ground.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say to my friend from Tennessee that I propose to offer a limitation:

Provided, Not to exceed $500,000 shall be used "for the purchase, fabrication, or construction of balloons, air ships, aeroplanes, and other aeronautical devices and accessories; their maintenance, operation, and tests, including the salaries of experts, engineers, and other necessary employees connected with the construction or use of aeronautical devices; for providing the grounds and buildings necessary in connection with military aeronautics, and the purchase of necessary patent rights as may be approved by the Secretary of War, to be available immediately and until expended"—

And so forth.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is not that subject to a point of order as being new legislation, or is it in the nature of a limita-

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think it is more than a limitation, but it is intended as a limitation in offering it; but I think it goes further than that and describes what it can be used for,

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Suppose that goes out on the point of order, do you propose, then, to offer a limitation or propose to limit so much of this money to the building of a plant?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, no; you can not; if that goes out on a point of order; the other would be subject to a point of order. Mr. SHERLEY. Is there any limitation in amount as to the expenditure for these various items? Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; but the whole amount can not be used for that, unless the proviso shall be adopted.

Mr. SHERLEY. Could not the whole $500,000 be used for building a house to shelter war balloons?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Possibly, if we assume they would do such an idiotic thing as that.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman think it is wise to legislate in that loose form?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would be glad to have the privilege of providing a strict limitation.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am very glad to get the gentleman to a point where he is willing to admit there is something to be considered besides the broad-

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am not willing to take back anything have said in that respect at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. GILLETT rose.
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] desire to be recognized?

Mr. GILLETT. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word on this question along a line that has not been touched upon yet, and to give my reasons for opposing the adoption of this amendment. It seems to me, in the first place, that this House has not been told and does not know why we need this particular sum of $500,000. I assume we all want to do something toward developing aeronautics, but is that any proof that we want to appropriate $500,000 more in addition to what is already appropriated? In the last year, as the gentleman from Texas said, there has been splendidly developed in America a new type in aeroplanes.

How was that done? Why, under the appropriation we made last year. And, as it appears, we have now a plant out in Omaha for dirigible balloons. How was that made? Under the appropriation that is already in this bill. So it is not a question of whether we shall do nothing, but it is simply a question whether we shall appropriate half a million dollars more for this war measure. Now, it seems to me the United States, with no armies on its frontiers, with no immediate menace of war, can well wait and proceed slowly with military appropriations, as we have in the past, and let foreign nations who have armies right on their frontiers make these large appropriations; let them make the big experiments, and let us go on modestly, as we are now, but successfully, as we have in the last year, in both the direction of aeroplanes and dirigibles. It seems to me we are doing enough now to simply keep our force developed, to keep track of what is done in other nations, to keep our experts employed, so that we are not ignorant and uneducated. We are not a nation which is compelled by its situation to be in the van in these new warlike endeavors and experiments.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much have our experiments cost this last year?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You ought to know.

Mr. GILLETT. We appropriate $100,000 in the other board and $250,000 here. Why ought I know more than the gentleman? Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I said we ought to know. thought the gentleman from Massachusetts knew

Mr. GILLETT. I know we have appropriated enough to produce fine results.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much have we spent?

Mr. GILLETT. We have spent $100,000 under the other appropriation. How much went for balloons, I do not know.
Mr. AMES. I would like to suggest to my colleague that the progress that has been made in aeronautics is not on account of any expenditure made by the War Department. They spent but a few dollars last year. They have not spent anything for Wright or Herring yet. They are waiting for the acceptance of their machines, and that will come from the fortifications appropriation.

Mr. GILLETT. It came from the Government.

Mr. AMES. They have not spent it yet.

Mr. GILLETT. It does not make any difference, that I can see, which branch of the Government it comes from.

Mr. AMES. They have no experts to sustain or keep working. Mr. GILLETT. It was read in one of these reports that they had a number of experts—I forget how many—who are officers of the army and at work out in Omaha.

Mr. AMES. Army officers?

Mr. GILLETT. That is what I mean. We are developing our army experts.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question, but perhaps I will have to begin my question with a statement. I have been groping, in a way, for information with reference to this matter, and I have reached the conclusion that it is the opinion of military men with whom I have talked that the navigation of the air as an adjunct to military operations and as an essential part of a successful defense of the country or the successful prosecution of a campaign is established and is beyond the experimental stage.

Other governments have led. We have not been in the van. Other governments have led in these experiments, notably Germany, where the citizens contributed a large sum of money to help the government appropriations out; and if that is true and the gentleman's judgment on that is no doubt better than mine-does he not think we ought to have such an equipment as will in a measure place the Army of the United States in as good a position as that of any other army of any other country in the world?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, we are in an experimental stage. The Signal Service admits that. They say this is for experimentation, and I do not think the United States, with no army on its frontier at all, is in a condition where it ought to spend as much for war defense, for war preparations, as Germany, France, or Russia, who are every moment threatened on their frontiers

Mr. SLAYDEN. I entirely agree with the gentleman in that respect.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a very short statement. I am confident that the judgment of the Committee of the Whole House will support this amendment. Leaving out the question of conflict between the two great committees that have handled the subject, I wish to point out that the estimates as sent by the War Department, judging from similar estimates, are well taken.

Mr. YOUNG. Will not the gentleman permit a suggestion? I understood the gentleman to speak of the conflict between the two committees. I desire to say that the Committee on Military Affairs never considered this question.

Mr. HOBSON. I will not enter into a discussion of that part of the question. I am calling attention to the estimates. The cost of a balloon, based on the cost abroad, plus the duty, is placed at $75,000. I believe that a practical man, when it came to the responsibility of building one, would be justified in adding from 14 to 20 per cent, and that an estimate of $90,000 is reasonable and conservative. When the cost of battle ships is figured on a margin of 15 per cent to 20 per cent would be allowed. In the estimates a margin of $70,000 is allowed, which is only 14 per cent of the total, and is thus very conservative and reasonable.

Criticism has been made that only two balloons are provided requiring $180,000, whereas the total amount asked for is $500,000. We provided two battle ships, costing about $20,-Yet the bill accompanying it carried more than $100,-000.000.

000,000 besides.

The proportion of $180,000 to the $500,000 total appropriated is even larger than the cost of two battle ships or of new construction was to the total naval appropriation bill. would be as reasonable not to provide channels, harbors, wharves, docks for battle ships as not to provide the accessories called for in this appropriation. The War Department has sent in careful estimates founded upon information and experience, and furthermore the total asked for is very reasonable. are at the stage in aerial navigation that we were in about 1885 in submarine navigation. The problems involved in the two are the same. America held behind in developing torpedoes. the point was reached where it was clear that the problem had been solved, all the other nations went forward and equipped their service.

America dragged behind, and to-day we are in a most embarrassing, even dangerous, condition of want. We have in our fleet only 53 up-to-date torpedoes. There are three nations that have 4,000 torpedoes each and one that has 8,000. If war should come upon us we would find ourselves in a most serious position of inferiority in this important weapon. We ought not to repeat such a mistake in the matter of aerial navigation. It has passed the experiental stage. It has now come time to equip our service, as all other great nations are equipping their services, with these aerial weapons and with all their accessories. We ought not to be surprised to find $500,000 asked for at this session. This amount is very conservative, and we ought not to be surprised if a larger amount is asked for at future [Applause.]

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph be closed in five minutes, and that the gentleman from Nebraska be recognized in that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks that debate on this paragraph be closed in five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. jection?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make somewhat of a correction-

Mr. Chairman-Mr. TAWNEY.

The CHAIRMAN, For what purpose does the gentleman

Mr. TAWNEY. I will have to object unless there can be more than five minutes. [Cries of "Too late!"]
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood it was agreed to.

Mr. TAWNEY. I did not hear the Chair submit the question to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. It was submitted. Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make somewhat of a correction of what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gillett] said. In analyzing the situation in aeronautics he conveyed the impression that this country is proceeding already to develop the various branches of aeronautics in a moderate way. In doing so he referred to the balloon house at Omaha and the balloon at Omaha as intended for a dirigible balloon or air ship. This, I understand, is not the case. It is simply and solely a signal balloon, not an air ship, and it is limited in its operations to signal purposes. These expensive balloons, which have been referred to in this debate as costing from $75,000 to $90,000, are air ships. They are not already covered by the appropriation in this bill. As it is, the bill provides for nothing except signal balloons, and possibly some aeroplane experimenta-If we are to have air ships that in character compare at all with the great air ships of Germany, France, and other large countries, it is absolutely requisite that some additional appropriation be made.

Mr. Chairman, while I am opposed to great military expenditures and opposed to a great army, I do believe that in the progress and development of the art of military warfare and the study of the science of warfare, and in securing new devices of warfare, the United States ought not to be behind any country in the world. It has been those countries which have seized upon new devices which have succeeded in war. During the civil war the wonderful Merrimac was an irresistible instrument of destruction until the genius of a great inventor gave us the still more wonderful Monitor, and wherever war develops that nation which first seizes and develops the devices of great efficiency wins success. I am for this amendment because I think the United States should keep pace with most advanced nations of the world in developing and adopting the latest devices of military science.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. DOUGLAS. May the amendment be read again?
The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 11, strike out "two" and insert "seven," so as to read "$750,000."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa if it is not his purpose, when this amendment is agreed to, then to offer an amendment providing for the expenditure of the additional $500,000 for exploiting the air for army war purposes or air ships?

The CHAIRMAN. All debate has been closed.

Mr. TAWNEY. In five minutes, and we have one minute remaining. He has time to answer the question.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I stated what I wanted to do. The House is in full possession of the information. There is no secret about it.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr.

AWNEY) there were—ayes 51, noes 46. Mr. TAWNEY. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. HULL of Iowa and Mr. TAWNEY

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 75, noes 55.

Accordingly the amendment of Mr. Hull of Iowa was agreed to.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That not to exceed $500,000 shall be used for the purchase, fabrication, or construction of balloons, air ships, aeroplanes, and other aeronautical devices and accessories; their maintenance, operation, and tests, including the salaries of experts, engineers, and other necessary employees connected with the construction or use of aeronautical devices; for providing the grounds and buildings necessary in connection with military aeronautics and the purchase of necessary patent rights as may be approved by the Secretary of War; to be available immediately and until expended: Provided, That not more than $20,000 annually of this sum shall be expended in the District of Columbia for the salaries of engineers, draftsmen, and other employees necessary to carry into effect this appropriation, $500,000.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota will state his point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. The proposed amendment authorizes an expenditure of money not now authorized by law and, furthermore, is a continuing appropriation.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There is no use in discussing the point of order. If the gentleman makes it, that ends it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system: For defraying the cost of such extensions and betterments of the Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system as may be approved by the Secretary of War, to be available until the close of the fiscal year 1911 from the receipts of the Washington-Alaska military cable and telegraph system that have been covered into the Treasury of the United States, the extent of such extensions and the cost thereof to be reported to Congress by the Secretary of War, $100,000: Provided, That the conveyance by George C. Hazelet, trustee, of a tract of about 2 acres of land in the town of Cordova, on Orea Inlet, Alaska, which it is proposed to donate to the United States as the site for a cable station be, and the same is hereby, accepted.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the proviso just read. I wish to ask a question about it. I have no right to question the motives of Mr. Hazelet, and I do not object to the Government taking anything that is given to it without a string or without eventually entailing extra expense, but I should like to ask whether the accepting of this property from Mr. Hazelet will eventually require the expenditure of more money, which will in some way benefit him?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not at all. Mr. DRISCOLL. What is it for?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is for a cable station at this place. If we put in a proviso here to purchase 2 acres of land, it will be subject to a point of order. This man offers to give it to the Government. The Secretary of War, on December 31, transmitted his offer to us, with the request that we accept the 2 acres of land.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Has Mr. Hazelet any ulterior motive in offering to give 2 acres of land to the Government?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not see how he could have. Mr. DRISCOLL. Has the Government the right to accept this without any legislation?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; I think not.

Mr. DRISCOLL. This is new legislation?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is new legislation.
Mr. MANN. We did the same thing last year for another station up in Alaska—accepted a gift of land from Tilly McTisney. Perhaps the gentleman draws a distinction and would not make a point of order on Tilly McTisney, but thinks it is more suspicious if it is George C. Hazelet.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is this going to increase the value of the adjoining property?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not know that it will, except that there is a cable station at this place. This man owns the land where they want to put the station, and the Secretary of War wants us to accept it, for the reason that he believes it is for the benefit of the Covernment to do so. benefit of the Government to do so.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I am disposed to look with some suspicion upon gifts that are purely voluntary. I, however, will waive the point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I renew the point of order, Mr. Chairman. There has been so much confusion in the House that it was almost impossible to hear the gentleman from Iowa: I would like to know why the gentleman wants to tie the Secretary down to George C. Hazelet's lot in the town of Cordova, on Orca Inlet.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Let me read a letter from the Secretary of War. There is a station to be established there. Under the date of December last, the Secretary of War sent this letter:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 31, 1908.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith draft of an item authorizing the acceptance of a proposed conveyance by George C. Hazelet, trustee, of a tract of land in the town of Cordova, on Orea Inlet, Alaska, which it is intended to donate to the United States as a site for a cable

It is requested that this item be inserted in the pending army appropriation bill, under the heading "Signal Service of the Army."

Very respectfully,

LUKE E. WRIGHT Secretary of War.

Hon. J. A. T. Hull,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Item for insertion in the army appropriation bill, under the heading "Signal Service of the Army:"
"Provided, That the conveyance by George C. Hazelet, trustee, of a tract of about 2 acres of land in the town of Cordova, on Orea Inlet, Alaska, which it is proposed to donate to the United States as the site for a cable station, be, and the same is hereby, accepted."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee insist on his point of order?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to go a little further in this matter, Mr. Chairman. I do not think General Wright has been to Alaska, and he must depend on some one else to give him the information. As a member of the Public Lands Committee, we have been dealing with the supposed town of Cordova. I am not disposed to believe that there is much of a town there. I think there was a conference report made yesterday, which I signed, having something to do with this town. I do not know what the value of the property is, and I do not think it is of much value anyway, but to appropriate $100,000 for Hazelet's lot—as the bill says "provided that the conveyance by George C. Hazelet, trustee of the tract of about 2 acres of land in the town of Cordova—which it is proposed to devote to the United States" for a cable station, and so forth, "be, and

Mr. MANN. But it is free; he donates it.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. All right; if they are going to give it to us we will take it. I withdraw the point of order. The Clerk read as follows:

Annunclator buzzer systems at target ranges: For installation of annunclator buzzer systems at target ranges at Fort Ethan Allen, Vt.; Fort Niagara, N. Y.; Fort Leavenworth, Kans.; Fort Riley, Kans.; Fort Sam Houston, Tex.; Fort Sheridan, Ill.; Presidio of Monterey, Cal.; and Fort William McKinley, P. I., $18,200.

Mr. MACON. To that I reserve a point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The buzzer system for target practice is an instrument employed to save much labor, and is much more rapid in reporting results. Without this you have to have a man to mark the target and report back by telephone. This is in the interest of progress in military science. It is the first time it has been in the bill, but I think the organic act of the Signal Service Corps would cover it.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. The gentleman thinks that it would save money?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It would save money; it would be much cheaper; it would save expense; and, especially, it would save

Mr. MACON. The gentleman from Iowa has not shown where would save any expense.

Mr. MANN. Is not the purpose evident, just like the telephone connection, to save people traveling back and forth? You do this by the buzzer system—make communication as to the result of the shot. Instead of sending a man—it may be half a mile—you use this system. It is much cheaper, I suppose, to press a button and read the indications at the other end than to have men travel back and forth to get the information.

Mr. MACON. I do not think it will be $18,000 a year

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want to read this from the hearings. General Allen says:

When a man fires at a target the marker at the target can not tell whether the target has been shot at or not. With this system, when a man shoots at a target he presses a button and the man at the target knows which target has been shot at, and if it has not been hit he marks it zero. It is a time saver. Otherwise they are calling back and forth by telephone.

Mr. Kahn. Without this system, if a man should miss the target the marker would not know anything about it?

General ALLEN. No; then he has got to call back, and it is an endless delay. This is a time-saving device all the way through.

Mr. Stevens. This does not provide that they should be extended to other posts?

General ALLEN. At the larger ranges.

ner posts?
General ALLEN. At the larger ranges.
Mr. KAHN. I suppose it would not be necessary in a small range, here men were shooting at one or two targets?
General ALLEN. No, sir.

It facilitates the target practice and has come in use in every nation now, and it seems to me the gentleman from Arkansas can not subserve any good purpose by raising a point of order. If he does, I want to call the attention of the Chair to the organic act of the Signal Corps, which provides for the telephone and other matter under his control, and I do not believe it is subject to a point of order while it is new in the bill.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, in response to what the gentleman from Iowa has said, I desire in reply to state that I do not believe, as I stated a moment ago, that there will be as much of a saving to the Government as the amount carried in this provision if this system is installed.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; but once installed it lasts forever, practically

Mr. MACON. I want to say further that I have noticed since I have been a Member of the House that small appropriations this year lead up to large appropriations next year, and larger still the next year, until they grow to gigantic proportions in the end. A few moments ago there was appropriated $250,000 for war balloons over the protest of a point of order, and a great many other things were included in the total, and as soon as the Chair held that it was in order to appropriate for war balloons, along with the several other objects, the chair-man of the committee immediately offered an amendment to increase that appropriation to $750,000; and hence we do not know what will become of this particular appropriation, how much of an increase will be wanted, and how many other places will be selected at which to install this buzzer system. Another thing I desire to state is that in times of peace I do not think the saving of time, so far as time only is concerned, is of much importance to the army, for it has more time upon its hands than anything else.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that the gentleman from Arkansas is not discussing the point of

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Arkansas on the point of order.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, in response to what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] has just said, I desire to state that I had too much respect for him to raise a point of order against his remarks a few moments ago, when they were not directed to the question under consideration.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my objection then.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Macon] has stated that he does not believe this would bring about any saving, that it would not amount to $18,000; and in order that we may vote intelligently on the question, I would like the gentleman from Arkansas to state upon what he bases his information. The chairman of the committee has stated that it will result in a saving of this amount. If the gentleman from Arkansas has anything on which he bases this statement, I would like to hear it.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I did not yield for an argument on the question.

Mr. ADAIR. I am asking the gentleman from Arkansas to state the facts upon which he bases his conclusion.

Mr. MACON. Upon the fact that appropriations are never made in this House with a view of saving the Government any money, but with a view of putting something into the pockets of somebody. Anything to take money out of the Treasury and put it into the pockets of individuals, to make for them easier places in life perhaps than they had before seems to be the rule here. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is simply this: This is a new paragraph and was never in any other appropriation bill. It is a new system sought to be established, and for that reason I insist that it is out of order upon an appropriation bill and not authorized by existing law, and hence in conflict with the rules of the House.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to section 2 of the act of October 1, 1890, 26

Statutes at Large, page 462, where this language is used as to what are the duties of the Chief Signal Officer:

Under the direction of the Secretary of War he shall have charge of all military signal duties, of books, papers, and devices connected there-with, including telegraph and telephone apparatus, and the necessary meteorological instruments for use on target ranges.

It seems to me that this is clearly a matter covered by the

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. These ranges are all been authorized by law. There are a number of target have all been authorized by law. There are a number of target ranges authorized by law and intended for the purpose of target practice for the improvement of marksmanship of the Those have been established, and it seems to the Chair very clear that any ordinary appliance necessary for the proper practice of the men in the target ranges is not new legislation, but is continuing work that has been undertaken, and is perfecting a system that has already been established by Congress. It is evident that this installation of these buzzers is for the more rapid and more convenient record of the shots that have been made and for the information of those that are taking part in the practice. The Chair overrules the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Wireless telephone apparatus: For the purchase and development of wireless telephone apparatus, $30,000.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on this paragraph to inquire about it. I would like to know, first, whether the department is to purchase wireless telephone apparatus and appliances, or whether it is going to experiment in the way of developing that apparatus, the same as it is going to experiment with air ships, or what is proposed to be done with this $30,000?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If you have the hearings, on page 24 General Allen, you will see, gives a very full explanation of it.

He says:

Mr. Stevens. How long a distance can you talk?

General Allen. The farthest we are talking with success is about 6 miles, but a German system talks 30 or 40 miles; but our hopes now are largely centering on another system, that of an American, and we think in the next year there will be developed something very practical.

Mr. Stevens. The navy is taking the initiative in this work?

General Allen. We are all trying to work together. A commercial company has put them on its line of ships, and claims that they will talk 40 miles. If they will work there, of course they will work for us. The CHAIRMAN. It is a telephone instead of a telegraph system? General Allen. Yes, sir; a telephone, not telegraph. The CHAIRMAN. You say that you have been able to talk 60 miles without a wire?

without a wire?
General Allen. We talk about 6 miles with a small set that we have.
I have heard them talk 30 to 40 miles in Germany, but not constantly.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will it be a saving of expense?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That I do not know.

Mr. DRISCOLL. By saving the wires that should be strung along from place to place?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not know which is the cheaper, but it is a system that in Alaska, and some other places, the army is very anxious to develop. They have already developed very largely there the wireless telegraph system. This is a telephone system, and the wireless telegraph saves laying a great many miles of cables. Why not thus save miles of wire and numbers

Mr. DRISCOLL. It is not to experiment with?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I understand it is not intended for experiment; it is simply to purchase.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $1,600,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of ascertaining some information in regard to the preceding paragraph. Has the gentleman any information as to the method of operation, whether it is similar to the Marconi system in wireless telegraphy?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have not.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, it is at present established in the army, but to a minor extent.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. General Allen says it is on the verge of being made very successful. He says there are three or four systems and that they have inspected all of them, and it is expected within the next six months or a year they will put them on the ships and in the main artillery posts, in order that they may communicate with the navy and with each other.

Mr. DRISCOLL. This paragraph here provides for the development of this wireless

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, General Allen's testimony is as I have quoted.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill how the increase of $1,423,800 is made up in the pay of officers of the line.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is made up in the Book of Estimates by the number of officers authorized by law at the rate of pay fixed by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. MADDEN. Is that on account of increase of pay? Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. No larger number of officers now than a year

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Parker] says there are some; I do not recall any of them.
Mr. MADDEN. Last year the appropriation for this purpose was $4,556,200, and this year it is $7,000,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman, we have added $500 to every grade of the army except second lieutenants.

Mr. MADDEN. How many are there of these men?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. About 3,700.

Mr. MADDEN. Commanding officers?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; officers from second lieutenants up. This is not quite the amount, for if every one was commissioned there would be a shortage in this amount; but there is always from 75 to 150 vacancies, some of them on account of waiting for the graduation of West Point cadets, and for other causes; so it is never entirely filled. Mr. MADDEN. If all the officers were on duty, it would not be sufficient to pay them?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We cut off a hundred and eight thousand and some odd dollars because we believed they would not have the full number to draw pay.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I did not understand the length-of-service paragraph had been read. If it has, I desire to offer an amendment—simply a verbal amendment—to strike out the words "of officers," in line 22, page 6, and insert, after the word "for," the word "additional;" so it will read "for additional pay for length of service."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, in line 22, page 6, by striking out the words "of officers" and ssert, before the word "pay," the word "additional," so as to read: For additional pay for length of service."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. The current appropriation bill carries an appropriation for $10,000,000 for pay of enlisted men.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; on page 7.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Yes; top of page 7; and this bill proposes to appropriate $15,500,000 for the same service.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; for the same service.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Did not the increase pay go into effect last year?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The increase pay went in a lump sum of $7,000,000.

Mr. DRISCOLL. In addition to the $10,000,000?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. In addition to the $10,000,000. Mr. DRISCOLL. What is the increase pay of the enlisted

Mr. HULL of Iowa. On the first enlistment it is $2 a monththat is, privates only. For the noncommissioned officer the increase is a great deal more than $2 a month. For an orderly sergeant, for instance, the increase is from $25 to $45 a month.

Mr. DRISCOLL. It strikes me we ought to know how or why the increase is made in the appropriation from $10,000,000 to $15,000,000 in one year.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I put in the Record yesterday morning, Mr. Chairman, a full statement from the department, giving this information in answer to the question of the gentleman from Illinois. The increase pay, or, rather, the appropriation caused by the increase pay—and I want to say to the gentleman from New York that the amount that is given by the Committee on Military Affairs is not for the full number of men authorized. The army last year had a shortage of something near 20,000 men. This year when we made up this bill there was a shortage of about 5,000 men. We cut off over a million and a half as figured by the War Department, which is for the full number of men that can be put in. If the entire number were in the army it would require more than the amount that we have here by something like a million and a half dollars.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Well, this large increase is not on account of additional pay for length of service.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not at all.

Mr. DRISCOLL. That is appropriated for in the next paragraph.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; in the next paragraph.

Mr. DRISCOLL. So this increase is for straight pay.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. For straight pay.
Mr. DRISCOLL. Which is an average of $2 a month, I esti-Mr. DRISCOLL.

Mr. MANN. The total increase here is about 24 per cent.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. For enlisted men. Mr. DRISCOLL. You mean per man. Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think it is nearer 35 per cent.

Mr. MANN. I figured it out from the figures which the gentleman inserted in the RECORD yesterday, and it was a trifle

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That does not include the full amount of the enlistment. A full army would have more than we have appropriated.

Mr. MANN. No; but on the estimates that were made, which the gentleman put into the Record, the increase in pay on the average was a trifle less than 24 per cent.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Of what?

Mr. MANN. Of what it used to be before we passed the law

Mr. DRISCOLL. That is what I thought.

The increase of pay of enlisted men. Mr. MANN.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Here is an increase in the general sum of 55 per cent in one year.

Mr. MANN. That partly comes from the increase in pay of enlisted men and partly from increase of the army of something over 11,000 men, with nearly a $4,000,000 increase in the actual pay of that increased number of men.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman will find it on page

1639 of the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

ENGINEERS.

Four hundred and sixty-seven thousand five hundred and eighty dollars.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by putting in the words "corps of" before the word "engineers."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. In line 16, I move to insert the words "for pay of enlisted men."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Line 16, page 7, insert the words "for pay of enlisted men."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting information. I see that this appropriation for engineers is increased nearly a hundred per cent.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say to the gentleman, it is figured by the department exactly on the law that we passed last year for the increased pay and for the number of men that are now in the service.

Mr. MACON. You have an increased number and therefore increased pay, all based upon existing law?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. All based absolutely on the existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

Additional pay for length of service, $27,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask to amend, by putting the word "for" before the word "additional," in line 11, and the word "pay" after the word "additional."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

One hundred and forty-four sergeants, at $36 per month each, 2.208. $62,208. Twenty-four cooks, at $30 per month each, $8,640.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The committee did put the words in, but in some way they were left out. Insert, line 20, the words "for pay of enlisted men.'

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 20, insert "for pay of enlisted men."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. And in line 22 insert the word "for." The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the informal amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to say to the chairman of the committee that that error in printing goes through the bill. I do not see why we should continue this process of offering amendments at each place. I ask unanimous consent that where the error occurs it be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that it might not be possible for the Clerk to determine that matter.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think we had better call attention to them. I do not see any other way to do it.

The Clerk read as follows:

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

Two hundred post quartermaster-sergeants, at $45 per month each, $108,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert the words "pay of."

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon that paragraph. I want to ask the gentleman a question. I notice in the current law where you appropriate for 200 quartermaster-sergeants at $81,600. Here you appropriate for 200 post quartermaster-sergeants at $45 a month each.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Forty-five dollars a month was fixed as their pay. This is simply giving them what the law fixed.

Mr. MACON. When was the law passed that fixed that?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. In the appropriation bill last year. a rule they brought it in here, which made it an order, and it passed in the House at the rate fixed in this paragraph.

Mr. MACON. Then why was it not put in the last law? Mr. HULL of Iowa. Because the last bill was framed before, and we appropriated a lump sum to make up the difference after the pay was increased.

The Clerk read as follows:

Additional pay for length of service, $25,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I ask to have the word "for" put in before the word "additional."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman to make an explanation. What is this additional pay for?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Length of service.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. What is that for?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The law provides that they shall have so much pay for length of service. For instance, when an officer has been in five years he gets additional pay, and a quartermaster-sergeant gets additional pay for length of service. Some of these quartermaster-sergeants can go all the way to more than $60 a month.

The Clerk read as follows:

SUBSISTENCE DEPARTMENT.

Two hundred post commissary-sergeants, at $45 per month each, $108,000. Additional pay for length of service, $27,000.

Mr. HULL, of Iowa. I ask the same amendment; before the word "Two," insert the words "for pay of;" and on line 11, I ask to insert the word "for" before the word "additional."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendments offered by the gentleman from Iowa will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SIGNAL CORPS.

Thirty-six master signal electricians, at $900 each, $32,400.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask to insert "for pay of," in line 14, before the words "thirty-six."

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

One hundred and thirty-two first-class sergeants, at $540 each, $71,-280.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I ask the same amendment, that the words "for pay of" be inserted in line 16.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

One hundred and forty-four sergeants, at $36 per month each, $62,208.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. On line 19 I ask for the same amendment, that the words "for pay of" be inserted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Twenty-four cooks, at $30 per month each, $8,640.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I ask for the same amendment there, "for pay of."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all these amendments relative to the Signal Corps shall be considered as offered.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I ask to amend by inserting the words "for pay of" before the words "one hundred," in line 24; before the words "five hundred," on page 9, line 3; before the words "one hundred," in line 6.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to insert in the beginning of each of the three para-graphs named "For pay of." Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

One hundred and sixty-eight second-class privates, at $15 per month each, $30,240.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I move to strike out the words "second class," in line 6. Since this bill was prepared I have received word from the Pay Department that in the Signal Corps the designation now is "first-class privates" and "privates;" so that these words, heretofore carried properly, are not proper at this time. It should be simply 168 privates.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 6, page 9, strike out the words "second class."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Additional pay to 11 sergeants, serving as mess sergeants, at $6 per month, $792.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert the word "for" before the word "additional." It is merely a verbal amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 12, insert the word "for" before the word "additional."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Additional pay for length of service, $50,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I move to insert the word "for" before the word "additional," in line 12, page 9. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 12, insert "for" before "additional."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOSPITAL CORPS.

Nine hundred and forty-two thousand one hundred and sixty-eight dollars.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert the word "for" before the word "nine," in line 15.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 15, insert the word "for" before the word "nine."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Additional pay for length of service, $140,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert the word "for" before the word "additional" in line 17, page 9.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 17, insert the word "for" before the word "additional."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all. $66,500.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 4, the words "in all, $66,500."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 4, strike out "in all sixty-six thousand five hundred dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Medical Department: For pay of officers in the Medical Department, $1,300,000.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Here again is an enormous increase which, it seems to me, requires explanation. For the present year the appropriation is only $686,000. It is increased in this bill to $1,300,000, about twice as much as it was last year. Why is this?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We increased the Medical Corps last year by a very considerable number of officers. In addition to that, by the passage of that bill, we have done away with 200 contract surgeons for whom we have heretofore appropriated $400,000.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Three hundred and sixty thousand, was it not?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. About $400,000, as I remember it. Another large increase comes in the fact of the increased pay of the army. At the time the Medical Corps was increased it was understood that a certain number of the medical reserves would be assigned to duty as contract surgeons. When that bill was passed, the Medical Reserve Corps, if commissioned as first lieutenants, while serving would have drawn $1,500 a year each. With the increased pay they draw $2,000 a year, so that there is $500 increase for each one of those men. Contract surgeons were fixed at $1,800 a year flat pay. It was understood at the time we passed that reorganization of the Medical Corps that it would make a real saving in the Medical Corps; but the fact that Congress afterwards increased the pay of a first lieutenant from $1,500 a year flat pay to $2,000 a year flat pay made a difference of $500 in each one, practically, of these entire 200 contract surgeons.

The result of it is a large increase which comes from the Medical Reserve Corps taking the place of the contract surgeons. But the increase in this item is not so great, however, when you consider the $400,000 heretofore given to the contract surgeons. Mr. SLAYDEN. It is a calculation made strictly as required under the law?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; the increase was so startling to me that we took a good deal of time before we passed it. I do not believe under the law you can cut it down.

Mr. DRISCOLL. It does seem as if the increases in this bill are more than in any of the others.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; after the bill was passed last year Congress appropriated a lump sum of $7,000,000 by which they equalized, as far as they could, this pay. I think if the gentleman from New York will examine the naval bill he will find the same great increase of pay.

Mr. DRISCOLL. And as the revenues go down the expenses are going up.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Congress passed a bill fixing the pay, and the committee must give the amount required by the law.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the act approved November 3, 1893, authorizing the detail of officers of the army and navy to educational institutious, be amended so as to provide that retired officers, when so detailed, shall receive the full pay and allowances of their rank, except that officers above the grade of major shall receive the same pay and allowances as a retired major would receive under a like assignment.

Mr. DRISCOLL. To that I want to reserve a point of order. Mr. HULL of Iowa. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that when we provided for the detail of retired officers for various duties we left out the detailed instructors of colleges and universities.

Colleges, as a rule, want active officers. If they can use retired officers, it saves the demand for the increase of the number of officers. The University of Illinois has a retired officer who is entirely satisfactory to them, but he gets no extra pay or allowance, and they can not keep him unless some provision of this kind is made. In my judgment, it is a matter of economy, if we can provide for them in the general law, by which all colleges and schools can be provided with instructors from the retired list instead of taking them from the active list. It makes an additional expense of one-quarter pay and allowance of his grade, not going beyond the grade of major. It seems to me that it is a provision of very great benefit, and if allowed to remain in, I have an amendment that I want to offer that will make it clear that no one shall get the pay beyond that of a major.

Mr. DRISCOLL. How much does this increase the expense? Mr. HULL of Iowa. For one man? This case would not have been called to the attention of the committee if it had not been for the fact that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKinley] called the attention of the War Department to it, and the War Department called it to the attention of the committee. The very minute you take the man away from there they will insist on the detail of an active officer, who would get more pay than the one who is there now, if he is of higher rank, even if this provision is adopted.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is this law to apply only to this man?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; to all. The University of Illinois case brought it to our attention. This man can not stay there and perform the duties and get no addition to his pay.

Mr. MANN. I did not know that this item was specially directed to the University of Illinois, where I went to school. The man who is there now, I think, is a lieutenant-colonel.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; but a lieutenant-colonel's pay on the retired list is not equal to a major's pay on the active list.

Mr. MANN. This would give him the active major's pay, but Mr. MANN. This would give him th not an active lieutenant-colonel's pay?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No. Mr. DRISCOLL. Why not?

Mr. MANN. Because we limit it to the pay of a major on the active list.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There is a question whether the language fully covers that or not. If my amendment shall carry, I simply provide that the limitation of the pay of officers of the army above the rank of major shall be as provided for under the acts of March 2, 1905, and July 12, 1906; that those re-strictions shall remain in force. That language has been con-

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the amendment, although I do not see how language can be clearer than this language here in the bill. It says:

Except that officers above the grade of major shall receive the same pay and allowances as a retired major would receive under a like assignment.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That might be up to the point of a colonel being assigned; if a higher officer, he might get full pay. This amendment that I propose to offer cuts it off so that a brigadier-general could not be assigned on full pay; and if he should be assigned, he could not get full pay. It would be a limitation, as that language has already been construed. the amendment is agreed to, it will make it absolutely certain. Mr. MANN. All the state universities have these officers.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There are 100 of such details now authorized. Under the law there is authorization for a detail of 100 officers from the active list for this purpose. There are not that many detailed, and they are trying to work in all the retired officers they can so as to cover that hundred. It is a matter of economy to do it, and good administration.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I now move an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 14. line 19, strike out the word "officers" and insert the words "the limitations on the pay of officers of the army;" and in lines 19, 20, and 21, strike out all after the word "major," in line 19, and insert in lieu thereof "as provided in the acts of March 2, 1905, and June 12, 1906, shall remain in force," so that it shall read, "except that the limitations on the pay of officers of the army above the grade of major, as provided in the acts of March 2, 1905, and June 12, 1906, shall remain in force."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment. The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

RETIRED ENLISTED MEN.

For pay of the enlisted men of the army on the retired list, $2,000,000. Mr. DRISCOLL. I move to strike out the last word. Here is an appropriation almost double that of last year. I think that requires an explanation.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The law added three-quarters of $500 to the grade of each one of the retired officers.

Mr. DRISCOLL. These are enlisted men; it is at the bottom of page 14.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is simply enlisted men retired. We added to the pay of every one of them in the same proportion we did to the others. In other words, there is a law now on the statute books that provides the pay of retired men shall be based on three-quarters of the pay of the active force of the

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is it not a pretty large jump in one year? Mr. HULL of Iowa. The increase of the retired men and the increase of the pay together make up these figures.

Mr. ADAIR. Did not the gentleman from New York vote for that increase?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I do not think I did. I have consistently voted in almost every instance since I have been here, in army and navy appropriation bills, for moderate sums instead of for large ones.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say to my friend from New York that the estimates call for the pay of 3,100 enlisted men retired to the amount of $2,200,000; but the committee believe that the proportion of them that will die over those who will come in during the next year will justify a reduction of $200,000.

Mr. DRISCOLL. How much does that law the gentleman talks about increase this appropriation?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I can not give the figures exactly. If the gentleman will look back at the number of men who were on last year when we appropriated he will find out. All the other increase is made up in the increase in pay.

Mr. DRISCOLL. This particular appropriation bill is not very artistically drawn nor is it very clear, nor is the report very clear or comprehensive. It does not show anywhere the amount carried in last year's appropriation bill.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Would the gentleman think that the bill when it is reported to the House should carry also the amounts appropriated last year?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Most of them do. I do not mean the bill itself, but bills usually carry that as a sort of appendix.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We have that in the first print of the bill.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to know how much the army appropriation of the bill of last year was when it was brought into the House.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. One million one hundred and ninety-three thousand four hundred and forty-five dollars.

Mr. DRISCOLL. The whole bill?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; for this item. We appropriated last year in round numbers, I think, about ninety three or four million dollars. Subtract $7,000,000 out of that and you have substantially what was reported here. I will say to my friend that there is an increase here to this bill of pay, and different provisos we put in, of some four million more than we carried last year, and there is also a decrease of nearly six millions from the estimates as they were sent to us.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I withdraw the pro forma amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

For 100 nurses (female), $55,020.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 15, line 6, after the word "for," insert the words "pay of."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For 31 dental surgeons, $57,960. For contract surgeons, $36,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the same amendment, in line 14, page 15, after the word "for," insert "pay of."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

In line 14, page 15, after the word "for," insert "pay of."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. HULL of Iowa. Also the same amendment in line 16. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 16, page 15, after the word "for," insert the words "pay of,"

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. DRISCOLL. I suppose that is the $360,000 that the chairman of the committee spoke of a while ago as $400,000. that right?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; that is all that is left of the $400,000; that is all that is left of it. There are some places, I will say to the gentleman, such as arsenals, where the civilian employees get paid $75 a month. There are some places where there are only a few men, but they have to have medical attendance. There they pay a civilian physician, who attends to his own practice at the same time, and he is not subject to being ordered away from there at any time. This refers simply to such places where it would not pay to keep a regular medical officer.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to inform us what is the total additional expense caused by the law passed last year with reference to the medical bureau or Medical Department?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I should say the total additional expense would amount to something over $300,000 a year, off hand. It may be a little more or a little less.

Mr. MANN. Is that amount increase in pay or increase in number?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. In both. Some of it is increase in number-quite a considerable increase, as you will observe, in the Medical Corps; and then another large increase I refer to as a saving is the difference in pay between contract surgeons and a first lieutenant of the army at this time. At the time that bill was passed there was a saving in the pay of contract surgeons and a first lieutenant. A contract surgeon then got $1,800 a year, and a first lieutenant received $1,500 a year.

Mr. MANN. I think I called the attention of the gentleman to the fact at that time there was no saving, and the appropriations now prove the statement was correct.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If the law had been left as it was, there would have been a saving. Under the new law it is not.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman further; under that increase in pay for the Medical Department is there now any difficulty in securing surgeons for the army?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think not at all. I think there are more applicants than we have places for them.

Mr. KEIFER. A good deal.

Mr. MANN. They might turn them over to the Marine-Hospital Service because the Marine-Hospital Service now insists that it is not possible for them to obtain surgeons because they all go to the army, therefore we should increase the pay of the Marine-Hospital Service.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think I can supply them with a lot if they want them, as I am overrun with applications. I will be very glad to refer them to the Marine-Hospital Corps.

Mr. MANN. When their bill comes up in the House I hope the gentleman will give them that information, so if they do not get their bill passed they can get the surgeons.

The Clerk read as follows:

For commutation of quarters to commissioned officers on duty without troops at stations where there are no public quarters, $450,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what is the cause of the increase of $32,000 in this item?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Which item is that?

Mr. MADDEN. Commutation of quarters to commissioned officers on duty without troops at stations.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Simply the Quartermaster-General reports it is the best he can get this furniture for, and he made this estimate as being necessary. I will say to the gentleman this will not complete the equipment of the posts already provided by law with this heavy furniture.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it for additional quarters—
Mr. HULL of Iowa. I beg your pardon; I made a mistake;
this is based on the number of officers stationed at posts where there are no quarters provided by the Government and also on the fact that in the last year or so Congress increased commutation of quarters to officers.

Mr. MADDEN. To each officer; now he gets a larger commutation than heretofore?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes. Mr. MADDEN. How much larger? Mr. HULL of Iowa. Just one room. The captain gets 3 rooms, a major 4, a lieutenant-colonel 5, a colonel 6

Mr. MADDEN. Just what is the amount in dollars? Mr. HULL of Iowa. Twelve dollars a month to the room.

Mr. MADDEN. To each individual officer?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; owing to the grade, and rooms are given according to the rank. A second lieutenant, I think, gets $24 a month for commutation of quarters.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood the gentleman to say some time ago that there were no greater number of officers now, but that there were a less number of officers than there were a year ago.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That would not affect this item for this reason, that in case of war we probably would not have any officers, except the staff corps, here in Washington, because this provides for commutation where there are no public quarters. In case of war, they would then live in tents and get no commutation. They would be stationed in the field.

Mr. MADDEN. This appropriation, then, indicates that there are a large number of officers living in sections of the country where there is not anything of a military nature for them to do?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would not like to say that, Mr. Chair-For instance, take the gentleman's town of Chicago. That is a concrete example. They have there headquarters for a department. They have a general and his aids, a member of the General Staff, a representative of the Quartermaster, Commissary, and Medical departments, and all the different staff corps represented there, and the Government does not furnish any of those officers quarters.

The law provides a scale of what each one is entitled to as commutation. They give three rooms to a captain and four to a major, as I recollect, and so on up, increasing the number of rooms for each rank, and these rooms are commutated at the rate of $12 a month for each room. Of course this is only done in places where the Government does not furnish quarters.

Mr. MADDEN. The thing that struck me was that there seemed to be a larger number of men assigned to duty at places where there is no military force stationed than there have been heretofore.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is liable to change. You take any department headquarters

Mr. MADDEN. And I thought I would ask the chairman of the Military Committee to advise us why this excessive number of officers were so stationed.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will say to my friend that there were detailed a year ago 612 officers. There is now a detail of 734 officers, and the chances are that a large number of these get commutation of quarters.

Mr. MADDEN. Is there any reason why so large a number of officers of the army should be stationed at points where there is nothing to do?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not think that is a fair statement. We have sent 15 officers to the Isthmus of Panama-engineer officers. We have several over in Cuba, aiding the provisional government there. We have a few of them in the Philippine Islands, and many on recruiting and other necessary service.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman allow me? I understood him to say that a number of engineer officers had been sent to the Isthmus of Panama.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. And does the gentleman wish the House to understand that those who go to Panama are allowed a certain amount of money for quarters?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If the Government does not furnish them a house; yes.

Mr. MADDEN. But the Government does furnish them a house-a palace-such as is not to be found anywhere else in the universe.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Then they get no commutation. Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. All right.

harbor work?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. A number of officers detailed away from their troops, some 700, include the engineer officers?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. All officers, staff and line. Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. How many engineer officers are there?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not think I can give that, because they are all put in together, and I could not separate them.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The reason I ask the question is that I wanted to know if that includes the engineer

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The engineers on the river and harbor work are entirely different, and are paid out of a different fund. Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. And there are 734 officers in addition to the engineer officers now engaged in river and

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I understand that there are 188 engineer officers detailed for river and harbor work who are not in this list of 734 at all.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of exchange by disbursing officers of the Pay Department serving in foreign countries, $200.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "pay" and inserting the word "payment;" before the word "disbursing" insert the word "special;" strike out the word "officers" and insert "agents," so that it will read "For payment of exchange by special distributions agents." bursing agents."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, line 16, amend so as to read "For payment of exchange by special disbursing agents of the Pay Department."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is right.
The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be adopted.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For subsistence, mileage, and commutation of quarters to officers of the national guard attending service and garrison schools, $17,000.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting, after the word "quarters," in line 18, the words "including heat and light."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of line 18, "to include heat and light."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I will say, in regard to that, the quarters for the Regular Army officer does include heat and light. I have no objection to include the same things for the national guard also.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional pay to officers below the grade of major required to be mounted and who furnish their own mounts, 650 at $150 each per annum; 150 at $200 each per annum; $127,500.

Mr. MADDEN. I move to strike out the last word. This is a new item in the bill, is it not?
Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes, sir.
Mr. MADDEN. How does it happen that there is this additional charge?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The old law made a flat distinction between the pay of officers in the cavalry and officers in the infantry of $200 a year, on the theory that the officer of the cavalry or light artillery furnished his own mount, while, as a matter of fact, the Government furnished a large proportion of these mounts and gave these officers the extra pay without any reason whatever. Now, the law is changed so that the officers shall not have any extra pay for the mount unless he furnishes it himself. Where he really furnishes his own mount he gets $150 a year for one horse, and $200 a year where he is authorized to and really keeps two horses.

But under the new law the officers of the army all get the It strikes me, although I have not consulted with same pay. It strikes me, although I have not consulted with the committee in regard to the matter, that it could be amended by striking out the words "650, at $150 each per annum; 150, at $200 per annum," for the reason that the amount given is for the keeping of horses under the law. This language is simply a reenactment of the existing law. I think, if there is no objection, I will move to strike it out. Strike out lines 6 and 7 down to the word "annum."

The Clerk read as follows: same pay.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, lines 6, 7, and 8, strike out, down to and including the word "annum" in line 8, "650, at $150 each per annum; 150, at $200 each per annum."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This is simply a reenactment of law that is now on the statute books, and I therefore move to strike out these words.

The amendment was agreed to.

For amount required to make monthly payment to Jennie Carroll, widow of James Carroll, late major and surgeon, United States Army, as per act of Congress approved May 23, 1908 (Private act, No. 57), $1,500.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Now, Mr. Chairman, it has been suggested to me by the War Department, and I think it is a good suggestion, to strike out the words "(Private act, No. 57)" and insert "35 Statutes at Large, 155."

Mr. MANN. You do not need to insert anything at all; neither one is in place. It is only an act of this Congress.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is all, so far as the payment is concerned.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Why do you carry these two appropriations? Mr. MANN. It provides that they are to be placed upon the roll of the War Department.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes; under an act of Congress. So, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "(Private act, No. 57)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For amount required to make monthly payment to Mabel H. Lazear, widow of Jesse W. Lazear, late acting assistant surgeon, United States Army, as per act of Congress approved May 23, 1908 (Private act No. 57), $1,500.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the same amendment, in line 19, page 18, to strike out "private act No. 57."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, line 19, strike out "private act No. 57."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Porto Rico Provisional Regiment of Infantry, composed of two battalions of four companies each.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "provisional." The law now makes this a regiment of eight companies, and not a provisional regiment.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If the gentleman from Iowa will permit me, the legal title of that regiment now, according to public act 142, is the Porto Rico Regiment of Infantry of the United States Army. I move to insert the words "of the United States Army" in line 21, page 18, and to strike out the word "provisional."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If the gentleman wishes it, I will not object. It occurs to me that if you strike out the word "provisional" it will cover that.

It all refers to the United States Army. Mr. MANN.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am offering this amendment at the suggestion of the Delegate from Porto Rico [Mr. LARRINAGA], who is jealous of the only thing for Porto Rico in the bill. He wanted the title put in to conform to the law.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, line 21, strike out the word "provisional" and insert after "Infantry" the words "of the United States Army."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of officers of the line, $63,400. Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "of the line."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, line 23, strike out "of the line."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

PHILIPPINE SCOUTS.

Pay of officers of the line: Fifty captains, $120,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I move to strike out the words "officers

Mr. SABATH. I desire to ask the gentleman a question about the Philippine Scouts. What do we understand by 50 captains of the Philippine Scouts? Are they Filipinos?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not necessarily.

Mr. KEIFER. Some of them.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Last year we passed an act relating to this subject. Before that the law provided for the detail of 50 first lieutenants of the Regular Army, to have the rank of captain while serving in the Philippine Scouts. We have changed that by providing for 50 captains of Philippine Scouts. They We have changed are taken from men who have served as lieutenants. They are taken from the Filipinos themselves, if they can pass the examination; but they start in as second lieutenants, whether Filipinos or Americans.

Mr. SABATH. Are they independent of the Regular Army that we have now in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. HULL. No; they are a part of it, but a separate organization and officered differently than the Regular Army. The field officers of the scouts are all detailed. They are either captains or majors of the Regular Army.

Mr. SABATH. What is our army to-day in the Philippine

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think about 12,000 Americans and about 5,000 Philippine Scouts in round numbers. It will not vary much from that one way or the other. My friend from Texas [Mr. Slayden] and my friend from New Jersey [Mr. Parker] and the other members of the Military Committee can correct me if I am mistaken, because I do not claim to give the number exactly.

Mr. SABATH. We have about 17,000 men there now?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. At an expense of how much?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Whatever it costs to keep them there under the law.

Mr. SABATH. Can the gentleman inform me what the cost is?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman can figure it under the law just as readily as I can.

Mr. SABATH. I do not know how many officers we have there.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If you will add up the amounts that we have given here, you will substantially get at it.

Mr. SABATH. These amounts as given here add up $1,000,000.

That is extra, is it not?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No; it is not extra; because if we did not have these men there, we would have to send others from the Regular Army.

Mr. DRISCOLL. It only applies to the officers.

Mr. SABATH. It applies to the officers and men and amounts to $989,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Oh, no; it does not.

Mr. MANN. That includes privates. Mr. HULL of Iowa. Privates are estimated for on a different price, the amount fixed for the Regular Army; this is fixed by the War Department. This estimate is made on the number of men we have at the price fixed by the department. You will have to add to this somewhat for field officers. The field officers are carried on the regular force of the army.

Mr. SABATH. How long will it be necessary to keep an army

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman is as well able to guess on that as I am. We will keep them there as long as is neces-

Mr. SABATH. Rather expensive, is it not?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman can figure on that as well as I can. It is one of the obligations resting on this Government, and my observation is the Government will not hesi-tate to carry out all those obligations as long as it is demanded by humanity, or the best interest of our people.

Mr. SABATH. Rather expensive, though.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think not; but, however, that has nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. SABATH. We are appropriating for this service all these different amounts, and I would like to know what benefit we get from them.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman is as competent to answer that as I am.

Mr. SABATH. No; I have not had as much experience as the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Some gentlemen will say that there is no benefit, and others will say that there is much benefit. man must make up his mind for himself and govern himself accordingly. It is the law, and we are appropriating under the

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. Mr. HULL of Iowa. Now, I ask the Clerk to read the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 11, page 19, strike out the words "of the line" and insert before the word "fifty" the word "for."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fifty-eight first lieutenants, $116,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting, before the word "fifty," in line 13, page 19, the word "for."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fifty-eight second lieutenants, $98,600.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert in line 15, page 19, before the word "fifty," the word "for."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Additional for length of service, $80,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting before the word "additional," in line 22, page 19, the word "for."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. And after the word "additional," in line 22, page 19, I move to insert the word "pay."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Noncommissioned officers and privates, 50 companies, $587,899.20.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I offer the following amendment, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of line 23 and insert "for pay of enlisted men."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional pay for reenlisted service, $50,000.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Now, I want to offer an amendment, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend line 1, page 20, so as to read, "for additional pay for additional length of service."

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. HULL of Iowa. Now, I want to amend by inserting that which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 2, insert "all the money hereinbefore appropriated except the appropriation for mileage of officers, contract surgeons when authorized by law, for pay of the army, and miscellaneous, shall be disbursed or accounted for by officers of the pay department of the army, and for that purpose shall constitute one fund."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Encampment and maneuvers, organized militia: For paying the expenses of the organized militia of any State, Territory, or of the District of Columbia, which may be authorized by the Secretary of War to participate in such encampments as may be established for the field instruction of the troops of the Regular Army, as provided by sections 15 and 21 of the act of January 21, 1903, entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, and for other purposes," to be immediately available and to remain available until the end of the fiscal year 1911, $425,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on that I reserve the point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be such a universal desire to stop, and the House having had such a very strenuous week of it, I will move that the committee do now

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PERKINS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 26915, the army appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE. By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. NICHOLLS for one week, on account of important business.

MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to file at this time the report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on the bill (H. R. 18794) to promote the efficiency of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, and to ask unanimous consent that the minority may have up to and including Wednesday next within which to file their views.

The SPEAKER. The bill would ordinarily go through the basket, but the gentleman desires to report the bill, with the request that the minority have until and including Wednesday next within which to file their views. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

The SPEAKER designated Representative Allen to act as Speaker pro tempore to-morrow, Sunday, January 31, 1909.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, on motion of Mr. Hull of Iowa (at 4 o'clock and 45, minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, January 31, 1909.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Hon. Amos L. Allen, Representative from Maine.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our God and our Father, whose name is sacred to the heart of every true man and the inspiration of every noble deed, help us to realize that the highest service we can render to Thee is willing and unselfish devotion to the welfare of our fellow-men, which reflects itself on the pages of history, sacred and profane, in song and story, in monuments of bronze and granite.

We are here to-day in memory of one who served his State and Nation with patriotic fidelity and devotion and has left behind him a record worthy of emulation.

Inspire us with courage, zeal, and fidelity, that we may be worthy and pass on to the reward of those who, true to themselves, reflect in thought, word, and deed the character of their Maker.

Comfort, we pray Thee, his friends, colleagues, and those near and dear to him by the bonds of kinship with the blessed hope of the immortality of the soul, and Thine be the praise forever, in Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE HON. LLEWELLYN POWERS, OF MAINE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the order for the day.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. Guernsey, by unanimous consent, "Ordered, That there be a session of the House at 12 m. Sunday, January 31, for the delivery of eulogies on the life, character, and public services of the Hon. Llewellyn Powers, late a Member of this House from Maine."

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Speaker, I send the following resolutions to the desk and ask to have them read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 530.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. LLEWELLYN POWERS, late a Member of this House from the State of Maine.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of the memorial exercises of the day, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Speaker, on the 28th day of July last, an honored Member of this body, a distinguished citizen and former governor of the State of Maine, passed from the activities of this world after an illness of several months.

He was, I believe, more widely and intimately known to the people of Maine, whom he has of late represented in the Congress of the United States, than any man who has appeared in public life in our State during the past forty years—the Hon. Liewellyn Powers, of Houlton, Me.

It becomes my solemn duty as the successor to Mr. Powers in Congress from the Fourth Congressional District of Maine to call attention to some of the characteristics and achievements of his long and active career. I first became intimately acquainted with him when he became governor of our State, and I soon recognized that he was a farsighted man, of unusual tact, and possessed unfailing judgment of men and public affairs.

LLEWELLYN POWERS was born in Pittsfield, Somerset County, Me., in 1836, the eldest of ten children, and of the eight boys six have attained distinction in the legal profession, and when LLEWELLYN Powers was in active practice he was regarded as one of the best-equipped attorneys of the Maine bar.

His parents were of sturdy New England stock, several ancestors being in the Revolutionary war. He grew up in his native town, and fitted for college in its common schools and Maine academies, and spent two years at Colby College, but, desiring to fit himself for the legal profession, he left at the end of two years and entered Albany Law School, where he graduated. He was not forgotten by his alma mater, however, and in later years received honorary degrees from Colby College.

In 1860 he returned to Maine and was admitted to the bar, and in 1861 began at Houlton to practice his chosen profession, which he continued for nearly forty years. His legal ability was early recognized, and he soon had a large and growing practice, in addition to which he took up the duties of a prosecuting officer, being elected as attorney for the State in his county, which office he held for three terms.

In 1873 he was sent to the state legislature, serving in that body three terms, and upon leaving there was elected to the Forty-fifth Congress at the same election with Eugene Hale and WILLIAM P. FRYE, who have so long and honorably represented the Commonwealth in the Senate.

At the end of his term of office he retired to private life and devoted his time and attention to his legal and business interests, except one term in the Maine legislature.

In 1892 he was again sent to the state legislature, and served for three successive terms, being unanimously chosen speaker the last term; and in 1896 was nominated and elected governor of Maine, receiving the largest plurality vote ever cast for a gubernatorial candidate in Maine. He was chosen a second time as governor.

During his legislative service in the Maine house he reported from an evenly divided judiciary committee, of which he was chairman, a bill abolishing capital punishment, and was successful in having the measure become a law. Many other pieces of important legislation in the interest of the State might be mentioned, but I will not weary you with their recital.

His administration as governor was one of the best that has ever been given the State of Maine. He gave to the office the same careful oversight that marked his private business, and on one occasion during the early part of the Spanish-American war, when there was strong pressure from all over the State to call an extra session of the legislature to appropriate money for the equipment of men and purchase supplies for the expected volunteer regiment, he was opposed to it on account of the large and needless expense to the State, and acting in accord with the judgment of other conservative business men of his party refused to call the extra session, but when funds were necessary he advanced the large sum of money required, and his patriotic and public-spirited action was approved by the next legislature, which refunded the money he had advanced from his private purse.

Soon after his retirement from the governor's chair he was chosen to fill out the unexpired term of the Fifty-seventh Congress occasioned by the death of Congressman Boutelle, in 1901, and was returned to Congress with each succeeding election, but he was obliged to withdraw from the renomination to the Sixtyfirst Congress, which had been tendered him by acclamation by the Republican party in his district, on account of his continued ill health.

His career in the National House of Representatives has been marked by conservatism and sound business judgment in all matters in which he took part, and on account of his long experience in financial and legal matters he was always listened to with much attention and interest on pending questions relating to banking and currency and problems concerning state-hood for the Territories, and his fairness and courtesy in debate won him many friends on both sides of this Chamber.

He was a firm believer and advocate of a revenue system which would afford protection to American industries and workingmen and give American manufacturers the preference in our domestic markets.

He never posed as an orator, yet he was classed as a very effective speaker, and, with but one or two exceptions, no political speaker of Maine ever addressed a greater number of audiences during the campaigns. It seemed to be a part of his life to meet and mix with men and discuss the affairs of State and Nation, and for more than thirty years he took part in every political campaign in Maine, and sometimes lent his voice to campaigns in neighboring States.

In his private life he was always regarded as the friend of the poor man, and many a prosperous citizen of the State has received his start from the kindly advice and financial assistance which it was their good fortune to receive from him, and it is said he never spurned one of his less fortunate friends of younger days when they came to him for aid.

He was a man of great tact and shrewdness and always preferred to conciliate rather than to antagonize.

He was a generous giver to charitable and benevolent objects, and it is said his donations to church organizations extended to almost every church which has been dedicated in the last twenty years in eastern Maine.

But, Mr. Speaker, words of eulogy can not add to or detract from the fame of this or any man; so having given a brief outline of the life and affairs of him who brought honor to his native State and district and whose service in this House was marked by dignity and wisdom, who was a kind and loving husband and father, I will close, leaving it to others to portray his greatness in more eulogistic terms.

Mr. BURLEIGH. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, who so ably represents upon this floor the district formerly represented by our deceased friend, has so fully covered the salient points in his career that I may well confine myself to a personal and heartfelt tribute growing out of the cherished memories of an acquaintance and friendship extending over a period of more than forty years.

I first made the acquaintance of LLEWELLYN POWERS in 1861, when, a year after his graduation from the Albany University Law School, he came to Houlton, the shire town of the great county of Aroostook, to enter upon the practice of his profes-I was living at the time in an adjoining town, where I was born. Very well do I recall the appearance of Mr. Powers at that time, and the rapidity with which he impressed his strong and masterful personality upon the community. Young, affable, of splendid physique, alert of body and of mind, an indefatigable worker, he brought to his labors rare qualities of leadership and the elements that win success in the practice of the law. He combined with marked powers of con-centration a wonderful capacity for close and sustained application. He not only had a comprehensive and thorough grasp of legal principles, but he possessed, moreover, the ability to detect at once the weak point in the case of opposing counsel. and the aggressive force to make the most of it. Like Ulysses of old, he was "full of resources." Few men in the history of the Maine bar have equaled him in the ability to so marshal the strong points in his case as to make them carry conviction to the minds of a jury.

But it was not alone in his profession, where he speedily built up a large and lucrative practice, that he attained dis-Born on a pioneer farm, the eldest of a large family, he was forced from boyhood to be the architect of his own fortunes, and yet he did not enter into the competitions of life devoid of capital. He was peculiarly rich in the qualities that command success, in the full vigor of a splendid physical and intellectual strength, in abounding health, in self-confidence to meet and conquer the difficulties that confronted him, and in a personal magnetism that speedily drew about him a wide circle of devoted and admiring friends. There was in the make-up of Mr. Powers no trace of snobbery or affectation. He was all his life in close and sympathetic touch with the plain people. Warm-hearted, cordial, and genuine in his dealings with those about him he constantly extended the circle of his friendships. It was a real pleasure for him to meet old acquaintances and make new ones. His instincts were social. He loved the companionship of his fellow-men, and few there were who could resist the rare charm of his personality. As he came and went he had a cordial word of greeting for everyone he met. He looked out upon life with the spirit of an optimist, and from the depths of his own frank and generous nature radiated an atmosphere of hope and cheer upon those about him.

His own pioneer training stood him in good stead and specially fitted him for leadership in the community with which he had cast his lot. The great county of Aroostook of that day was only in the early stages of the splendid development that has since been achieved there. It was then a pioneer commu-nity, and it is doubtful if its own citizens had more than a vague conception of its vast resources still waiting the hand of development. A large part of its splendid domain, now covered with rich and fertile farms, was then a virgin forest. All over it men were engaged in the slow, laborious work of reclaiming the wilderness to the uses of husbandry. Among the hardy, industrious people of this community Mr. Powers soon won the distinction of admitted leadership, both at the bar and in its political life. He served for six years, with notable success, as county attorney, and for four years as collector of customs, declining a tendered reappointment. Then followed a membership in the Maine house of representatives for three consecutive sessions, during which he took a conspicuous part in its proceedings and made a name for himself all over the State. he was elected Representative to Congress from the Fourth Maine District and served out his term with a degree of distinction not often vouchsafed to new Members. He was renominated by acclamation in 1878, but was defeated, in common with other Republican candidates, by the so-called "Greenback wave' that rolled over the State in the election of that year.

In 1883 Mr. Powers again represented his home town in the State legislature, following which he was for a number of years out of personal politics, devoting his time and energies to the practice of his profession and the management of his large and growing timber-land interests.

In 1892, yielding to the earnest solicitation of his friends, he was once more elected to the state house of representatives, where he speedily became recognized as the Republican leader. He was returned to the house in 1895, and was unanimously chosen as its speaker, in which position he further strengthened his strong hold upon the people of his State.

In the summer of 1896 he was nominated for governor of Maine by acclamation, and elected the following September by a record-breaking majority.

It was my privilege to be closely associated with him in his canvass for the gubernatorial nomination, which terminated so favorably to him, and to see him in new lights. What particularly impressed me at that time was his large and tolerant spirit and his willingness to overlook and forget present and past differences. He seemed to be singularly incapable of harboring personal or political animosities. He looked calmly out upon the situation in a broad and generous way, without jealousies and without recrimination. What impressed his friends at all times was the attitude of absolute fairness which he maintained toward those who at first were not favorably disposed to his candidacy. It was this spirit, I know, which ultimately made it possible for him to secure without opposition the high honor he sought. His record during the two terms he served as governor of Maine was a notable one. He brought to the many and exacting duties of the office the same calm judgment, firm purpose, and clear grasp of affairs that had won him eminence in other walks of life. The result was a record in administration in the highest degree creditable to himself and to his State.

I shall not undertake to enlarge upon his distinguished career as a Member of this House. Others who will speak here to-day, and who were more closely associated with him in its work, are far better qualified to do that. In paying this small tribute to my late colleague and friend of many years, I am impressed anew with a sense of the uncertainty of life. Four of the distinguished Members of this House from the State of Maine with whom it has been my privilege to serve on this floor have laid down the burdens of life and crossed that mysterious border line that separates time from eternity. Truly-

Death rides on every passing breeze, He lurks in every flower.

In the death of LLEWELLYN POWERS his State and his country lost a man of large mold, who had in a marked degree the high qualities that win success both in private and in public life. Genial, tactful, untiring, he stood always in the open, having in full measure, at all times and in all places, the courage of his convictions. He was called to high places of power and responsibility in the public service, and out of the fullness of his strength was able to discharge every duty that devolved upon him with signal ability and success. He performed well his part in the busy world of affairs. His work is ended. He is at rest. His death is sincerely mourned by a host of warm friends and admirers, who watched with interest his rise to influence in his State and in the Nation, and who felt a deep and an abiding pride in his distinguished career.

Leaves have their time to fall, And flowers to wither at the north-wind's breath, And stars to set; but all, Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O Death!

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rarely ever engage in a memorial service. I have made it a rule of my life to tell my friend of his golden characteristics while he lives. That may, as intended, give him some joy. It does me. I think that that is a much better rule than to wait until after he is dead and gone. But after his demise it is well to speak of his strong and valuable characteristics, that we as individuals, as a people, and as a Republic may profit by it. If the deceased had any faults, I never knew them.

I knew Governor Powers intimately from the time he appeared as a Member of the Fifty-seventh Congress. His striking personality first attracted my attention. He was a man of large frame, large head, covered with a heavy shock of hair, crowning a thoughtful and expressive face. He showed every appearance of a delightful, social, generous, and thoughtful man. I knew him more intimately socially than I did in the House. I was thrown with him very frequently, almost daily, after the House adjourned.

He was very resourceful in conversation and in debate. With a wonderful fund of information upon almost every subject, he was at ease with anyone anywhere. He was gifted in the knowledge of statecraft. His life was spent mostly as a public servant, and happy have been the results of his splendid stewardship. In these respects he was a very remarkable man.

You have but to recall the places of trust that he so well filled amongst his own people and in the Nation to be thoroughly convinced that he must have been a most useful man in every sphere of life.

He was born in 1836. He was one of 10 children. 8 boys, 6 of whom, we are informed, achieved distinction. know that he did. I was talking with him one evening about the able supreme court that the State of Maine nearly always had, and alluded to some particular opinion, which, as I remember, I had used in a debate in Congress, and asked him if he knew the Judge Powers of that court who wrote the opinion, and in a modest way, but with a loyal pride, with sunshine beaming in his face, he told me he was his brother.

If he had a weakness, it was his extreme modesty at all times. He was educated in the common schools, in the academies, and attended a university, which afterwards honored him. He then graduated in law from the Albany Law School, and came to the bar in 1860. He soon demonstrated his legal ability and his affability, and won the people, for in a short while they elected him as attorney for the State in his county. He was reelected, serving three terms, from 1864 to 1871. He was then appointed customs officer and served four years. In the trying year of 1873 he was elected to the legislature. He was reelected, serving three terms. He was then elected to the Forty-fifth Congress, thirty years ago. He served in the House one term, and retired to take up his private affairs. He again served in the legislature, a rather unusual thing to do, Mr. Speaker, after serving in Congress; but that showed that he loved his neighbors, and wanted to build up his State.

Again, in 1802, he was sent to the legislature. He served three terms. He was unanimously elected speaker the last Thus honors were heaped upon him. Then he was elected governor in the noted campaign of 1896. He was reelected governor, and must have made—and I am informed did make—one of the best executives that great State ever had, and Maine has always been noted for her great public servants, many of whom I have personally known, of whom we frequently speak and from whom we often quote. I shall not stop to recite their names.

When the Spanish war began, I believe he was governor; and the question of equipping, so as to send promptly to the front, the patriotic volunteers of Maine was a question of dollars and cents, with the legislature not in session and no public funds available.

Being a man of large means, which he had accumulated by the sweat of his own face; being patriotic, as I think he always was, he opened his own purse and promptly equipped the troops. The legislature, appreciating his patriotic act, promptly in-dorsed his public-spirited act by refunding the money.

He was next elected to the Fifty-seventh Congress, succeeding Mr. Boutelle, a distinguished Member of this body for many years. He was elected to the Fifty-eighth, the Fifty-ninth, and the Sixtieth Congresses, declined a renomination, and died in July, 1908. I personally know that he did not wish to come back even to the Sixtieth Congress, but he said to me:

"If my people want me to serve them, I shall obey their will."

We often "paired," but he never broke faith, through pressure, to change the pair in a trying struggle and vote. "They pressed me mightily, my boy, but I kept my word with you."

How herole, how honorable that

How heroic, how honorable, that.

Here is about thirty-seven years of actual, official service, and I have not seen, even in the partisan press, at any time, a single uncomplimentary criticism of any of his public acts.

That, Mr. Speaker, speaks well of the man as a man and of his high sense of duty, thoroughly believing, as he did, that a public office is a trust," as the Supreme Court of the United States said many years ago.

He was a man of deep convictions. He did his own thinking and he decided for himself, always having a keen sense of jus-tice and feeling for the masses. I remember an instance here on the floor of this House, showing the strength of the man's character and his power to discriminate; and for the purpose of showing you his keen sense of justice and "where his heart was," I shall quote his words from the RECORD.

There was a bill pending in this House for reimbursing persons for customs duties paid under a rather lax protest on some building material-steel products.

His questions were serious and searching:
